PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

Mr. CURTIS presented a petition of sundry citizens of the State of Kansas, praying for the passage of the so-called Brookhart bill, being Senate bill 1667, relative to the distribution of motion-picture films in the various motion-picture zones of the country, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. DENEEN presented a memorial of members of the medical staff of the St. Francis Hospital, Evanston, Ill., remonstrating against the proposed increase in the narcotic tax from $1 to $3 in connection with the administration of the Harrison narcotic law, and favoring the adoption of the so-called Robinson amendment to pending tax legislation relative to taxes in connection with attendance upon professional meetings, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BLAINE presented resolutions adopted by the County Board of Lafayette County, Wis., favoring the passage of legislation increasing the import duties on Swiss, brick, and limburger cheese about 50 per cent, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the Ashland and Marathon County Boards of Supervisors, Wisconsin, favoring the raising of the tariff on cheese high enough so that the American farmer can compete with the Canadian farmer, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. WATERMAN presented a letter in the nature of a petition signed by representatives of various temperance organizations, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senator CHARLES W. WATERMAN,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

In re: S. 2901.

DEAR SENATOR WATERMAN: There is pending on the Senate Calendar S. 2901, introduced by Senator JONES, of Washington, to increase the maximum penalties that may be imposed in criminal prosecutions for the five offenses defined by the eighteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States, namely, the manufacture, transportation, sale, importation, and exportation of intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes.

Extended hearings have been held. The Assistant Attorney General in charge of prohibition enforcement, Mrs. Mabel Walker Willebrandt, and the Commissioner of Prohibition, Dr. J. M. Doran, called before the committee, testified to the great need for increased penalties in this class of offenses, as shown by experience. The National Legislative Conference, comprising 31 temperance organizations of the country, has repeatedly gone on record in favor of legislation for increased penalties in prohibition cases, and at its last annual session in December in Washington voted unanimously to urge its constituent bodies to support legislation for increased maximum penalties for these major offenses. This principle is found in S. 2901. The reasons for the passage of the bill are well stated in the attached report of the Senate Judiciary Committee (No. 768) recommending its passage.

We earnestly request you to give consideration to this measure as thus reported by the Senate committee and to use your influence to secure a vote upon it and its passage at this session of Congress. This support will be deeply appreciated. Our views are stated in the memorandum filed with the subcommittee.

Respectfully submitted.

THE AMERICAN LEGION, DEPARTMENT OF COLORADO,
April 12, 1928.

Senator CHARLES W. WATERMAN,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. WATERMAN: As executive committeeman for the second district, Department of Colorado, American Legion, I urge upon you the necessity of supporting the universal draft law supported by the American Legion. I know you have always been interested in the maintenance of permanent peace and will do all that is possible to accomplish this end. I have confidence you will agree with the Legion that the most powerful factor which Congress can contribute to this end is the passage of the universal draft law.

I hope in the giving and taking necessary in legislative halls to pass good laws that the universal draft bill will not be the one sacrificed in the trading. This is not a law for the benefit of members of the American Legion only and those who took part in the World War, but is a bill that is intended to contribute to the good of the Nation and of the world, and must be met fair and square.

Thanking you for past courtesies, I am,

Very truly yours,

SIDNEY P. GODSMAN,
Executive Committeeman, Second District.

Resolution

Whereas what is known as the universal draft bill, conceived, written, and sponsored by the American Legion, is now before the National Legislature and has reached a point where some action can be anticipated in the near future by that body thereon; and

Whereas it is our feeling that the possibilities of America again becoming involved in warfare will be minimized by the enactment of the above-mentioned bill, and her strength in the event of war will be placed thereby at the maximum, and that the future safety of our Nation therefore will be immeasurably enhanced; and

Whereas we can find no logical reason why any of our National Legislators should refuse to lend his active cooperation to an act which would in the event of war dedicate all of our man power and material resources to its prosecution on as nearly an equitable basis as possible, irrespective of the party or political affiliations of such legislators: Therefore be it, and it is hereby,

Resolved by Pueblo Post, No. 2, of the American Legion, Department of Colorado, That we most respectfully request of our Representatives in Congress and of our Senators that each of them give to the universal draft bill his entire and whole-hearted support and approval, and that if such support can not be given, the reasons therefor be made public through the press; be it, and it is hereby further

Resolved, That a copy of the above resolution be mailed to the Hon. LAWRENCE C. PHIPPS, Hon. CHARLES W. WATERMAN, United States Senators, and to the Hon. GUY U. HARDY, Member of Congress from the third congressional district of the State of Colorado, and to the public press.

S. Res. 158. Resolution relative to the occupation of Haiti by the military forces of the United States.

INCOME TAX OF CERTAIN MUNICIPAL EMPLOYEES

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I present, as bearing upon the pending revenue measure, a resolution of the Detroit Municipal Employees Club, unanimously adopted at its regular meeting. I want to say by way of explanation that the resolution is in protest against a discrimination resulting, first, from the ruling of the Internal Revenue Bureau, which undertakes to say that certain classes of municipal employees shall be exempt and certain classes shall not, and a discrimination, secondly, resulting from the failure of the pending measure to correct this situation. The situation affects not only Detroit, but every city, town, and village in the United States with a municipal waterworks or a municipal street railway. I have an amendment pending to cure the situation which will be brought later to the attention of the Senate. At the moment I ask that the resolution be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The resolution is as follows:

The following resolution was unanimously adopted by the Detroit Municipal Employees Club (Inc.), at its regular meeting held April 20, 1928:

"Whereas by ruling of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, dated February 17, 1928, orders were issued directing internal-revenue collectors in the various districts of the Nation to levy an income tax on employees employed in the municipal utilities throughout the country; and

"Whereas the internal-revenue collector for the district of Detroit has so notified the department of water supply and the department of street railways that its employees are liable for income tax for the years 1925, 1926, and 1927, together with accrued interest; and

"Whereas the said collector of internal revenue for the district of Detroit has directed the board of water commissioners and the board of street railway commissioners to file with him a list of employees subject to income tax, under the laws governing the income-tax returns and payments for the years 1925, 1926, and 1927; and

"Whereas this ruling only affects employees of municipal utilities; and

"Whereas these employees must have their salaries appropriated by the executive and legislative officers of the city of Detroit in a similar manner as other city employees; and

"Whereas this levying of the tax appears to be a great discrimination against one set of city employees: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That the Detroit Municipal Employees Club (Inc.), in formal session assembled, being aroused by the unjust decision and action of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, through its proper officers directs that a communication be sent to the Senators and Representatives of the State of Michigan, in Congress assembled, protesting against this injustice and discrimination, and requesting the aid and assistance of these honorable Members of the Senate and House of Representatives to obtain relief for the employees of the board of water commissioners and the department of street railways of the city of Detroit."

MUSCLE SHOALS

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I ask leave to have printed in the RECORD an editorial reprinted from the May 5 issue of the New England Homestead, one from the Pennsylvania Farmer, together with a letter from G. M. Knebel, vice president and general manager of the Texas State Manufacturers Association, and an editorial from the Atlanta (Ga.) Constitution of May 10, relative to pending Muscle Shoals legislation.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[Editorial reprinted from May 5 issue of New England Homestead, Springfield, Mass.]

GIVE FERTILIZER INDUSTRY A CHANCE

The National Fertilizer Association is dead right in registering vigorous protest to the House Military Committee reporting out the amendment it has on the Norris Muscle Shoals resolution. The measure as passed by the Senate has been completely changed, retaining only the enabling and enacting clauses. It amounts to eliminating a dog's tail by making the cut immediately back of the ears. The action of the Military Committee, if sustained, puts the Government into the ferilizer business with a vengeance. It would violate that cardinal American principle of encouraging individual initiative rather than leaning upon the Government to do for citizens what they can best do for themselves, and do it more efficiently and economically.

There has been a lot of loose talk about getting cheap fertilizers. Statistics indicate that the industry to-day is giving farmers the best fertilizers they ever used at the lowest relative price they ever paid. As compared to pre-war levels the prices on all commodities are 46 per cent higher, building material 58 per cent, farm labor costs 61 per cent, nonagricultural commodities 51 per cent, farm machinery 34 per cent, cotton and cottonseed meal 47 per cent, wheat 38 per cent, tobacco 27 per cent, potatoes 62 per cent, all farm products 37 per cent, and fertilizers only 9 per cent higher.

Clearly, here is an industry that has not been profiteering nor exploiting the farmer. Indeed, the truth is that the fertilizer industry since the depression began in 1920, has lost over $200,000,000. Some of the biggest concerns have taken a terrible licking. Congress is concerned about farm relief, yet here is a proposal to heavily penalize an industry whose prices relatively are below those of farm products. It is both inconsistent and wrong for Uncle Sam with Government funds to thus discriminate. Farmers do not ask it. Their motto is to live and let live.

We do not blame Charles J. Brand, of the fertilizer association, for seeing red. He has submitted to Congressmen a brief which is most convincing and ought to carry conviction. He gives eight sound reasons why the amendment by the Military Committee should not receive approval. This committee substitute does not even attempt to utilize the Muscle Shoals as a laboratory to aid in the development of a nitrogen industry in this country, but says, "for the purpose of producing and selling nitrogen and nitrogen products." It provides a substantial subsidy in that fertilizer would be made and sold at prices based only on "charges properly attributable to the production, marketing, and distribution." No rate of interest is considered for the huge investment, and if profits can be made by sale of electric power these would be used to lower fertilizer costs. Where would the industry as a whole get off against this rank discrimination?

Then it is further provided that for five years as much as 15 per cent of the fertilizer can be given away through "county agents, agricultural colleges, or otherwise." Sales would be for cash only, which would result in the Government getting the cream of the business. The already weakened fertilizer industry would have to accommodate those farmers who buy on credit. That would mean higher prices to cover additional risks and would be levied upon farmers least able to pay more.

Those are the points, among others, that are enlarged upon by Mr. Brand. He properly objects to there having been no public hearing upon this sweeping substitute measure. Are our Congressmen losing all sense of proportions and justice? Have they forgotton American traditions? Taxpayers can not help wondering when they see so much bungling over Muscle Shoals, farm relief, and flood control.

[From the Pennsylvania Farmer of May 5, 1928]

THE LATEST MUSCLE SHOALS BILL—SHALL THE GOVERNMENT ENTER PRODUCTIVE BUSINESS IN COMPETITION WITH PRIVATE ENTERPRISE, THUS SETTING A DANGEROUS PRECEDENT?

No postwar question has been longer before the Nation for settlement and none has produced more foolish or more selfish plans for solution than the Muscle Shoals power plant. Bills have been prepared running the gamut from straightout water-power grabs to the most communistic proposals to put the Government into the manufacturing business. The bill now before Congress is of the latter type.

To state it briefly, the present bill proposes that the Government shall provide $10,000,000 as working capital to a Muscle Shoals corporation (to be formed), which corporation shall have full use and control of the Muscle Shoals power plant for the purpose of manufacturing fertilizers, said products to be sold at cost, f. o. b. Muscle Shoals, for spot cash. In addition the bill gives the corporation the right to sell surplus power, the proceeds therefrom to be applied to reducing the cost of manufacturing fertilizers. The bill further provides that new sources of rock phosphates may be acquired and operated, in spite of the fact that the production of superphosphates is already much greater than the demand.

Farmers and others have strenuously opposed the "grab" bills which have been offered in the past by which private companies have endeavored to get hold of this $140,000,000 Government property for selfish, sectional, or class purposes. If it is wrong in principle for power companies to get control for selfish purposes, does not the same objection apply in the proposition to give it over to another class for selfish use at Government expense? We believe that thoughtful farmers are against class legislation, whether it be in their favor or against them.

Our first and biggest objection to the bill is that it sets a dangerous precedent. Our Government has so far refused to recognize the government of communistic Soviet Russia chiefly because that government is fostering and promoting the same principles of government in business proposed in this bill. The principles involved outrage the very fundamentals of this Nation. They violate the established laws and usages which have fostered individual enterprise and given encouragement to everyone who has the will to do. That these original principles were sound is proven by the unprecedented development and growth of this Nation. Shall we, then, change these for those having an opposite influence?

Uncle Sam never has proven himself to be as good a business man as private citizens. Every time he has tried commerce, manufacturing, or transportation the trial balances have shown the red-ink figures on the wrong side of the ledger. Moreover, a Government enterprise such as this would doubtless open up a new and wide field for patronage.

The unfair competition to which this bill would subject the fertilizer manufacturers would, in the end, react to the disadvantage of farmers and raise the price of fertilizers. Few of the 2,000,000 farmers who annually buy and use fertilizers could or would avail themselves of the Government's products, even if they were cheap. The specification that the fertilizers must be sold for spot cash, f. o. b., would make it impossible for the great majority to buy them if for no other reason. Most farmers buy their fertilizers on credit, and the trade system is built on that basis.

The bill provides for the operation of the plant on the above basis for a period of 10 years. Ten years would be long enough to prove the fallacy of the uneconomic enterprise, and it would be long enough also to put the private enterprises out of business and sink the $300,000,000 now invested by private citizens in the manufacture of fertilizers. Where would we be then? We are as much opposed to this scheme as to the proposition sometimes heard that the Government should take over all farm land and have it farmed by big corporations in order to produce cheap food.

Another objection to the bill is that the method of extracting nitrogen from the air at Muscle Shoals is now antiquated and unnecessarily expensive. Scientists have gone a long way in improving the process since the war and have devised less costly processes.

We are at a loss to understand why so little has been said about the bill now under consideration. Other proposals concerning Muscle Shoals have been discussed far and wide, but so far action on this bill has been kept quiet, seemingly, and little has appeared in the public press. We give it this publicity and make these arguments in the interest of sound government policies, to safeguard an agricultural necessity, and to prevent farmers from being misled into favoring an uneconomic, unsafe, and unfair proposition foisted under the guise of cheap fertilizers.

LETTER OF MR. KNEBEL

SAN ANTONIO, May 12, 1928.

Hon. LUTHER A. JOHNSON,
Member of Congress, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. JOHNSON: You are about to consider a measure which would place the United States Government in the manufacturing business in competition with its tax-paying citizens. We refer to the bill for the manufacture of fertilizer and for other purposes, located in the vicinity of Muscle Shoals.

The Texas State Manufacturers' Association is opposed to any further extension of Government activities that enter the domain of private enterprise. The functions of our Government are political, not economic. It was created to promote, defend, and secure the citizen in the peaceful pursuits of his own enterprise. It was neither conceived nor fashioned to compete with his efforts, least of all to seize from the fruit of his endeavor the means wherewith to imperil it. Production and distribution through the development of manufacture are not functions of the State, but of the individual.

The economic difficulties of the farmer are played upon by tempting suggestions that Government manufacture will lessen the cost of fertilizers. The entrance of the Government into the field of private enterprise and manufacture is fraught with serious economic and political consequences, not merely to the immediate victim of its competition but to the people of the United States. Behind the Government lies the credit and revenue of the Nation, but that, in its turn, finds its sources in the pocketbooks and good faith of the individual citizen. Yet no appeal is made for Government intervention that is not founded upon the anticipation that it will undersell private competitors and cover its deficiencies from revenue derived in part from the taxation of the enterprise it imperils. The Government carries no insurance, pays no taxes, meets capital losses and deficiencies in "estimates" by appropriation, and either ignores overhead or carries few of the unavoidable fixed charges which customarily constitute it. The expansions of these operations has been so gradual and so little realized generally that their true proportions are keenly appreciated only by those forms of business which have felt the effect of this false competition.

May we ask that you give this question your most serious consideration before passing another measure that would place the Government in competition with its citizens.

Most cordially yours,

G. M. KNEBEL,
Executive Vice President and General Manager,
Texas State Manufacturers Association.

USE SHOALS FOR POWER

The directors of the Atlanta Chamber of Commerce have adopted a resolution against the Senate Resolution 6, which definitely commits the United States Government to the employment of the Muscle Shoals plant to the manufacture of fertilizers.

While there appears to be no probability of Muscle Shoals legislation at this session—as scandalous as has been the long and inexcusable handling of this great property as a political football—the resolution of the Atlanta trade organization is timely.

The old Muscle Shoals nitrate plant is wholly antequated, and of no practical service now in the manufacture of fertilizer, or even of the single ingredient of nitrate. The enactment of such a measure as pending would not merely be class legislation, and paternalistic as again throwing the Government into competitive business, with tremendous annual losses that would have to be met by taxation, but it would involve an enormous initial expense in converting an archaic plant into a modern one, without giving in return any specific benefits to the farmers.

There has been a total of $140,000,000 spent on Muscle Shoals. It is deteriorating, and all because a group of the Members of Congress have used it as an instrument with which to fool and browbeat the farmer voters of the agrarian States.

Muscle Shoals is primarily a hydroelectric development of almost incalculable value in the building of industry, especially in the Southeast, from the waters of which it has been made possible, and to which section it belongs.

The Government has no more right to enter the business of power making and selling than it has fertilizer making and selling, but Congress has repeatedly had before it good and satisfactory proposals for both the purchase and the lease of the plant for power purposes, with all of the safeguards as to utilization in event of war. Those Members who have held back definite action know full well that the plant is not suitable for fertilizer manufacturing on an economic scale, but have kept the issue alive for political purposes only.

There is too much tendency among groups of political radicals toward "government ownership and operation" of utilities and private businesses. It is contrary to the institutions of our system of government. And if not, the Nation's sad experiences in operating railroads and ships ought to be lessons convincingly learned.

SHOOTING OF JACOB D. HANSON

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I send to the desk and ask that the clerk may read an editorial from the Buffalo Evening News, and then I desire to say something about it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read, as requested.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

[From the Buffalo Evening News, May 9, 1928]

PROTECT HUMAN RIGHTS

The wanton shooting of a Niagara Falls citizen on the Lewiston Hill by two men of the Coast Guard suggests that the prohibition enforcement division has placed the Niagara frontier under a form of martial law and that peaceable citizens now may come and go only on leave of enforcement officials.

Men of the Coast Guard are stationed on all highways leading from the lower Niagara River. Persons who use these roads after dark do so at their own risk. They are likely to be shot down with as little ceremony as was Jacob H. Hanson, of Niagara Falls, who was innocent of any wrong. The Fort Niagara Coast Guard commander declares that his orders "from Washington are to shoot at any car that fails to stop on command."

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I want to call attention to the statement just read about shootings. It is a quotation and in quotation marks from the commander of the Coast Guard. I will ask the clerk please to repeat that quotation.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The Fort Niagara Coast Guard commander declares that his orders "from Washington are to shoot at any car that fails to stop on command."

In the dark of the night it may not be easy to tell whether the command comes from a Coast Guard patrol or from a highwayman. The two men who shot Mr. Hanson showed no distinguishing marks on their clothing. Yet one must obey or take the chance of suffering the fate that overtook him. "Of course, we aim to cripple the car and not injure the driver," the commander of the guard explains. If one were disposed to do away with a man, one could hardly do better than to cripple his car on the Lewiston Hill. A person is offered a poor choice if he must either be shot or hurled from the Lewiston escarpment.

Seemingly the State is unable to protect its citizens who make use of the highways at night. The prohibition-enforcement division does not recognize that there is such a thing as State sovereignty. It does not appear that the State can move against an enforcement agent if he assaults or murders a citizen. Officers of the State were not permitted to serve warrants for the arrests of the Coast Guard men who shot Mr. Hanson. "I assume that the matter will go into Federal court," says United States Attorney Templeton. Undoubtedly it will.

Protests have been made to Washington against the operations of the Coast Guard, with particular reference to the Lewiston Hill assault. Such attacks as this should not be tolerated by the Federal authorities. The idea of giving the Coast Guard men authority to shoot at will invades inherent rights of American citizens. The people can not protest too emphatically against orders that would permit the prohibition army and navy operating along the frontier to set at naught these rights. It is unthinkable that the Federal Government will stand on such an order of things. If those who use the highways are to be subject at all times to the command of men of the Coast Guard, then these men must be always in uniform and they must be easily distinguishable as guardsmen. Nor should they be permitted to fire at will. The agents of the ordinary land force of the prohibition division are permitted to shoot only in self-defense or to prevent a felony. That rule should hold also for members of the Coast Guard. Any enlargement of it infringes common human rights.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I hesitate to take any time of the Senate. We are again in session and have many important measures to deal with. Certainly, however, nothing is more important than the preservation of human rights. I think this affair, the shooting of this innocent man on a highway at Niagara Falls, is such an invasion of human rights that the Senate should devote a moment to it, at any rate.

In this connection I desire to have printed at this point in the RECORD an editorial from the New York Times of yesterday entitled "Prohibition gunmen."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The editorial is as follows:

[From the New York Times, May 14, 1928]

PROHIBITION GUNMEN

A respectable citizen of Niagara Falls took the dangerous liberty of driving an automobile after dark. Suddenly called upon by unknown voices to halt, he drove away, suspecting a "hold-up." His car was promptly "riddled with bullets." He was shot in the head. If he lives, he will be blind. He had disobeyed the command of two Coast Guard men. As usual, the Federal authorities tried to snatch the accused from the jurisdiction of the State courts. That is a familiar process in many States. The enforcers of righteousness must be protected. The district attorney of Niagara County, apparently an old-fashioned person, is of another mind. Nearly a week after the attempted homicide he has procured from a Federal judge an order to the shielding authorities to show cause why writs should not be granted to bring these two sons of zeal into court.

Is one of the most precious "rights" of enforcers of the law of laws to be curtailed? In both branches of Congress this latest instance of old prohibition methods stirred a strange excitement. They are to be investigated by the Commerce Committee of the Senate. Some Members of the House favor an investigation by a committee of that body. Yet, aside from the fact that the supposed culprits in this case are Coast Guard men, this is but a chapter in a long story. From the bright beginnings of rum hunting these little exuberances of enforcement agents have manifested themselves sporadically in State after State. They attract a flutter of local indignation. Sometimes it has a brief replication in Congress. Nothing, or nothing much, is done.

The Commissioner of Prohibition is again making a "grand-stand play" by discharging an agent who pumped his revolver into an automobile the other day. The whole service has again been informed that it must shoot only in self-defense or to prevent a felony, and that the transportation of liquor is not a felony. The agents and the rest of us have heard this again and again. Once more this firing into vehicles on public highways "must be stopped." Once more he is not going to "shield" officers indulging in these shooting sprees. Hear him:

"We will aid States at any time, within reasonable limits, in prosecuting them."

Mark the cautious limitation. It will be a new policy when the bureau doesn't go as far as it can to rescue its pets. Any reform of them would be a miracle. Nor do we blame them. It is natural that a perpetual assault upon liberty should be accompanied by at least occasional assaults upon life. In connection with the other blessings of Volsteadism, these activities of the dry homicide squad have their uses in increasing the immense abhorrence of prohibition. Small comfort that for its victim at Niagara Falls, doomed no more to look upon the light of the sun.

Mr. COPELAND. I also have a resolution adopted by the North End Business Men's Association, of Niagara Falls, N. Y., wherein they protest against the assault upon this innocent and law-abiding citizen, an assault which will undoubtedly result in his death.

I also have a resolution adopted by Bellevue Lodge, No. 316, Odd Fellows, of Niagara Falls. They point out what an outrageous thing is this reckless stopping and annoying and shooting of an innocent person. I ask that these resolutions may be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The resolutions referred to are as follows:

NIAGARA FALLS, N. Y., May 8, 1928.

Whereas this association is composed of business men and property owners at the north end of the city of Niagara Falls, N. Y., and are interested in preserving law and order and making the city of Niagara Falls a better one in which to live; and

Whereas we strongly protest against the action of the Federal Government in permitting its officers to molest and assault innocent and law-abiding citizens who are obliged to use our highways at night; and it is further

Resolved, That the murderous and unjustifiable attack on Jacob D. Hanson by Coast Guard officers on Sunday morning, May 6, 1928, should not be pigeonholed, but the officers who committed this murderous assault should be turned over to the district attorney of Niagara County for a speedy trial.

Resolution by Bellevue Lodge, No. 316, I. O. O. F.

Whereas Jacob D. Hanson, a reputable, law-abiding, and respected citizen of the United States, having been for the past 25 years a member of this lodge, while driving his automobile on a much-traveled highway in the town of Lewiston, N. Y., on the morning of the 6th of May, 1928, was fired upon and possibly fatally wounded by members of the United States Coast Guard; and

Whereas incidents of this type are reported to be of frequent occurrence, constituting a serious menace to the lives and property of the traveling public and placing them in constant danger and are a violation of the laws and constitution of our State and Federal Government; and

Whereas the commander of the unit of said United States Coast Guard Service at Youngstown, N. Y., refused to allow warrants duly issued by the State courts for the arrest of said assailants of said Jacob D. Hanson to be executed and is reported to have made statements to the effect that said Coast Guards were acting in accordance with orders issued to them to fire upon any automobile which refused to stop on their signal: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That Bellevue Lodge, No. 316, I. O. O. F., of Niagara Falls, N. Y., hereby indignantly protest against the reckless use of firearms against the persons and automobiles of law-abiding citizens of this community, and the unjust and unlawful stopping, annoying, and searching of law-abiding citizens traveling upon our highways without any cause or reason therefor, by apparently irresponsible persons in the employ of the United States Coast Guard Service or any other governmental service, and we hereby resolve that every effort should be made to bring said members of the United States Coast Guard to answer in the courts for their unjust assault upon said Jacob D. Hanson to the full extent of the law, and that civil authorities cause an investigation to be made as to the unlawful issuing of orders by anyone in governmental capacity directing subordinates to shoot anyone who refuses to stop at their direction; that copies be sent to the Secretary of the Treasury, Senators COPELAND and WAGNER, United States Senators for the State of New York, and Congressman from this district, S. WALLACE DEMPSEY, and to the district attorney of the county of Niagara.

Dated, Niagara Falls, N. Y., May 11, 1928.

[SEAL.] SYDNEY S. BRUCE, Noble Grand.

Attested:

BURTON REYNOLDS, Recording Secretary.

PROHIBITION ENFORCEMENT

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, the case which the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] has brought to the attention of the Senate is, of course, eminently worthy of its attention, but, after all, it is not of an exceptional nature. Hardly a week or a month passes without effusion of blood in connection with the operations of the prohibition unit. Sometimes, it is only fair to admit, it is the bootlegger who is responsible for the killing. Then, again, frequently it is the prohibition agent who is responsible.

One of the worst features of the practical workings of prohibition is not merely the official corruption that follows in its wake but the bloodshed for which it is accountable, a measure of bloodshed never known before the adoption of the eighteenth amendment as respects the enforcement of the liquor laws of the country; and I predict now that instead of growing better conditions as regards these deeds of violence will steadily grow worse.

The meaning of this Hanson outrage, and the other outrages which have stirred so deeply the heart and the conscience of this country, is that national prohibition is based upon foundations of tyranny, of that tyranny against which the human breast has ever revolted, no matter what form it may have assumed.

The prohibition agents, some of whom are brave and honorable men, but many of whom are the most unconscionable scamps that this country ever saw in public places, realize that they have become objects of public detestation, and, smarting under the sense of that detestation, they are quicker than they would otherwise be to commit such offenses as this Hanson shooting and innumerable other shootings that I might mention; in other words, the prohibition agents, who are quite frequently now hooted and pelted with rotten eggs and vegetable refuse when they undertake to discharge their duties, have become as obnoxious to the people of this country as the exciseman was in Scotland in the time of Burns. I recollect at this moment those lines of Burns in which, in speaking of the exciseman, he says:

The deil cam fiddlin' thro' the town,
And danc'd awa wi' th' exciseman.
And ilka wife cries, "Auld Mahoun,
I wish you luck o' the prize, man."

That is very much the state of mind to which the bribery and violence that have been the fruits of prohibition have brought the feelings of the people of the United States, as is so abundantly attested by the material which the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] has had inserted in the RECORD.

No; prohibition is working as every system of tyranny of the same description has worked since the origin of civil society. An unnatural system, a system at war with human reason, a system repugnant to human nature, its operations can not be otherwise regarded than as utterly arbitrary, tyrannical, despicable, and hateful.

The case of which the Senator from New York speaks is nothing compared to similar cases which the newspapers have recorded during the last few years. Some of the Members of the Senate will recall that last spring this case arose in West Virginia. A poor woman in the mountains of that State was lying in bed just after her confinement—she was the mother of nine children before the birth of this last one. Four prohibition agents burst into her humble home and shot her husband down right by her bed upon the suspicion of his having liquor in the house, which proved not to be the case at all. And that poor wretch fell to the floor riddled with bullets, his head barely clear of the fire upon his own hearth and his legs stretched out alongside of the bed in which his wife lay. So terrorized was that little mountain community by this fearful tragedy that when the coroner's jury met it actually returned a verdict that the deceased had come to his death from causes unknown; so terrorized that when I wrote to the editor of a newspaper in the county which had published a pathetic letter from the wife detailing the circumstances surrounding her husband's death I could not for the life of me get him to say whether those circumstances were veraciously stated or not. But, thank God, there were enough kind, generous hearts in the United States to come to the aid of that poor widow. Mr. Fish, of the Minute Man, of Newark, N. J., and I made an appeal for pecuniary contributions for her relief; and I am glad to say that we collected a sum of about a thousand dollars for her and had it placed in her name in a trust company in the city of Baltimore subject to her rights to draw from month to month the amount of $25 fixed by her for the benefit of herself and her 10 infant children. That sum, I am glad to say, will substantially help to maintain her and her infant children until two or three of the oldest shall become of sufficient age to assist in keeping the home of their mother together.

Here is the letter written by this afflicted woman to which I refer. It reads as follows:

EDITORS OF THE CHRONICLE: Will you please give me just a little space of your paper so as I can correct the horrible mistakes that are circulated in regards to the cruel and horrible way my husband was shot down and murdered before my eyes, and I was not even able to get up and go to him for my little baby was only 3 days old. The officers reported they emerged from the woods to the house. They did not do so. They came up the road past my husband's father's that just lives a little distance below my home, and came all the way up the road to my home; and another report that was a mistake—my husband did not come from the barn. He was at his shop shoeing a horse for his uncle. He saw the officers coming and came to the house to inform me of it so I would not be frightened. I will tell you just as I saw it with my own eyes. Two officers entered the door by the front way just facing my bed and two came in the back way. My husband met the two at the front way and they commanded a search; and he asked them to read him the warrant, and one of them came from the kitchen way and took some papers out of his pocket. Him and my husband were talking. The warrant was not as much as opened until one of the officers that was standing just on the front steps pushed the other officer back a little and drawed his gun and fired. I screamed and cried for him not to shoot my husband, and he did, and so that was the first shot; and then there were several shots fired. I did not see my husband as much as draw his gun. They shot him down, and my little children all standing around him screaming and crying. When the smoke went out of the house so as I could see, my husband was lying with his head almost in the fire just in facing of my bed. The officer never much as came back in to see about me or my little children, to see if we were all right. Oh, if every officer only knew how it hurts me to know that my husband was shot down for an unjust cause, they would not be too hasty and there would not be so much heartache and sorrow. If they had just went ahead and searched so as they would have been convinced that they took his life for nothing that day, for there was nothing to be found. There were several shots fired right past my face and my bed from the door that opens from the kitchen. The shots all went in his back, except the one that went in from his left side—

This man, mind you, was shot in the back.

Mr. Humphries reported that they could get no immediate assistance in this community in caring for the wounded. That is all false reports, for my husband's own uncle took them into his house and gave them a good cot to lay on, and also sent a team with them to Burnsville; and that was more than they done for me. I am left alone with 10 small children, the oldest one a crippled one, to make my way. Mr. Skidmore went as far as to say before my husband's cousin that if the other officers had not been too hasty that would not happened.—Braxton Chronicle.

I do not know what the pecuniary condition is of this man Hanson, whose eyesight, I believe, has been extinguished.

Mr. COPELAND. He has a bullet in his brain.

Mr. BRUCE. Is he dead? He is about to die, I suppose; but if his pecuniary condition is not such as to warrant the hope that his family will not suffer from destitution, I trust that the good citizens of the State of New York will do what Mr. Fish and I did—that is to say, raise a fund and place it in bank for the benefit of his wife, if he has one, and of his children, if he has any.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BRUCE. Yes.

Mr. COPELAND. I can well understand the indignation of the Senator from Maryland. We have the law, and in a decent way it must be enforced. The Senator and I are in full agreement as to that.

Mr. BRUCE. Why, certainly.

Mr. COPELAND. But it is an outrageous thing that, as in the case of the poor woman mentioned here whose husband was shot down by these ruthless enforcement officers, in the same way an outrage has been perpetrated in the State of New York.

Here was a man who had gone to take some friends home into the suburbs from an entertainment in this city. He came back up this steep hill, and was stopped by a man said to be in overalls, with a sheepskin jacket, and not in uniform. Naturally, the man thought he was a highwayman. He stepped on the gas of the car and rushed past him. One hundred yards up the hill was another man disguised in the same way, apparently, who shot this man; and if he did not kill him it is worse than death, because the man will be blind, and perhaps demented.

Here was an innocent citizen, a bystander, so to speak. It might have been the family physician out on his rounds; it might have been the minister out to see some sick member of the flock; and under these circumstances this man was shot and blinded, if not killed.

No matter how enthusiastic any citizen of this country may be about the prohibition law, no matter how insistent he may be on the enforcement of law—and I know that is the attitude of the Senator—the country certainly will not continue to tolerate outrages such as those enumerated by the Senator, and such as this which happened at Niagara Falls.

Mr. BRUCE. I am afraid that it will continue to tolerate it as long as members of legislative assemblies are so pusillanimous as with a few exceptions not to raise their voices in protest when such outrages as these are committed. I am not speaking, of course, of such a Senator as the distinguished Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], who over and over again has declared that this issue of prohibition should be frankly and fully presented to the public, so that the voters of the United States may definitely pass upon it. I am speaking, however, of other Members of Congress whom I have more than once termed Members of Congress with the dry tongue and the wet throat, who set here and, when honest men are denouncing the flagitious crimes perpetrated in the name of prohibition, can not preserve silence, apparently, long enough to permit them to do it audibly.

I recollect that many years ago Disraeli said that the Whig Party, or some political party, in England was an "organized hypocrisy." So is prohibition, so far as the legislative representatives of the people are concerned—just an organized hypocrisy.

Here we are on the eve of the national conventions. Frantic efforts are being made to divert the public attention to issues that nobody is thinking about from the one issue that everybody is thinking about—the issue of prohibition—and, as I have said, with the exception of such brave and high-minded Senators as the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] and a few Members of the House, hardly a voice is being raised in either House to insist that at least one of those two conventions deal ingenuously and manfully with the great, paramount issue of prohibition.

Of all the Senators that are justly obnoxious to the criticisms that I am uttering, none are more justly so than the Senators from the Southern States. Here are the voters, or the politicians, rather, in some of those States sending delegates to the next Democratic National Convention either to urge the adoption of a dry platform, or, that failing, to help to muzzle free speech in the convention altogether on the subject of prohibition.

Notable among those States is the State of South Carolina, which, I understand, is actually about to send a considerable number of ministers of the gospel as delegates to the next Democratic National Convention. Why, by the constitution of my State a minister of the gospel is not even allowed to hold a seat in the Legislature of Maryland. Think of that—South Carolina sending dry delegates and dry clerical delegates to the next Democratic National Convention, when, as I showed the other day by undeniable facts and irresistible inference, there is probably 1 still in that State for every 240 inhabitants!

The Charleston News and Courier stated a few days ago the number of stills in the State of South Carolina that had been broken up by the governor's constabulary alone. When to those are added the stills that were broken up by the prohibition agents and the county police forces of South Carolina, I say that the conclusion is warranted that there may be 1 commercial still to every 240 inhabitants in that State.

And in Texas, where the convention is to be held, I see that a lot of banal talk is going on about completely excluding the bootlegger from the streets of Houston while the convention is in session. Only a few days ago an honest Texan sent me a newspaper clipping showing that arrests for drunkenness have reached an alarming point in that city, and that it might without extravagance be called Hoochton instead of Houston.

Why, it is a fact that in 1925 no less than 70 per cent of all the illicit-liquor plants and agencies seized by the Federal Prohibition Unit in this country were seized in the 11 former Confederate States—70 per cent of the whole number—and yet it is those States that propose to ram down our throats a dry candidate for the Presidency, and a dry platform! All that, of course, as I say, is but another illustration of the organized hypocrisy which in some respects I think is the most odious feature of the whole system of prohibition.

In conclusion, I only want to say what I have taken occasion to say before. I am coming up as a candidate for reelection this fall; and every now and then one of these timid, time-serving politicians in my party, with what the poet calls "slow, circumspective eyes," cautions me that I had better pussyfoot, soft pedal on this issue of prohibition, because there are not a few prohibitionists in the counties of my State, to say nothing of Baltimore city. I meet every such suggestion with scorn—scorn that is scarcely utterable, despite all the resources of our rich, English tongue. What care I whether I go down to defeat or not at the next senatorial election, provided only that I shall not be recreant to the profoundest convictions that have ever found lodgment in my mind, and to the most fervid feelings that have ever inspired my soul?

It is impossible for me to believe that the next Democratic convention will be so false to all that is best in its history as not to avail itself of another opportunity to prove its inextinguishable loyalty to the principle of personal liberty that it has so often inscribed upon its campaign banner.

Mr. BLACK obtained the floor.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator if he is going to discuss another subject?

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I am going to discuss the South and her Senators. I have sat silent for some months with charges of hypocrisy constantly hurled at every Senator from the South who espouses prohibition. I have remained silent with the hope that some one who had been here longer would reply to these charges hurled in the faces of men who have just as much right to their belief as the citizen who lives in Maryland or in New York.

This morning, when the oft-repeated charge of "organized hypocrisy" is made and the Senator from Maryland sees fit, as customary, to point the finger of scorn at the Southern States, embracing the State from which I understand he sprang, embracing within that charge that great old State which is the mother of Presidents, and which, according to my information, contains the ashes of his forebears, I decline to sit silent longer.

Another charge is made that most of the prohibition officers of America are "unconscionable scamps." I deny that that charge is true or has any slight basis or foundation of truth. It is easy enough for men to rise upon the floor of the Senate and indict an entire group of citizens; it is easy to pick out some isolated case heralded abroad by the Minute Men of America, an organized group of citizens who are attempting to break down and trample upon the Constitution of the United States, and publicly assert that West Virginia officers have stultified themselves contrary to the findings of their courts. It is easy for the Senator and the "minute men" to claim they know more about what happens in West Virginia than do the citizens and the duly constituted legal authorities of that State. It is easy enough to loudly assert the idea of State rights and then attempt to govern the country precincts of West Virginia from Baltimore or New York.

The Senator says that the State authorities of West Virginia have judicially determined West Virginia officers to be innocent, and then he says that the Minute Men of America—those gentlemen issuing a magazine which is striking a javelin into the prostrate form of law and order in America—he says that he and the Minute Men of America have decided that West Virginia authorities do not know what they are about and charges them with cowardice.

It is easy enough to pick out an isolated case and take the name of an isolated witness, giving isolated evidence, and establish, without a jury to hear the facts, the truth or falsity of a charge. It is easy enough for one with the great historical knowledge and the poetic lore and the literary attainments of the Senator from Baltimore to take such isolated case, try it in the senatorial forum hundreds of miles from West Virginia, and repudiate the courts established by State authority. It is somewhat amusing to hear a great Maryland exponent of State rights pass judgment condemning the action of the courts of West Virginia. I assume, however, that the people of Maryland and "minute men" of New York know more about West Virginia than that State's citizens themselves know.

I have no apology to make for being from the "Confederate States," as my colleague terms them. I am proud of the fact that I come from those States. There repose the ashes of my ancestors. When my time shall come to join the throng across the unknown shore I hope that I, too, shall there lie down to rest peacefully under the calm sunshine of Dixie. Yet these Southern States are mentioned from day to day as though it is a crime or a disgrace for a man to be a citizen of the South. We, because, forsooth, the people of the Southern States believe in law and decency and order are charged with "organized hypocrisy."

The fact is cited that more stills have been broken up in the Southern States than elsewhere; and that is true. It is because, my friends, Alabama citizens and South Carolina citizens and North Carolina citizens do not throw eggs at the duly constituted officers of the law. They are high-class citizens, with the blood of generations flowing in their veins, always loyal to the laws of their country. It is true that more stills are broken up in the South. It is not true that more should be. Thank God, the State from which I come stands up with head erect and looks up into the stars above and says, "When the people of America through their representatives adopt a law, we abide by it, and we elect governors who do not go around over the State speaking for the nullification of the Constitution under which we live. We elect officials who send out into the highways and byways to enforce the law as it is written, not as we would have it written."

My friends we of the South do not, and we shall not, parade before the lawless element of America precedents with the hope of inspiring them to more organized insurrection, and hold up to them the battle flag of lawlessness instead of the battle flag of obedience to the law and the Constitution of our country.

Yes; we break up more stills. We break up more stills because you know and everyone else knows that the South is composed of a citizenship which is ready to hold up the arms of the officers and aid them in enforcing the laws of this country. We are proud of our citizenship. We have no apologies to make for the beliefs of the citizens of the South. We do not come crooking the pregnant hinges of our knees before the self-styled, self-appointed, and self-annointed autocrats of the laws of this country, who say that, in spite of the fact that in due and orderly process something has been written into the Constitution, "We are bigger than the Constitution. What care we for it? It goes contrary to our ideas; and, therefore, we will point to the Constitution and say 'Tyranny! Tyranny!'"

Ah, my friends, there was nothing like that in the mind of Patrick Henry when he uttered those immortal words, "Give me liberty or give me death." Patrick Henry was not protesting against a constitution framed and formed and molded by the majority of the people of a country through their duly chosen representatives.

When gentlemen talk about liberty, they frequently confuse that sacred principle, with unbridled license. Liberty does not justify a community in setting aside and annuling and defying their country's laws. It is a new idea to boast of the fact that, "We do not enforce the law. We do not break up stills." No; we know they do not. All you have to do is to take a trip over into the State of Maryland. There you find a system of lawlessness which is unparalleled or unprecedented anywhere in America except in the State of New York. Why is that? Because of the fact that sentiments like those we have heard expressed here from day to day and from week to week have filled the people of that State with the belief that displeased individuals are bigger than the law. They can say, "We have our spokesman to shout, 'Tyranny! Tyranny!'" where there is no tyranny.

There is only one question in all this tumult and shouting, and that is whether a man will be a law-abiding, decent citizen, when the Constitution declares a rule he may personally dislike, or whether he wants to set himself up as above the Constitution of the country in which he lives. It is no longer a question of prohibition or no prohibition. There is no room for doubt, and there is no ground on which the friends of constitutional government can meet and quarrel as to the enforcement of the law as it is written on the books. Yet we hear speeches, we see propaganda, and we see the wet press, dripping, dripping, dripping, as cries are made for prohibited liquor in spite of law. They pick up some isolated instance and shout, "Here; it is all wrong. The law has failed."

My friends, this great country in which we live, composed, as it is largely, thank God, of the sons and daughters of the kind of men who fought to make America free, is bigger than any organized group that seeks to trample upon the laws of America and besmirch its flag and its institutions. America has never yet put its hand to a single undertaking that it did not come through and win a victory. Because the South, a land composed of noble and brave and patriotic and loyal law-abiding citizens, true to their ancient traditions, believe in the supremacy of law and dares to assert this belief in the face of the exponents of lawlessness and crime, its citizens are called "organized hypocrites."

I have no objection to any man, from Maryland or elsewhere, believing as he sees fit. That is his prerogative. I would not take away from a single individual citizen anywhere within all this broad land the right to have his belief, and to express it. Freedom of speech is one of democracy's most precious assets. I claim for myself, however, and for those whom I love, the same privileges and the same opportunities. I deny that any man has a right to stand up and indict a whole citizenship and call them a group of "organized hypocrites," because, forsooth, they do not believe as he does. I say that while Senators are preaching the doctrine of tolerance it would just as well apply to one principle as another, and that man who dares to rise anywhere and charge everybody who does not believe as he does, to be a part of a group of "organized hypocrites" has reached the pinnacle of intolerance and bigotry.

The statement is made—I have heard it made here a great deal—that drunkenness is increasing. America is growing and is growing very rapidly. Citizenship is increasing. The number of people is increasing. But I deny that drunkenness is increasing in the State of Alabama. I live there. I do not care how many wet sympathizers or how many drinking wet people the Senator from Maryland may question who say that drunkenness is increasing in Alabama, their statement is absolutely and unqualifiedly not true. I have served there as an official in a municipality and in the biggest county in the State which has in it the most populous city in Alabama. As a public official I watched the city progress under both a dry and a wet régime. I say to you that no honest man, who will not permit his thoughts and his belief and his opinions to be distorted by facts which are false; no honest man who lived in the State of Alabama during the time that we had saloons and to-day, will fail to acknowledge, so far as Alabama is concerned, that prohibition is preferable to the old saloon régime.

I read only the other day a book written by a man who is very much opposed to prohibition. I believe he called it "America Comes of Age." It is a book which takes up the modernistic view of everything. The writer of that book opposes, just as it seems the Senator from Maryland does, the views of the people of the South and of the West. He groups them together. He says the people of the West and South are composed of citizens, in the main, who are sons and daughters of the ancient pioneers of America, who have had impressed upon them the puritanical ideas of the founding fathers of this Nation. He then proceeds to explain that prohibition is contrary to the principles of liberty, as we have so often heard from the Senator from Maryland. Then he says that the people of America have yielded to prohibition from a materialistic standpoint, because it has aided them in the making of money. He says that materialistic spirit prevails here in America, and he attributes prohibition to such desire for economic success. If you would read his book, you would think it was part of the speech of the Senator from Maryland, except the particular part in which he says that prohibition has brought to America more home owners, and has given to the merchants a greater degree of success, because of the fact that men have been able to spend more in the grocery, the dry-goods establishment, and the clothing store. This writer from France states that prohibition has caused men to have more automobiles. He states that it has made the individuals of the Nation more prosperous. In spite of these advantages he then argues it is wrong, and asserts, as the Senator from Maryland, that the right to get drunk is more valuable then the prosperity of the people.

Any man who looks and who studies economic conditions in America knows that these views of this enemy of prohibition with reference to the workingman having more money to spend for home and loved ones are correct. All he has to do is to go out and take from his eye the glasses of partisanship and the glasses, as the Senator from Maryland says, of political expediency, and look round about him. He will see for himself. There is no doubt that there are some communities in the Nation where they have not yet realized that the Constitution is or should be supreme. Why that is I can not say. It may be that the people there have not lived in this country long enough to have imbibed the principles of American citizenship. That is in line with the statements made by the distinguished author of "When America Comes of Age."

There are some communities where they have not yet come to realize the loyalty which they owe to their Government, or that it is a Government "of, for, and by the people." There are some, we regret to say, spurred on by incendiary speeches against the law, made by distinguished citizens occupying high and exalted positions, who will stand on the street corners and hurl rotten eggs at the duly constituted officers of the law. Those things do not happen in Alabama. So far as I have learned they have not occurred in the West, which the writer of this book, I referred to, says is composed of the same kind of citizenship as these abused people of the South.

Yes, my friends, the South does stand by this law. We will continue to do it. Let the Senator from Maryland hurl his darts and charges thick and fast. Let him drop his loaded shrapnel into their midst, and still, when the din of the explosion is ended, the people of the South will be there, back in their homes on the hillsides and in the valleys, responding to the same old Anglo-Saxon principle of loyalty to law and decency and government which seems to entitle them to be the particular object of the animadversions of the Senator from Maryland.

After all his words have passed into nothingness; after they have become even a lost memory; after the charges that he has made have sunk into insignificance and obscurity; the Constitution of America, which he is attacking, that glorious instrument which represents the solidified thought and crystallized sentiment of the people of America, will continue to envelop the citizenship of America—North and South—and will be the haven of refuge from all the oppression which follows lawlessness and crime. Long after all of us shall have passed away, as the changing conditions of time bring about the evolution which time alone can bring, as human thought advances from stage to stage, there will still be men who do not want to observe the rules of civilized war. Some will stand upon the street corners and say, "We detest that law; it is wrong." But there will be others, thank God, occupying the humble homes of this great country of America, some of them far removed from the turmoil of city, out by the babbling brook and running stream, with the shade of God's forest cooling and resting them after their day's labor has ended—there will be many, as there are to-day, who say, "I love my country and my country's law. Cursed be that man who will dare by word or speech to destroy or encourage others to destroy the law protecting the people of my country."

My friends, there may be two or three States that will hoist the flag of rebellion to the law as written in the Constitution. They may have spokesmen to utter their precepts and their principles. There are newspapers to propagate their insidious doctrine. Among the citizens of America, however, are those same kinds of sons and daughters that the Senator from Maryland does not seem to like, who ring true to the principle of old-fashioned Americanism and who believe in the supremacy of law. I say, thank God there is no place in America, even in bonny Maryland, where they ring any truer than they do in those States which he has termed "the old Confederate States."

I did not know that there was any longer any line which separated the so-called Confederate States from the others. I thought that line had been washed away by the blood of patriots. I thought, when Wheeler and Dewey met together on the battle field, when we were at war with Spain, and when the boys from the North and the boys from the South joined hands to fight the battles on the blood-soaked fields of France, that old lines were gone.

Then again, when I stood side by side with the boys from New York, the boys from Oregon, the boys from California, as they rose one and all to respond to their country's call, I did not think that a short time thereafter I would hear used, as a term apparently of opprobrium in the United States Senate, the expression "the Confederate States."

The Senator from Maryland referred to "an organized hypocrisy," as I recall it, and said none are more guilty than the Senators from the Southern States. He practically charged that we came here with a wet throat and a dry tongue. Ah, my friends, it is easy to charge, but since the Senator's charge seemed all-inclusive, I say to the Senator from Maryland that since my hand went up toward heaven and I swore to obey the laws and the Constitution of the United States, I have not, either in word or action, conspired to bring about the breaking of that Constitution. Let him who is without sin stand in your midst and hurl stones at the Members of the Senate.

We know no difference in States. We recognize good citizenship whether it is found in Maryland, New York, Massachusetts, or Washington. We recognize as the highest type of American citizenship the man who obeys his country's laws. We recognize as the lowest type of American citizenship the man who seeks to break down the laws of the Government which give him safety and to which alone he can look to protect his person and his property. Ah, my friends, if these gentlemen keep on meeting in their minutemen organizations and their other organizations for the purpose of breaking down one law, do not rest secure in your seats. The worm that goes down to the least root of the largest tree, may be the one that causes it to topple by reason of its rottenness.

Sometime these gentlemen who seek to inspire the breaking of the laws of the country and who boast that their States will not cooperate with the Federal Government in the things which have been charged upon it by the Constitution of the Nation, will realize their folly. As was said by the distinguished Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] some years ago, the reds meet in their rooms and they believe it is all right to rob a man of his property. They think it and they preach that doctrine. The whites meet in their palaces and in their clubs along the way, raising the red flag of rebellion with a flask in their pockets as they trample upon the laws of the Nation, and they justify their conduct by the statement, "I do not like that law." It should not make any difference whether they like that law or not, it is the law, and until it is changed no decent, law-abiding, respectable citizen, who is the type that would respond to his country's call and answer in the face of shot and shrapnel will fail to say, "It is my country's law and by the grace of the ever-living God, whose care has been over our country, so long as it is on the statute books I stand as a citizen to uphold it."

There is the line of demarcation. Take it as you will. There is the only one. I say that the man who inspires the breaking of any law and who encourages it and incites it is just as guilty as the bootlegger who drives his car crashing down the street and leaves the prostrate, mangled form of his victim lying behind him. I get tired of this sickly sentiment about the bootlegger.

Who is it that rushes through the streets pell-mell at break-neck speed and mangles the bones and bodies of the children? Who is it that feeds them the poison stuff that eats out their very vitals? Who is it that is bringing about disrespect for law and order? I do not condone a single offense of an officer who violates the law. He ought to be given a greater punishment than the citizen who does it. I mean all of them. I am not limiting it. I make that statement and intend it to be as broad as we can think of the list of public officers in America.

I have no sympathy for the prohibition agent or the man who is sent out to catch a thief who violates the law. That there are some people, however, who exalt property rights so high that if a man steals 50 cents they think the offense so horrible it is all right for an officer to shoot him in the back. Some of these same people who know that a bootlegger has been prostituting the laws of his nation, has been providing poisoned liquor to go into the stomachs of other men's children, has been despoiling their minds and turning them aside from the ways of rectitude and right learned at their mother's knee, are willing, if an officer shoots a bootlegger in order to save his own life, to insist without going into the facts that the officer should be hanged.

I say that every officer who shoots a man has the right to be tried in a court of this land. This is, or it should be, a law-abiding country. Many years ago, from experience in the practice of the law, I came to the conclusion that the man who attempts to form a judgment as to the guilt or innocence of any individual until he has stood before a jury of his peers and the evidence has fallen from the lips of witnesses before that jury is likely to do somebody an injustice. If, on the full presentation of the facts, it is shown that an officer violated the law of his nation, then let that officer suffer I desire to say, Mr. President, that even though I belong to that group designated by the Senator from Maryland as "hypocrites," I believe my record with reference to the enforcement of the law can be put side by side with his, and I shall not be ashamed of the result.

Let all of us look forward to the time when the Stars and Stripes shall not only float over us in time of war as a symbol of war and victory but in time of peace as a symbol of the fact that American citizens, high and low, rich and poor, recognize that the law as written is the law for every decent self-respecting, loyal, patriotic citizen to observe. That time must come. Either this country will be a country of law and order or it will be a country of anarchy and oppression; it will be a country where a few can determine which laws they will break and obey; where individual caprice is the only rule, or the majesty of the law will triumph. Either this land of ours, born in the days when it seemed that government was destined to pass into the hands of despots, supported by the patriots of the early days; nurtured at the breasts of the loving and devoted mothers of the country—either this country of ours will continue to be a country where the people enact their laws and have them obeyed, or it will be a country of anarchists, and the only flag that will wave will be the red flag of anarchy, instead of the flag of law and order.

I simply rose, my friends, because I had sat silently as long as I could and heard myself, and not so much myself as the people of my State, charged with being "organized hypocrites." The statement is not true. It could not be born in the mind of a tolerant citizen. It is the offspring of bigotry; it is the offspring of the man who says, "Take my judgment or you are not worthy of being called an American citizen." I say, with all due respect, that I have the highest regard for the views of the Senator from Maryland on the prohibition question; he has just as much right to be against prohibition as I have to be for it; that is his privilege and prerogative as an American citizen; but I deny that either he or any other man within the sound of my voice or in the State of Maryland or in the country of America has the right to charge that because the people of the South believe contrary to his views they are "organized hypocrites." It is not right; it is contrary to the spirit of American free thought; it is contrary to the ideals of our fathers; it is contrary to the principles enunciated in that grand and great old State of Virginia from which the Senator came; and it is contrary, my friends, to every sentiment of democracy for me to tell a man because he does not entertain my views that he is a bigot or a hypocrite.

I am in favor of the prohibition law. I wish to conclude with this statement: I have no apology to make to the Senator from Maryland or anyone else. I believe with all my heart that prohibition in America has tended to alleviate misery and distress; I believe that it has caused many a mother to have food for her children when otherwise they would have been hungry. I believe, from what I have seen, that it has transformed many a drunkard from a state of inebriety into a condition of sobriety. I believe with all my heart that the day will come in this land of ours when there will be no thoughtful man in America who dares publicly to encourage the breaking of the laws of his country, whether he believes in them or disbelieves in them.

The thing as I see it that should be done, irrespective of the Democratic or Republican conventions—and, of course, it is their business; I shall be a member of neither—the thing that should be done is for the citizens of America who believe in the majesty of law and in the supremacy of the flag to stand together and uphold the sacred principles upon which America rests. There is a remedy by amendment of the Constitution for those who desire to change it. If the Senator from Maryland can get sufficient members of the Legislature of Maryland and sufficient members of the legislatures of three-fourths of the States to petition this body for a change in the Constitution, it can be done. If they can obtain sufficient States to require a resubmission of the eighteenth amendment to the people of America, that is their right. I believe in the rule of the people according to established constitutional methods. If, therefore, the Constitution is so amended, no citizen who loves his country will complain at the method of amendment. But in the name of the ever-living God of America, the God who has guided our country safely in our destiny to this good year of 1928, let us stop constantly quarreling over whether or not the law can be enforced. Let every man join hands not in an attempt to strike it down but to enforce it. When the time comes that three-fourths of the States want it changed, let it be changed; but until then the foundation upon which all can stand should be obedience to law. There is only one question involved and that is, Does America want a country of law or does it want a country of anarchy? If it wants anarchy, listen to the preachments of the men who proclaim the doctrine of the Senator from Maryland, the Governor of Maryland, and the various other people whose doctrines would trample underfoot the sacred principles of American liberty, American hope, and American constitutional government.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, of course nothing could have been further from my thoughts, when I used the words "organized hypocrisy," than to impute that thing solely to the Southern States. I was thinking of it as a thing that, like the bootlegger himself, is coextensive with the entire territory of the United States. Nor could anything be more foreign to my purpose than to cast any aspersion of any kind upon the South or upon those States of the South which came to be known in the sixties as the Confederate States.

I myself am a native of one Southern State, and throughout my active life I have been the resident of another. My father was a captain in the Confederate Army, and I could no more conceive of myself as being disloyal in any proper sense to the South than I can conceive of myself as being guilty of gross sacrilege or of some other offense of an equally heinous nature.

I singled out the South especially for my observations because the South is the portion of the United States in which the dry sentiment apparently asserts itself most actively at the present time, and in which all the moral pretensions that circle about prohibition seem to be peculiarly prevalent just now.

In spite of the laudation of Alabama that has fallen from the lips of the junior Senator from that State, I am prepared to say that one of the most delicious illustrations of the organized hypocrisy of which I spoke is to be derived from an incident that took place in that State in the latter part of the year 1926.

We all remember that at that time the Governor of Alabama—I do not know whether he was a Ku-Klux governor or not, but he was the predecessor of the present Ku-Klux Governor of Alabama—went off on a hunting trip, and was in a camp, and a considerable amount of whisky was discovered to be in this camp by some factional enemy or other of the governor; and the governor found himself, to use a homely phrase, in a very tight situation. In other words, he found himself in the situation of that most flagitious of all things in the estimation of the junior Senator from Alabama, a violator of the Volstead Act.

How was the situation met? At the time it looked as if the Governor of Alabama, in spite of his high executive station, might be dealt with as any other common offender; but, of course, as we all know, in the South sooner or later everything gets down to the negro; and so very soon a negro attendant at that camp was found who was willing to bear vicariously the sins of the honorable Governor of Alabama; so instead of the governor being convicted as a violator of the Volstead Act this negro was.

There you have an illustration in high place—one of the highest places in the land—of the hypocritical manner in which prohibition operates in the official as well as the private life of this country.

I confess, however, that I was amused when the junior Senator from Alabama spoke of himself as dwelling in a State of "calm sunshine." Calm sunshine, indeed! In no other State of the Union, with the single exception of the klan-cursed State of Indiana, where the penitentiary has practically become an annex to the statehouse, have the outrages of the Ku-Klux Klan been pushed to such an extent as they have in this law-abiding, this peaceful, sun-bathed community that the junior Senator from Alabama pictured.

Why, is it not known to almost every man in the United States that in this State which the Senator describes as a State of tolerance and contrasts favorably with the State of Maryland, a Catholic—to use an old expression—has become little better than a wolf's head?

As I am informed, a year or so ago, when the daughter of a resident of Alabama married a young Catholic, the infuriated father sought him out and shot him to death, and was afterwards, if I am not mistaken, acquitted by a jury in the State which, according to the Senator, pays such a profound, such an unquestioned, such an exemplary respect to the law.

A short time ago a correspondent of Collier's Weekly went down to the State of Alabama and wrote a series of articles for his periodical, and in one of those articles he makes the statement that during the preceding three years there had been no less than 700 lawless floggings, including floggings of old men, women, and children, by nocturnal and other marauders and ruffians in the State of Alabama.

I must say that it took a degree of self-satisfaction such as has never been brought to my attention before for the junior Senator from Alabama to take this klan-ridden State, where there is no such thing as sumptuary tolerance, no such thing as sectarian tolerance, no such thing as racial tolerance, and to hold it up as if it were some tranquil and blessed Arcadia conceived in the brain of some rapt poet.

As far as the Senator's State is concerned, he is in the condition of our first parents; he is naked and not ashamed; but I do not hesitate to say that if conditions should grow worse in the State of Alabama it will become a sort of an outlaw, outcast, pariah State.

Some time ago a priest in that State was charged with an offense against chastity, if not something worse. So given over were parts of the State to rabid bigotry, to hatred of the very name of the Catholic, that the ecclesiastical superiors of this man—among the most upright and accomplished men that I have ever met—had to come all the way from the State of Alabama to the State of Maryland to find some public man who was willing to see that that priest had a fair hearing. They did not say that he was innocent; they said that they did not know whether he was innocent or not, but that he was entitled to a fair trial, and a fair trial he could not get in the klan-enslaved, the intolerant, the bigoted State of Alabama.

I have not known the junior Senator from Alabama long enough to say just what his personal practice is in relation to prohibition, though, of course, I have no disposition to question the truth of what he affirms about his own personal habits.

He has set himself up as such a striking example of personal self-restraint and righteous conduct that I could not but recall the story that was told of Roosevelt when he was down South on one occasion. He was making a speech, sprinkled, as his vivid speeches were likely to be, with the first personal pronoun, when a white man out on the outskirts of the audience which he was addressing, and to whom he was a stranger, asked a colored man standing beside him who the speaker was. "I don't know," said the colored man, "but he certainly do rekommend hisself most highly." And most highly, indeed, has the Senator asserted his right to the loftiest places in the upper ethical sphere.

As Daniel Webster said upon that memorable occasion with reference to Massachusetts, the State of Maryland needs no vindication at my hands. With a few brief interruptions, from the very beginning of its history it has been a land of tolerance. Tolerance is the very crown, the very diadem, of its highest claims to respect. While it has always clung with unshaken fidelity to the principles of personal liberty and religious freedom, it is a State in which, I venture to say, as full a measure of obedience has been rendered to the law as in any other State.

Just think of the junior Senator from Alabama being so ill informed, when he was assailing the habits of our Maryland people in relation to law observance, as not to know that only a few weeks ago the National Crime Commission declared that law and order are maintained with remarkable success in Baltimore. That, as I have more than once said on this floor, is due in no small degree to the fact that the State of Maryland, by its refusal to enact a law-enforcement prohibition measure, has kept its own police authorities far removed from all contaminating contact with the Prohibition Unit.

How often in reading the tragic pages of prohibition history has my attention been called to collusion between municipal policemen and State constables and prohibition agents. Yet, if my memory serves me right, there is not one solitary instance recorded in which any policeman in the city of Baltimore or any State police officer in the State of Maryland has ever become involved with any prohibition agent in any violation of the Volstead Act.

Forsooth I am held up by the junior Senator from Alabama as a calumniator of the prohibition agent. I have repeatedly said that there are not a few brave and honorable men in the Prohibition Service, men as brave and honorable as any men who can be found anywhere, but again I add that the Senator should have more correct information than he appears to have before he makes such reckless statements as he made in more than one instance in the course of his speech.

Did he ever read the testimony taken before the subcommittee of the Senate Judiciary Committee in April, 1926, when General Andrews, the head of the Prohibition Unit, testified that out of a comparatively small force of a few thousand prohibition agents and administrators no less than 875 had been dismissed for violations of the Volstead Act, or for downright rascality in some form or other? I have seen it stated only recently that since General Andrews retired and was succeeded by Mr. Lowman, Mr. Lowman has dismissed for similar offenses some 600 more. Indeed, not very long after Mr. Lowman came into office, he complained that his arm had actually become fatigued with the exertion of writing out dismissals of corrupt prohibition agents.

Is the junior Senator from Alabama not familiar with the fact that when a civil-service examination was held a short time ago by the United States Civil Service Commission for the selection of prohibition agents and administrators it turned out that some of the men who applied for the privilege of examination, tempted, of course, by the opportunities that prohibition affords for illicit gain, had criminal records—a thing which, so far as I know, had never before been known in the history of the Government in relation to applicants for office, whether under the prohibition law or any other law?

Is the junior Senator from Alabama not familiar also with the fact that only a few days ago the United States Civil Service Commission decided that when the next examination for prohibition agents took place it was to be supplied with finger-prints of the applicants? Think of that!

The Prohibition Service is so deeply tainted with corruption, the character of many of the applicants for examination had been so scandalous that the United States Civil Service Commission felt justified in indulging in the same degree of suspicion that they would have been justified in entertaining had they been dealing with any ordinary group of criminals or crooks.

The idea that the South, or, if you please, the 11 Confederate States, can truthfully claim to have a blameless record in relation to prohibition, can not be sustained for a moment. Let me read just for a few moments from an address that I had the honor to deliver before the Institute for Public Affairs at the University of Virginia last summer:

Shortly after the beginning of the Senate prohibition hearings last spring I received newspaper clippings from quite a number of citizens of Atlanta showing that more persons had been lodged in police stations in that city for being drunk on the last Easter Sunday than had ever been lodged in them on any previous day in its history.

That was in the State of Georgia, the State that is supposed to be so dry that even the dew never collects there.

As is well known, more distilleries and fermenters were seized in Georgia during the fiscal year 1925 than in any other State of the Union. Only a few days ago the present Governor of Alabama was arrested for being in too close proximity to a case of liquor at a hunting camp, but it must be a source of gratification to even his sternest prohibition friends to know that apparently a negro, always a very "handy" thing in the South, as we southerners know, has been found who is willing vicariously to bear the burden of the governor's sin, if any.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BRUCE. I am sorry, but I covered that while the Senator was out. If he had remained here, he would have had an opportunity to interrupt me then.

Mr. BLACK. I will read the reply in a moment. I just wanted to ask if the Governor of Maryland had ever been arrested, or if that State's officers had the right to arrest any governor of the State for drinking liquor or violation of the prohibition law?

Mr. BRUCE. Our governor has never been arrested; and, so far as I know, has never given any occasion in his life for arrest.

Mr. BLACK. I asked this question, if the officers of Maryland had the right to arrest the governor for violating the law. That State has not passed any enforcement law at all, has it?

Mr. BRUCE. Unhappily for us, there are prohibition agents and a prohibition administrator there.

Mr. BLACK. I understand it would be unhappy for the Senator to have a prohibition agent anywhere in the world.

Mr. BRUCE. Not unhappy——

Mr. BLACK. The Senator said so.

Mr. BRUCE. Oh, yes; unhappy, I meant, because I regret the enactment of the laws which made it proper for them to be there.

Now I will continue reading the extract from the speech from which I have been quoting:

Recently Ben C. Sharpe, the Federal prohibition administrator for the Carolinas and Georgia, has issued a statement declaring—

"that there is more liquor in North Carolina, South Carolina, and Georgia now than there has been in the past three years."

A short time ago T. L. Caudle, the special prosecutor appointed by Governor McLean, of North Carolina, to assist in the prosecution of the former boss of a convict chain gang for killing two negro prisoners, admonished the jury that they should not disregard the testimony of witnesses for the State who had been in the chain gang, because they had been convicted only of violations of the prohibition law; and, turning toward the audience sitting in the court room, said:

"If I were to ask every man out there who has violated the prohibition law to rise, there wouldn't be a bench warmer left, with the possible exception of a few ministers and tea topers."

In a recent letter to the New York Herald-Tribune, R. Charlton Wright, the editor of the Columbia, S. C., Record, says:

"If there is, as a product of sincere conviction and honest observance of the law, such a reality as the "Dry South," I have yet to see it, and I have lived and journeyed all over it for more than 40 years."

In the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of March 11, 1926, will be found a letter from M. B. Wellborn, of the Federal Reserve Bank of Atlanta, to the Hon. W. D. Upshaw, who, to the infinite relief of everyone who values time and mental sanity, went down at the recent congressional election, in which the writer says:

"I may say that, from what I can learn, drinking is almost universal, not only in Atlanta but in every town in Georgia and throughout the South."

In still another respect the junior Senator from Alabama seems hopelessly deficient in prohibition knowledge. He said that there is nothing to warrant the idea that since the enactment of the Volstead law there has been any increase in arrests for drunkenness. Does he not know that every year the Moderation League of New York, of which such distinguished men as Elihu Root of New York City, Doctor Welch of Baltimore, and Bishop Fiske are directors, has issued a report touching arrests for drunkenness, and that each one of those annual reports has shown that during the year to which it related there was a marked increase in arrests for drunkenness over the total for the preceding year?

The last of these reports, which is just as accessible to the junior Senator from Alabama as it is to me, covers the year 1927. Let me further say that the statistics contained in those reports deal with conditions obtaining in upward of 500 cities and towns in the United States. Notwithstanding what the junior Senator from Alabama said about the sobriety that exists in his State, I entertain little doubt that if I had copies of those reports here they would show that the same increase in arrests for drunkenness that has gone on in the other cities and towns of the country has gone on in Mobile, Birmingham, Anniston, and other cities and towns of Alabama, though I have no right at this moment to affirm this positively.

I have had but little to say about prohibition conditions in other States than the Southern States, because the people of those other States, whatever may be the case in the South, are frank enough not to endeavor to draw any deceitful veil over the true facts bearing upon their condition. Does not the junior Senator from Alabama know that only a few days ago the fact was revealed in the press that the bootlegging industry in the city of Detroit in point of economic importance is second only to the vast automobile industry of that city?

I heard a Member of the Senate say a few days ago that at a recent banquet which he had attended in the city of New York one might have supposed, from the freedom with which liquor was circulating, that there was no such thing as the eighteenth amendment or the Volstead Act at all. Only a few days ago I heard another Senator—and this a Senator from one of the supposedly dry States of the South—say that when he was returning from his home in one of the Southern States about 10 days or two weeks ago the Pullman-car conductor in the coach in which he was riding stated to him that during the Easter holidays a number of sleeping cars had been chartered for the purpose of taking some hundreds of girls to their homes from a female seminary in one of the Southern States, and that when those coaches were vacated the porters on them collected and counted—I shrink from mentioning the total number—scores of empty half-pint whisky flasks.

That is one of the worst things about this vile system of tyranny. It holds out a lure to the young of the land of both sexes as dangerous as the false beacon lights which shipwreckers in the past kindled on the seashore. Prohibition, to a greater degree than anything else in our history, has been the corrupter of youth. It has also, as I have shown, worked such wholesale official faithlessness as nothing else in American history has ever worked. It has stained the columns of our newspapers from month to month and from week to week with human blood. It is a breeder of disrespect for all law. It is a training school for hardened criminals. It is the patron of espionage, perfidy, and hypocrisy. It is a desecrator of the church. Through the agency of the Anti-Saloon League it has been a deadly menace to the freedom of elections and to legislative independence. It has so many sins to account for that I would find it impossible in an hour to catalogue all of them.

How ridiculous, if I may use such a strong word, is the trite claim of the junior Senator from Alabama that the extraordinary era of material prosperity which this country has recently known has been due to prohibition. Why, an era of equal prosperity has distinguished the recent history of Canada. Indeed, in the last year or so the Canadian dollar has at times been exchanged above par for the American dollar. And yet, with two exceptions, the little sea-girt isle of Prince Edward and the sea-lapped peninsula of Nova Scotia, to both of which the bootlegger has access by water without any difficulty, there is not one solitary Province in the Dominion of Canada which has not for some time past been free from the restraints of prohibition. The remarkable flush of material prosperity which this country has experienced since the close of the World War is due, as every sensible man knows, to the economic effects of the war itself.

It is not in my heart to find fault with the junior Senator from Alabama for having made the speech which he has, for it has imported into the discussion of the prohibition question a measure of kindling animation that I wish to see continuously imported into it from now on until the day that the Democratic convention shall convene at Houston.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed without amendment the bill (S. 4405) authorizing the Detroit River Canadian Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Detroit River at or near Stony Island, Wayne County, State of Michigan.

The message also announced that the House had severally agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the following bills of the House:

H. R. 5695. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to equitably adjust disputes and claims of settlers and others against the United States and between each other arising from incomplete or faulty surveys in township 19 south, range 26 east, and in sections 7, 8, 17, 18, 19, 30, 31, township 19 south, range 27 east, Tallahassee meridian, Lake County, in the State of Florida;

H. R. 8110. An act withdrawing from entry the northwest quarter section 12, township 30 north, range 19 east, Montana meridian; and

H. R. 9112. An act for the relief of William Roderick Dorsey and other officers of the Foreign Service of the United States, who, while serving abroad, suffered by theft, robbery, fire, embezzlement, or bank failures losses of official funds.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11022) to extend medical and hospital relief to retired officers and retired enlisted men of the United States Coast Guard.

FOREIGN EXCHANGE AND EUROPEAN CURRENCY

Mr. ODDIE. From the Committee on Mines and Mining I report back favorably without amendment Senate Resolution 95, and I submit a unanimous report (No. 1164) thereon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SACKETT in the chair). The resolution will be read.

The resolution submitted by Mr. COPELAND on January 4, 1928, was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Mines and Mining be, and it is hereby, authorized to revise to date and publish with illustrations as a Senate document Serial 8, entitled "Foreign Exchange Quotations and Curves," and Serial 9, entitled "European Currency and Finance," both publications prepared under Senate Resolution 469, Sixty-seventh Congress, fourth session, said committee to employ such personal services and incur such expenses as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this resolution; such expenditures shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers authorized by the committee and signed by the chairman thereof.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, in this connection I wish to state that the Senate Commission of Gold and Silver Inquiry, of which I had the honor to be the chairman, was created in 1923 from the membership of the Committee on Mines and Mining of the Senate, of which I also am chairman, to conduct a research into the economic status of the gold and silver mining industries and to study the monetary demand for the precious metals, including the foreign-exchange situation.

After two years of intensive work and the publication of several important and timely studies on the subjects which the commission was charged to investigate, the period for which it was appointed to serve expired on March 4, 1925, leaving a portion of one of the most important branches of its work unfinished. However, since the commission was dissolved the interest aroused in financial and economic fields has been such that a persistent demand has continued that certain material be added to its publication on foreign exchange and European currency and finance and that they be brought down to date.

The Senate Committee on Mines and Mining has, therefore, given consideration to and has unanimously authorized me favorably to report Senate Resolution 95, introduced by Senator COPELAND, and providing for the revision to date and publication of two serials originally prepared and published by the Senate Commission of Gold and Silver Inquiry in the Sixty-eighth Congress.

Serial 8 is a compilation of daily exchange quotations of 18 foreign currencies, beginning with the armistice date in 1918, with corresponding curves indicating the daily, monthly, quarterly, semiannual, and annual fluctuations. Serial 9 is a comprehensive study of European currency and finance for the postwar period. Both of these publications presented for the first time information not otherwise available, which was extremely useful in studying postwar financial problems, and especially useful to the Dawes Commission and to many foreign countries in arranging their debt settlements with the United States. The data presented in these publications were also used as the basis for courses on international currency and finance in many of our universities.

The demand for these publications was so great that the Commission of Gold and Silver Inquiry ordered published the limit that could be printed under the statute—some 1,700 copies—and these were very soon exhausted. The Superintendent of Documents in order to satisfy the additional demand ordered an imprint of 1,000 copies. A letter from the Superintendent of Documents of March 10, 1928, states that he has no copies left of the first volume of serial 9 and only 25 copies of the second volume. These two volumes were sold by the Superintendent of Documents for 80 cents and 60 cents, respectively, and $1,400 was realized from their sale. Many requests for these volumes have been received and are continually coming in which can not be met. The demand for the revised edition would probably be heavier than for the original, and the amount that the Government Printing Office would derive from its sale would also be greater.

At the time of the original publication, as chairman of the Senate Commission of Gold and Silver Inquiry, I received a large number of letters, notably from the now Vice President, Mr. Dawes; Mr. Crissinger, formerly chairman of the Federal Reserve Board; Secretaries Jardine, Wallace, and Gore, of the Department of Agriculture; the late Secretary of War Weeks; First Assistant Postmaster General Bartlett; Dr. Julius Klein, Director of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce; Mr. Grosvenor M. Jones, chief of the finance and investment division of the bureau; and Dr. Jacob Hollander, professor of political economy of Johns Hopkins University. Also letters recently received from W. H. Steiner, associate professor of economics of the College of the City of New York; Marcus Nadler, associate professor New York University; and M. E. Jameson, librarian of the National Industrial Conference Board. All of these letters reflected the benefits which were being derived from the information made available in these publications. The letter of February 23, 1925, by Vice President Dawes in a general way states what other correspondents had emphasized, as follows:

> Since I wrote you the volume compiled under the direction of your committee upon European Currency and Finance has arrived. I have been reading it and now realize the unusual nature of the work and its extreme value. In the selection of those who have contributed papers on currency and finance exceptional judgment has been shown. The book is invaluable and most opportune. You and your committee are to be congratulated upon a contribution which is of immediate use to the economic, banking, agricultural, and commercial interests of the Nation. It is so timely as to be almost providential. * * *

About two and one-half years have elapsed since these original publications were made available, and during this period a great many changes have taken place in the currency and financial structures of many of the countries covered in the report. Many of the countries have resumed either the gold or gold exchange standard in line with the suggestions made in the original report, and if this additional period could be covered and the work revised to date it undoubtedly would be very valuable in solving many of the financial and currency problems with which we must now deal in advancing our foreign and domestic trade.

Since Senator COPELAND introduced Senate Resolution 95 he has received many letters on the subject, the most important correspondents being E. W. Kemmerer, professor of economics, Princeton University; Henry M. Robinson, member of the Dawes Reparation Commission; Paul M. Warburg; George E. Roberts, vice president National City Bank; Robert H. Bean, executive secretary American Acceptance Council; John T. Madden, director Institute of International Finance; Harvey E. Fisk, Bankers Trust Co.; Edwin R. A. Seligman, Columbia University; Norman Lombard, executive director the Stable Money Association; Willard L. Thorp, Amherst College; Irving Fisher, Yale University; Calvin B. Hoover, professor of economics, Duke University; Elisha M. Friedman, Toerge & Schiffer; J. K. Towle, assistant economist, the Chase National Bank; H. G. Friedman, Speyer & Co.; Lionel Sutro; Paine, Webber & Co.; Marcus Nadler, New York University; R. Warren, Case, Pomeroy & Co.; Stephen I. Miller, executive manager National Association of Credit Men; and Don C. Barrett, professor of economics Haverford College.

Professor Kemmerer has been most active in assisting foreign governments in reconstructing their currency and financial policies along sound lines, and his letter of January 17, 1928, to Senator COPELAND is as follows:

> I have just learned with great pleasure that on January 4 you introduced in the Senate a resolution (S. Res. 95) providing for a revision of the study on European currency and finance made a couple of years ago by Dr. John Parke Young under the auspices of the Commission of Gold and Silver Inquiry of the United States Senate. As a teacher and lecturer in the field of international finance I have found these reports very valuable and regularly require my students to read parts of them as class-room assignments. Furthermore, in the financial advisory work I have been doing for foreign governments, a brief description of which is given in the inclosed article, I have taken these volumes with me, and we have consulted them very frequently in connection with our foreign work. I sincerely hope that the bill providing for their revision and republication will be enacted.

Mr. Henry M. Robinson, formerly a member of the Dawes Commission, under date of January 13, 1928, wrote to Senator COPELAND as follows:

* * * I have had occasion to use these documents from time to time and believe that an up-to-date revision would be of great help in the discussions and examinations of the questions involved in our present and future international relations.

I sincerely hope that your resolution will be adopted.

Mr. Paul M. Warburg, under date of January 13, 1928, writes to Senator COPELAND as follows:

* * * I am writing to say that I believe that these volumes have been a very helpful contribution and of valuable assistance to those studying these problems. I feel certain that if a revision and reprint of these volumes could be authorized by the Senate it would be welcomed by students of the question and the financial community.

Mr. George E. Roberts, vice president National City Bank, and who has written the Economic Bulletin that has been widely distributed for a number of years, and was formerly Director of the Mint for a period of 14 years, writes to Senator COPELAND under date of January 10, 1928, as follows:

The volumes upon European currency, exchange, and finance, prepared by the Commission of Gold and Silver Inquiry, United States Senate, comprise the most complete and convenient record in existence of the changes in European monetary systems resulting from the war and of the exchange fluctuations during the period of instability. They were prepared by competent editors and form an invaluable record. Now that there is reason to believe that the period of instability is practically over, it is, in my opinion, highly desirable to have the reviews brought down to date and another edition printed. I understand that you are moving to this purpose, and I am writing to give my approval to this proposal. I think the papers by well-known economists which form a part of the original report should be included in the reprint, for the light they throw upon conditions at the time they were written. All of this information and discussion forms a record of the most extraordinary period in monetary affairs ever known.

The letter from Mr. Madden, director of the Institute of International Finance, under date of January 10, 1928, to Senator COPELAND is as follows:

* * * May I say that I hope that this resolution will prevail and that both publications will be authorized and prepared. We shall find them extremely valuable and useful in the work that we are doing in the Institute of International Finance which, as you will recall, is an independent fact-finding body for the purpose of furnishing information to investors in foreign securities in the United States.

The other letters reflect in a very large degree the same reasons for revising these two publications. The suggestion in Mr. Madden's letter that the revised edition of these publications would be useful in safeguarding the investments of Americans in foreign securities is an important one which should be taken into account by this committee, as there are now outstanding American investments in foreign securities in excess of $14,500,000,000, and the amount is increasing at the annual rate of from $1,000,000,000 to $1,500,000,000.

While the information made available in the original publications on European currency and finance and foreign exchange by the Senate Commission of Gold and Silver Inquiry, and the additional information to be included in the proposed revision, are important to the economic, banking, agricultural, and commercial interests of the Nation, they are also primarily essential to the gold and silver mining industries.

At the time the commission was appointed in 1923 the problem of restoring the gold standard in many countries of the world was widely discussed, and there was some question concerning the probable success of this movement. In many countries paper-currency inflation had driven both gold and silver from circulation, and in order to accommodate the needs for small currency substitute coinages were put into circulation which either contained no silver or a materially reduced amount. Since the principal demand for both gold and silver is monetary, the maintenance of the monetary positions of these two metals is vitally important. The fact that many countries since 1923 have resumed the gold standard in some form and have replaced subsidiary coinages having no intrinsic value by new silver coinages, thereby increasing the market for gold and silver, is reassuring. The progress already made in monetary reform is also reassuring that the gold standard is to be maintained, and that silver will continue as the principal metal for subsidiary coinage.

It has been expressed by numerous economists and financial authorities that the original publications of the Senate Commission of Gold and Silver Inquiry on European currency and finance and foreign exchange materially assisted in expediting the restoration of more normal currency and financial conditions throughout the world, and these same authorities are requesting that a revision to date be made by way of recording progress in international currency and finance, and with a view of rendering additional assistance in currency and financial reform. In further securing the maintenance of the gold standard and in extending the currency use of gold and silver the revision of these publications will undoubtedly benefit the gold and silver mining industries and safeguard the financial and economic position of the United States.

The small amount involved in the revision of these publications is negligible in comparison with the great benefits to the American public. The estimated cost of revising this material is about $17,000, and the work should consume approximately six months.

The letters which have been received by myself, Senator COPELAND, and others from such outstanding authorities would seem to constitute the most competent testimony as to the value of the work contemplated by the pending resolution.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, is there any reason why this resolution might not be put upon its passage immediately while the Senate is aware of what has happened and of the work that has been done by the committee?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolution?

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I hope the resolution will go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will go to the calendar.

Mr. ODDIE. I ask that the resolution may be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the resolution will be so referred.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I wish to thank the chairman of the committee for his illuminating statement regarding this matter. It is one which has attracted the attention of financiers, bankers, teachers, and many other persons interested in the subject of finance, and I hope that in due time the resolution may be adopted.

CONSTRUCTION OF RURAL POST ROADS

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCMASTER in the chair) laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1341) to amend the act entitled "An act to provide that the United States shall aid the States in the construction of rural post roads, and for other purposes," approved July 11, 1916, as amended and supplemented, and for other purposes, which was to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That section 11 of the Federal highway act, approved November 9, 1921 (42 Stat. L. 212), as amended or supplemented, be further amended by adding at the end of the second paragraph thereof the following:

"And provided further, That in the case of any State containing unappropriated public lands and nontaxable Indian lands, individual and tribal, exceeding 5 per cent of the total area of all lands in the State in which the population, as shown by the latest available Federal census, does not exceed 10 per square mile of area, the Secretary of Agriculture, upon request from the State highway department of such State, may increase the share payable by the United States to any percentage up to and including the whole cost on projects on the primary system of Federal-aid highways and on projects on the secondary system when the latter is a continuation of a route on the primary system or directly connects with a route on the primary system of an adjoining State, but such State shall allocate and expend during the same fiscal year upon some other project or projects on the Federal-aid system, under the direction of the Secretary of Agriculture, the amount it would have been required to expend upon such project."

SEC. 2. In every case in which, in the judgment of the Secretary of Agriculture and the highway department of the State in question, it shall be practicable to plant and maintain shade trees along the highways authorized by said act of November 9, 1921, and by this act, the planting of such trees shall be included in the specifications provided in section 8 of said act of November 9, 1921.

SEC. 3. The system of Federal-aid highways on which Federal funds may be expended in any State may exceed 7 per cent of the total highway mileage of such State by the mileage of roads on said system within national forest, Indian, or other Federal reservations therein.

SEC. 4. Federal funds may be expended on that portion of a highway or street within a municipality having a population of 2,500 or more, along which from a point on the corporate limits inwardly the houses average more than 200 feet apart: Provided, That no Federal funds shall be expended for the construction of any bridge within or partly within any municipality having a population of more than 30,000, as shown by the latest available Federal or State census; but this limitation shall not apply in the case of an interstate bridge, including approaches, connecting such municipality in one State with a point in an adjoining State which may be within a municipality having a population of not more than 10,000.

SEC. 5. All acts or parts of acts in any way inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed, and this act shall take effect on its passage.

Mr. ODDIE. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator explain briefly what the House amendment is?

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, the bill passed the Senate a number of weeks ago and went to the House. The House eliminated the section which raised the limit of $15,000 a mile for public roads to a larger amount. The matter was controversial; there was some discussion in the House on this matter. There is a general understanding that this question will be taken up again in the December session. I hope it will be because I want to see that section placed in the law.

Another section was eliminated relating to highway markers. There was some discussion in the Senate in regard to that provision. It is embodied in a measure which is now before the Judiciary Committee of the Senate. There are two other provisions added by the House that are in the nature of emergency provisions. I hope, Mr. President, that the Senate will adopt the House amendment.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, will the Senator explain what change the House bill makes in existing law with reference to highways and their construction?

Mr. ODDIE. It adds two provisions—one is section 3, which permits the States to compute their 7 per cent of the total road mileage on which Federal aid may be applied, as provided in the Federal highway act of 1921, without counting the roads in forest reserves and Indian reserves. It enables certain States to complete comparatively small stretches of Federal-aid highways.

Mr. BRATTON. That is the major change?

Mr. ODDIE. Yes. Another change, Mr. President, is that in section 4, the first part clarifies the present law in regard to the building of these roads within the boundaries of municipalities having a population of over 2,500, in places where houses are 200 feet apart. There is a question with the Comptroller General as to the wording of the present law which this wording clears up. There is a short provision regarding bridges which is necessary to clear up some provisions in the law.

I will ask that the matter be acted on now by the Senate.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Nevada if this report is acceptable to the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR]?

Mr. ODDIE. I do not think this involves anything in which the Senator from Tennessee is interested. I am quite sure he would not object to these House amendments to the bill which passed the Senate several weeks ago.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Nevada.

The motion was agreed to.

TAX REDUCTION

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 1) to reduce and equalize taxation, provide revenue, and for other purposes.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I should like to have a correction made in the permanent RECORD. In the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of May 14 the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] is reported as having said:

> But I am advised by the Actuary of the Treasury that under our plan of reduction the taxpayers with incomes above $70,000 will get $9,600,000 reduction.

It should read that "under the plan of the majority" the reduction to such taxpayers will be $9,600,000. The Senator from North Carolina was made to state just the opposite to what he intended to assert as a fact. I ask that that correction may be made for the permanent RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SACKETT in the chair). The official reporters will make the correction.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I wish to correct the statement of the Senator from Massachusetts that under the plan of the majority the reduction to such taxpayers would be $9,600,000. I do not want that statement to go in the RECORD.

Mr. SIMMONS. The RECORD will stand as to what I said about the $9,600,000 reduction, as corrected by the Senator from Massachusetts. The report of the Finance Committee submitted by the Senator from Utah shows on page 9 (Report 960) by adding the figures in the table of probable reductions this amount to be correct.

Mr. SMOOT. I am not objecting at all to the correction so far as the speech of the Senator from North Carolina is concerned, but the Senator from Massachusetts is mistaken when he says that under the plan of the majority the reduction to such taxpayers would be $9,600,000.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I am merely correcting what the Senator from North Carolina was reported to have said. He did not intend to say that his plan would lead to a reduction of the amount stated for the class of surtax payers with incomes in excess of $70,000. As to the accuracy of the amount named the tables of the Treasury Department confirm it.

Mr. SMOOT. That is correct.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. In fact, his plan did not give this class of large taxpayers any reduction. Yet the RECORD shows that the Senator of North Carolina is alleged to have said that they were given a reduction of $9,600,000.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator is correct in that. The only correction I want to make is that the Senator said also that according to the majority plan there would be a reduction of $9,600,000 above the bracket mentioned.

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not know about that; but, Mr. President, I wish to thank the Senator from Massachusetts for discovering this inadvertence of mine. I wish to say to the Senator that I did not read my notes over last night; they went into the RECORD, so far as I was concerned, without any correction in them being made. I would have noted the mistake if I had read the report.

That, however, is not what I asked the Chair for recognition for. I am advised that in the RECORD there is no reference to the substitute which I offered for the majority plan. Of course, I had offered the amendment several days ago, and stated that I presented it to the Senate; but there seems to be no reference in the RECORD to that amendment. So I am advised by one of the force. I wish the RECORD to be corrected so as to refer to the substitute.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator wants to have the substitute printed?

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes; I want to have the substitute printed.

Mr. FLETCHER. There is a reference to it, but the amendment proposed by the Senator does not appear set out.

Mr. SIMMONS. That is what I mean. It ought to be set out, and I ask that in the permanent RECORD it be set out.

Mr. SMOOT. That is right.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I now send to the desk the amendment which I had filed as a substitute for the majority plan of reduction of surtax, and which did not appear in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The substitute will be printed in the permanent RECORD just preceding the vote.

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. President, will the Senator please explain the amendment?

Mr. SIMMONS. It is the amendment which I offered as a substitute for the minority plan of reducing the surtax. It does not appear in the RECORD, and I wish it to appear in the RECORD. It was voted on yesterday.

Mr. SIMMONS's amendment, submitted and voted upon yesterday, follows.

In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the committee:

"Upon a net income of $12,000 there shall be no surtax; upon net income in excess of $12,000 and not in excess of $14,000, 1 per cent in addition of such excess.

"Twenty dollars upon a net income of $14,000, and upon net income in excess of $14,000 and not in excess of $18,000, 2 per cent in addition of such excess.

"One hundred dollars upon a net income of $18,000, and upon net income in excess of $18,000 and not in excess of $22,000, 3 per cent in addition of such excess.

"Two hundred and twenty dollars upon a net income of $22,000, and upon net income in excess of $22,000 and not in excess of $26,000, 4 per cent in addition of such excess.

"Three hundred and eighty dollars upon a net income of $26,000, and upon net income in excess of $26,000 and not in excess of $30,000, 5 per cent in addition of such excess.

"Five hundred and eighty dollars upon a net income of $30,000, and upon net income in excess of $30,000 and not in excess of $34,000, 6 per cent in addition of such excess.

"Eight hundred and twenty dollars upon a net income of $34,000, and upon net income in excess of $34,000 and not in excess of $38,000, 7 per cent in addition of such excess.

"One thousand one hundred dollars upon a net income of $38,000, and upon net income in excess of $38,000 and not in excess of $42,000, 9 per cent in addition of such excess.

"One thousand four hundred and sixty dollars upon a net income of $42,000, and upon net income in excess of $42,000 and not in excess of $46,000, 12 per cent in addition of such excess.

"One thousand nine hundred and forty dollars upon net income of $46,000, and upon net income in excess of $46,000 and not in excess of $52,000, 16 per cent in addition of such excess.

"Two thousand nine hundred dollars upon net income of $52,000, and upon net income in excess of $52,000 and not in excess of $60,000, 17 per cent in addition of such excess.

"Four thousand two hundred and sixty dollars upon net income of $60,000, and upon net income in excess of $60,000 and not in excess of $80,000, 18 per cent in addition of such excess.

"Seven thousand eight hundred and sixty dollars upon net income of $80,000, and upon net income in excess of $80,000 and not in excess of $100,000, 19 per cent in addition of such excess.

"Eleven thousand six hundred and sixty dollars upon net income of $100,000, and upon net income in excess of $100,000, 20 per cent in addition of such excess."

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I take this occasion to say that I think we have disposed of most of the controverted questions in connection with this tax reduction bill. We have lost a good deal of time as a result of Senators making speeches upon other questions than the tax bill which is before the Senate. I hope we may now return to the tax bill and confine ourselves to it until we have finished it.

Mr. SMOOT. I hope so, too, Mr. President.

Mr. SIMMONS. If we are going to have tax reduction at this time, it is high time that the Senate should act.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I only desire to make an observation.

I want to assist as much as I can in expediting the consideration of the pending bill; but I do think it is quite essential, in view of the fact that the session is to close two weeks from next Saturday, that at a very early opportunity I may be able to take up the conference report on the farm relief bill. I do not think it will take more than 10 minutes.

I did not want any understanding to go around that might imperial the consideration of the conference report on the farm relief bill at some time when it will not interfere with the consideration of the tax bill.

Mr. CARAWAY. I hope the Senator will bring it up this afternoon, because it ought to be acted upon.

Mr. McNARY. I hope I may have the opportunity; and that is the reason why I simply wanted to make that interjection.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, in connection with the statement of the Senator from North Carolina, if there is a real desire to make progress on the tax bill, let me suggest to those who really want it to pass that this amendment to repeal the inheritance tax be abandoned. It is perfectly certain that if that amendment is offered we shall be here for three or four days longer, at least; and that would imperil the final passage of the bill. I do not see why we should be called upon to fight out that proposition under those circumstances.

There are some of us who do not care very much about tax reduction at this session. We would prefer to apply the surplus to the public debt. We have gone along with those who do believe in tax reduction and with the bill which has been proposed by the committee; but, speaking for myself, and I think for a number of others, we are not interested in the passage of a tax reduction bill; and if the inheritance-tax repeal is to be placed on the bill, or attempted to be placed on it, it necessarily will take some three or four days to dispose of it. It may change the attitude of some Senators toward the bill. What that means to tax reduction those in charge of the bill can determine for themselves.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, as long as the Senator has referred to some observations I made, I desire to say that the committee made no recommendation with reference to the inheritance or estate tax. Neither has the minority offered any amendment with reference to it; but an amendment has been offered, as I understand, by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BINGHAM]. Of course, if he offers that amendment, we shall have to act upon it in some way or other.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, with regard to what has just been said by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] and the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], of course, I regret to feel obliged to do anything which would lead to three days' debate. I can assure the Senator that I have no desire to indulge in three days' debate or in three hours' debate. In fact, it will take me but a few moments to present the arguments in favor of the abolition of the inheritance tax as they are seen in the State of Connecticut.

It is well known that the State of Connecticut joined with the State of Florida and sundry other States in the case before the Supreme Court in an effort to prove that this tax in its present form was not constitutional.

We believe that it interferes with the rights of the States. It is the States that make the laws through which wills and inheritances become effective. It is our belief that since it is only the States that make these laws, the power of taxing estates which come to those who inherit through the State laws should be limited to the States.

Greatly as I regret to seem to take any action which would lead to three days' debate, and much as I hope that the debate may be very much limited, in view of the fact that I promise not to take more than 10 or 15 minutes in debating it myself, I hope very much that the prophecy of the Senator from Idaho will not be fulfilled. In view of the stand which my State has taken in regard to this matter, and the intense interest in it on behalf of the authorities of the State, including the governor and the tax commissioner and the majority of the people in the State, I regret very much that it will be necessary for me, at the proper time, and when so indicated by the Senator in charge of the bill, to ask that my amendment, now lying on the table, be considered.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I understand the position of the Senator. I made the suggestion that I did in the interest of time, and also in the interest of this tax bill and those who are interested in it; but, as the Senator feels obliged to present his amendment, those who wish to discuss the inheritance tax fully can only abide by the program of those in charge of the bill.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, it seems to me that the question of presenting or not presenting the amendments which have been offered by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BINGHAM] ought not to be settled by a threat of a filibuster or a threat of delay. The Senator from Connecticut has a perfect right, as any Senator on this floor has, to offer any amendment he chooses to offer to this bill. To say that if a certain amendment is to be offered it means three or four days' delay, or that Senators are going to filibuster, or something of that sort, does not settle anything; and it seems to me that it is a mistaken notion that a Senator has the right to make a proposition of that kind here. I think the States that are interested in this matter—and 23 States have already passed resolutions favoring the elimination of the estate tax, and other States are interested that have not yet acted on it—have a right to present their amendment.

Mr. BORAH. Undoubtedly, Mr. President, they have a right; and I am not objecting at all. I am perfectly willing that it shall be done, and we shall take the time to discuss it. I made no threat; but I have stated a fact, which the Senator will find to be a fact when we get through with it. I felt justified in stating a situation which I know to exist to those who are interested in the passage of this bill and also in the interest of time.

Mr. FLETCHER. Very well. This is a long session of Congress. We do not have to adjourn until next December. The Senate has already taken a position on this matter. It is not a new question. There is no need of any lengthy debate about it. As far as I am concerned, I will guarantee to limit my remarks on it to 30 minutes. I propose to be heard on it, however; and, to be consistent, we ought to do what we have done heretofore.

We have favored almost unanimously in this body the elimination of the estate tax. We ought to insist upon that position as a matter of policy and principle. If we yield now because somebody says the bill will be delayed, or something of that sort, then the States that are interested in this problem have lost their position entirely and are obliged to yield because of some demand of that kind, not because of the merits of the proposition.

The Senator from Connecticut has proposed two amendments. One is to eliminate the estate tax; the other is to fix new rates at about one-fifth of what they are in the present law and to eliminate the 80 per cent credit to the States. The Senate can take one or the other of those positions, it seems to me.

Mr. BORAH. And both mean about the same thing.

Mr. FLETCHER. They are quite different. They may come eventually to the same thing; but there are two propositions. Some Senators on the other side favor one and do not favor the other. Some Senators on this side favor one and do not favor the other. It is a proposition upon which the Senate ought to be willing to vote, and vote without any unnecessary delay or any unusual discussion. I think we understand the question pretty well. At any rate, it ought not to take over a couple of hours to dispose of both those amendments.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I wish to say to the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] that I do not know of any purpose on this side of the Chamber to discuss at any length the question of the repeal of the estate tax. I think only one or two or three Senators at the outside will desire to speak at all, and they probably will speak very briefly; but I want to say to the Senator from Florida that under the conditions that exist on the other side of the Chamber I do not think he is likely to get much of an expression of the real opinion of the Senate upon this question.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment, which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 40, line 14, after the word "sales," it is proposed to insert "or other disposition of property."

Mr. SMOOT. That is just to correct a clerical error.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. I send to the desk another amendment, which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 194, line 25, it is proposed to insert the following new section:

Determination of deficiency if tax is reduced by legislation: Where a return of tax imposed by Title III of the revenue act of 1924 was made before February 26, 1926, then, for the purposes of determining a deficiency, the amount of tax shown on the return shall be reduced by the difference between such amount and the tax at the rates under section 301 of such act, as amended by the revenue act of 1926, which should be imposed upon the transfer of the net estate as shown on the return.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Utah if that matter was discussed in the committee?

Mr. SMOOT. This is a committee amendment, which we had the experts prepare. These are all amendments which have been agreed to in the committee.

This amendment would take care of the following situation:

The executor, prior to the passage of the revenue act of 1926, filed a return of the estate tax imposed by the revenue act of 1924, showing, for example, a tax of $100,000. By the revenue act of 1926 the estate tax rates imposed by the 1924 act were retroactively reduced, so that on the basis of the facts disclosed by the return as to the value of the net estate the tax at the reduced rates would be only $75,000. The Bureau of Internal Revenue, however, finds that the net estate is larger than that disclosed in the return, and that the correct amount of the tax at the reduced rates should be $85,000. Under the present law this situation can be taken care of by an abatement of the $100,000 tax shown by the return to $75,000 and the sending of a deficiency letter for the $10,000 deficiency, thus giving the executor the right to take the case to the Board of Tax Appeals. A few cases, however, exist at the present time in which it has been found impossible to abate the tax. This amendment, therefore, takes care of those few cases by providing that the tax shown on the return shall be reduced by an amount equal to the tax reduction retroactively granted by the 1926 act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. I send another amendment to the desk, and ask for its adoption.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 239, line 25, after the word "was," insert the words "the value of the property at the time of death of the decedent or was."

Mr. SMOOT. As stated in the committee report, the purpose of the section to which this amendment is offered, was to validate returns filed in accordance with the regulations in force prior to the decision in the McKinney case. These regulations provided that the basis for computing gain or loss should be the value of the property at the time of the death of the decedent, in the case of a sale by the executor of property acquired from the decedent. After the decision in the McKinney case, the regulations were amended, so that the gain or loss would be computed upon the basis of the property in the hands of the decedent. The taxpayers who relied upon the new regulations, in filing their returns for 1927, are in the same position as those who relied upon the prior regulations. Accordingly the amendment provides that in either case the regulations will be ratified at the taxpayers' option.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. I send another amendment to the desk, and ask for its adoption.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 241, strikes out lines 1 to 21, inclusive, and in lieu thereof insert the following:

(1) If the deduction has been claimed by the estate, but not by the beneficiary, it shall be allowed to the estate;

(2 If the deduction has been claimed by the beneficiary, but not by the estate, it shall be allowed to the beneficiary;

(3) If the deduction has been claimed by the estate and also by the beneficiary, it shall be allowed to the estate (and not to the beneficiary) if the tax was actually paid by the legal representative of the estate to the taxing authorities of the jurisdiction imposing the tax; and it shall be allowed to the beneficiary (and not to the estate) if the tax was actually paid by the beneficiary to such taxing authorities;

(4) If the deduction has not been claimed by the estate nor by the beneficiary, it shall be allowed as a deduction only to the person (either the estate or the beneficiary) by whom the tax was paid to such taxing authorities, and only if a claim for refund or credit is filed within the period of limitation properly applicable thereto;

(5) Notwithstanding the provisions of paragraphs (1), (2), (3), and (4) of this subsection, if the claim of the deduction by the estate is barred by the statute of limitations, but such claim by the beneficiary is not so barred the deduction shall be allowed to the beneficiary, and if such claim by the beneficiary is barred by the statute of limitations, but such claim by the estate is not so barred, the deduction shall be allowed to the estate.

(b) As used in this section, the term "claimed" means claimed—

(1) In the return; or

(2) In a claim in abatement filed in respect of an assessment made on or before June 2, 1924.

On page 241, line 22, strike out "(b)" and insert in lieu thereof "(c)."

Mr. SIMMONS. I understand that is largely the present bill, with a few changes to perfect it.

Mr. SMOOT. As explained in the committee report, section 703 of the bill as reported to the Senate has attempted to relieve the situation presented by the uncertainty of the law as to the deductibility, in computing net income, of amounts paid as estate, inheritance, succession, or legacy taxes. The section as reported was intended to validate the deductions taken in the return of the taxpayer.

It has developed, however, that certain taxpayers have claimed the deduction, not in their original return, but by a claim in abatement. It has further developed that the deduction which was claimed in the return of the estate, for example, has been disallowed to the estate, and the statute of limitations has now run on the filing of a claim for credit or refund where the deduction under the provisions of the bill should be allowed. The amendment allows a deduction to the beneficiary in such case if he claims the deduction by a claim for credit or refund.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I had not seen the amendment until this moment. I want to be sure that it does not give a valid status to claims which have been barred by the statute of limitations.

Mr. SMOOT. No; it does not.

Mr. KING. If it merely adjusts the language so as to avoid confusion arising between claims submitted by the beneficiary, by the estate or by the heirs, I have no objection. I was not quite clear as to subdivision 5. As I stated, I had not heard it before it was read. If I may be permitted, I will read that subdivision in order that I may see whether there is any foundation for the apprehension which I have entertained. It reads:

Notwithstanding the provisions of paragraphs (1), (2), (3), and (4) of this subsection, if the claim of the deduction by the estate is barred by the statute of limitations, but such claim by the beneficiary is not so barred, the deduction shall be allowed to the beneficiary, and if such claim by the beneficiary is barred by the statute of limitations, but such claim by the estate is not so barred, the deduction shall be allowed to the estate.

That is not as clear as the noonday sun. I ask my colleague and the experts if this means that a claim which has been barred by the statute of limitations, whether it be presented by the beneficiary or by the estate, as such, is entitled to cognizance and payment, or is to be recognized as a claim for deduction. If so, I shall be opposed to this amendment. I am not clear, from this hasty reading of it, whether this is an attempt to validate or to revive barred claims or not. I am opposed to removing the bar of the statute of limitations, if that is the purpose of this amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. I assure the Senator that it is not.

Mr. KING. I shall not object to the consideration of the amendment, but I state to my colleague that I shall examine it further, and if upon reaching the conclusion that it is an attempt to remove the bar of the statute, I shall ask for a reconsideration.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator will reserve the right for a vote in the Senate if he desires to call it up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. I send another amendment to the desk and ask for its adoption.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to say to Senators that this is the amendment regarding installment sales which has been agreed to in the committee, and it is satisfactory to all interested in this particular provision. I can read the full explanation if it is desired.

Mr. COUZENS. Let us have the amendment read.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 243, after line 5, insert a new section as follows:

SEC. 705. INSTALLMENT SALES—RETROACTIVE.

(a) If any taxpayer by a return or an amended return made prior to February 26, 1926, changed the method of reporting his net income for the taxable year 1924 or any prior taxable year to the installment basis, then, if his income for such year is properly to be computed on the installment basis—

(1) No refund or credit of income, war-profits, or excess-profits taxes for the year in respect of which the change is made or any subsequent year shall be made or allowed, unless the taxpayer has overpaid his taxes for such year, computed by including, in computing income, amounts received during such year on account of sales or other dispositions of property made in any prior year; and

(2) No deficiency shall be determined or found in respect of any such taxes unless the taxpayer has underpaid his taxes for such year, computed by excluding, in computing income, amounts received during such year on account of sales or other dispositions of property made in any year prior to the year in respect of which the change was made.

(b) Nothing in this section shall be construed as in any manner modifying section 607, 608, 609, or 610 of this act, relating to the effect of the running of the statute of limitations.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator just what question is dealt with in that.

Mr. SMOOT. This refers to what is known as the "double-taxation" rule, applicable during the transition period in the case of a taxpayer changing from the accrual to the installment method of returning income. This rule was embodied in the 1919 regulations of the Treasury. The 1920 regulations, however, abandoned the rule. Then, in 1925, the Board of Tax Appeals held the 1920 regulations invalid, because the taxpayer's income would not be properly reflected during the transition period. We are all convinced that the "double-tax" rule is sound, but we think that some relief should be granted to those who relied upon the 1920 regulations.

I will make just a brief statement, so that the Senator may have in concise form just what it is.

Mr. SIMMONS. Before the Senator does that, let me ask if this does not relate to sales on the installment plan.

Mr. SMOOT. It does.

Mr. SIMMONS. We had a great deal of trouble handling that question in the committee, and it was the opinion of many of us that the original amendment proposed by the committee would result in double taxation. Neither the majority nor the minority desired to impose double taxes upon anybody, but there was some difficulty in framing an amendment which would accomplish the purpose desired, and we asked the experts to see if they could not exercise their ingenuity so as to provide against that contingency; and this amendment, I am advised by the actuary who sits by me here, he thinks does accomplish it, and I understand the Senator thinks so.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; that is the purpose, so far as deficiencies are concerned.

Mr. SIMMONS. I have not had time myself to examine the matter thoroughly.

Mr. DILL. I want to ask the Senator whether this is retroactive or not.

Mr. SMOOT. It is retroactive.

Mr. DILL. How many taxpayers will it affect?

Mr. SMOOT. I can not state just how many. There are quite a number of them.

Mr. DILL. I do not think anybody could understand it unless he sat down and took a week to study it, and I do not see why we should pass an involved retroactive provision. If it were not retroactive, I would not object to it.

Mr. SMOOT. Let me make the explanation, and I think the Senator will be satisfied.

The whole situation regarding the installment sales situation is explained in detail in the committee report. Briefly, the revenue act of 1926 attempted to apply a remedy to the situation resulting from the decision of the Board of Tax Appeals in the Todd case, holding invalid the regulations authorizing the return of income on the installment basis. Under the 1926 act, however, it seems rather certain that the double-tax rule must be applied retroactively, just as it was intended to apply to the future. As a result there are a large number of small taxpayers who changed from the accrual to the installment basis who now, several years after the change was made, will be forced to pay additional taxes, notwithstanding the fact that they relied upon the regulations of the Treasury authorizing the shift and applying the single-tax rule.

The amendment which I am proposing goes as far to relieve these taxpayers as is proper. Briefly, it provides that no refunds shall be made unless, computed on the double-tax rule, the taxpayer has actually overpaid his tax; but that in the determining of the amount of a deficiency, the tax liability will be computed under the single-tax rule.

Mr. CARAWAY. I have no objection to that, but what I am trying to find out is this: Some of them changed in 1926, as I understand, the mode in which they made their returns. In making that change did they get an advantage over those who did not make the change?

Mr. SMOOT. It does not apply to 1926 and there is no provision——

Mr. CARAWAY. That is not what I asked the Senator.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, may I answer the Senator?

Mr. CARAWAY. I should be glad to have the Senator do so.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. In every case in which the taxpayer changed, it is probable he did it because he thought he was going to get a diminution in his taxes.

Mr. CARAWAY. Did it have that effect?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. In many cases it did. We have put a chart on the wall showing how it did have that effect.

Mr. CARAWAY. What does the amendment now accomplish?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. The amendment substantially allows the status quo to remain.

Mr. CARAWAY. In other words, he got it and keeps it?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Those who got the advantage keep it, but new men can not come in and claim similar advantages, so that the system has to stop now.

May I explain to the Senator how the equities of the thing seem to lie? There was no particular attention given to this subject in any legislation down to 1926, but prior to that, back in 1919 or 1920, there were regulations which fixed the method of accounting of people who earned profits out of the installment selling. Those regulations, down to the early part of 1920, permitted the taxpayer to report on the installment basis.

Mr. CARAWAY. Tell me exactly what that meant—that they only had to account for the amount they had collected?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. They had to account for that percentage of each year's payments which constituted profit. To give a simple illustration, if I sold a piano on three years' time with installments over three years, and if one-third of the selling price of the piano was profit, I would only have to pay taxes in each of those three years on one-third of my profit. It had the effect to keep them in the lower brackets. The Treasury regulations permitted that after 1920. The earlier regulations required the taxpayer to pay a tax upon all the collections from prior sales, in order to prevent an abnormal showing of taxable income during the years of change when the actual profits were as large or larger.

Mr. CARAWAY. And whether it was ever paid or not?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Whether it was ever paid or not. If it was not paid, he charged off the lost installments as deductions in the year in which they were lost.

Mr. CARAWAY. Could he do that if he recovered the property?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. If he got the property back, that complicated the question still further, because that was salvage. Those regulations stayed in effect perhaps eight months, and there was so much agitation against them that along about the end of the year 1920 the regulations were again changed to permit the installment basis. So much confusion had arisen between those taxpayers who had accounted when the regulations were one way and those who had filed their returns when they were the other way and there was such a disparity between them that in the 1926 act, to put an end to those seemingly endless wrangles, we provided that the returns should be all right if made in accordance with the regulations in effect at the time the returns were filed, regardless of which way was provided, and that the regulations should be treated as having the force of law while they were in effect. We thought we had done that, but a decision of the Board of Tax Appeals since the 1926 act was to the effect that what Congress really meant was to compel all those taxpayers to account on the accrual basis, thereby yielding the larger tax. I do not believe that Congress meant that at all.

Mr. CARAWAY. I think I understand. This simply validates the whole transaction.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. The proposed amendment offered by the Senator from Utah means that the situation is to remain as it is, that if the taxpayer tries to get a refund he has to get it on the construction of the law which is most adverse to him, while if the Treasury chooses to pursue him, then that law which is most adverse to it will obtain. It is utterly indefensible logically.

Mr. CARAWAY. I think so myself.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. And yet either of the other conclusions is indefensible.

Mr. DILL. What will happen if we do not include this provision?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Then we have to go to one alternative or the other. We have to say that all the accounts have got to be opened up for a settlement on the accrual basis or else we have to make refunds to everybody who did not account on the installment plan. Both of those are wrong.

Mr. DILL. There should be some way to write this provision so that a man of ordinary intelligence and knowledge of the English language could understand it.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. We have done that for the future.

Mr. DILL. I am talking about the amendment now pending.

Mr. SMOOT. The amendment does that identical thing.

Mr. DILL. It may do it; but a man would have to be told in a good many ways just what it means.

Mr. SMOOT. I will assure the Senator that the individuals who make the installment sales understand it.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. They all have lawyers here and every lawyer has a microscope, and I am sure they will all understand it.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Utah if it is not a fact that the Treasury Department held hearings and the installment dealers have now agreed upon the amendment?

Mr. SMOOT. They have.

Mr. COPELAND. That is what I was about to ask.

Mr. SMOOT. I think I said that in the beginning. It is a compromise.

Mr. CARAWAY. It is saying that the Board of Tax Appeals was wrong. It is a reversal of their decision.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. No; we are compromising between two alternatives, each of which is indefensible, and it is due largely to vacillation of the Treasury Department between the two methods of accounting. In saying that I do not mean to reflect on any particular administration because that vacillation has characterized the enforcement of this part of the law ever since it began, right down to 1926.

Mr. CARAWAY. I would like to say that I would be glad to see a law so written, if it were possible, that construction by the department would be limited just as much as possible. There ought not to be this constant making of regulations and changing of peoples' rights under the law. That has led to all the confusion and dissatisfaction. Everybody I know has a grievance.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. There is no doubt about that. We all agree it is better to have a bad law written plainly than any kind of a law written in this way.

Mr. CARAWAY. We should make it so plain that everybody would know what we are doing.

Mr. SMOOT. I think we will know hereafter.

Mr. CARAWAY. If that is so, I shall be very much astonished.

Mr. SMOOT. The representatives all agree to it.

Mr. CARAWAY. I have no doubt that in the morning there will not be 5 per cent of the Senators who would agree exactly on what we did to-day. When the Treasury Department makes its interpretation of the law, it will be found that none of us understood it.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator from Pennsylvania a question to see if I correctly understood him. I understood the Senator to say that if a claim for a refund was made by a taxpayer, the rule of construction to be adopted would be the one most strongly against the applicant.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. That is correct.

Mr. REED of Missouri. If the Treasury Department should undertake to collect the taxes, then the rule of construction would be most strongly against the Treasury.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. That is correct. Logically that is indefensible, but what it amounts to in substance is saying that the taxpayers who in the past have filed their returns and paid their taxes on either of these regulations shall be allowed to rest at that. They shall not get any advantage by changing retroactively their method of accounting, nor shall the Treasury be heard to say, "What you did in the past was wrong." While that can not be defended logically, it is a compromise, apparently satisfactory to the Treasury and to this group of taxpayers, between two alternatives, each of which seems indefensible. We can not allow them to come back and file new amended returns on the basis that pays the lowest possible tax. That is not fair to the great mass of taxpayers who have paid their taxes and let the thing lie. We can not, on the other hand, in fairness override the regulations retroactively which were in force part of the time and say that the man who filed a return in the spring of 1921, under perfectly good regulations then in effect, shall be assessed an additional tax because he did everything that the law then seemed to require. Hence this compromise.

Mr. REED of Missouri. The effect of the compromise, then, if I understand the Senator, would seem to be that if a man makes an application for a return of tax, the rule which was hardest against him will be applied.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. That is true.

Mr. REED of Missouri. While, if the Treasury makes application for additional taxes, the rule which was hardest against it will be applied. That would look like no one would get anything.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. That is what we hope will result. Let me give the Senator a particular case that I think will make it clear.

In 1917 Sears, Roebuck & Co. filed a return showing their profits on the accrual basis. In 1919, after the issuance of the installment sales regulations embodying the "double tax" rule, they changed from the accrual to the installment basis, for 1918 and subsequent years. That was when the tax rates were very high. In 1920 the regulations were changed and the double-tax rule eliminated.

One of their competitors did not file its return within that eight months' period, or filed an amended return after the regulation had been changed and before they paid the taxes. They paid, in accordance with the regulation then in effect, a very much lower rate on the same transaction.

Each of those concerns did a thing that was perfectly legal at the time they did it. Neither of them is entitled to any blame or any credit for having done what they did do. If we are going to open this up and go back and put them all on the same basis we have got to abolish the statute of limitations and really go back to 1913, which is physically impossible. It would result either in great hardship to the Treasury, and consequently to other taxpayers of the country, or to this group of taxpayers who sell on the installment basis. We could not do that.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Will the Senator let me interrupt him at that point?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Certainly.

Mr. REED of Missouri. He is making a very clear statement, but he has gone beyond the point in which I am particularly interested. Let us take the illustration. Sears, Roebuck & Co. paid their taxes in accordance with the regulations which existed prior to the time they paid. Another concern, paying a tax for the same period, and paying it at a later date, paid in accordance with regulations which required it to pay a smaller amount.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. That is correct.

Mr. REED of Missouri. If this rule is applied, of course, Sears, Roebuck & Co. would be the concern that would be applying for a return of taxes.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. They would get three or four million dollars in refund.

Mr. REED of Missouri. They would apply for it; but under the rule which is is proposed to establish they would not get it, because the rule to be established is that that ruling of the Treasury Department which was most harsh toward them should apply.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. That is right.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Now, the other concern, of course, will not file; and if they do not, but the Treasury Department files for the payment of further taxes, then we would apply the rule against the Treasury which existed when the second concern paid its taxes. So that the net result of the whole business is that Sears, Roebuck & Co., having perhaps paid too much, will not get it back if they apply because of the harsh rule which will be applied against them, and the other concern never will apply; but if the Treasury should proceed, it will be confronted by the rule that the law as it existed at the time of the second concern making its return will apply.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. That is exactly true.

Mr. REED of Missouri. So that neither one practically will get anything, and the Treasury will get no result.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. That is substantially correct.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Why do we not, with this object in view, provide that all persons who paid their taxes in accordance with the ruling at the time in existence shall stand acquit and that no one shall be entitled to recover anything back?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Because there are many cases in which the taxpayer still owes the Government money even under the ruling that is most favorable to him, and there are other cases where the Government has taken too much taxes even under the ruling that is most adverse to it. So we can not pass a general amnesty in so many words; we have got to leave it open for adjustment.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I understand the purpose of this legislation. It seems to me that it could be gotten at by a direct provision, but I am not insisting on that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment submitted by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] on behalf of the committee.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Utah, does he not find that some real-estate people are interested in this provision?

Mr. SMOOT. A great many of them are interested.

Mr. COPELAND. I have had innumerable letters from real-estate dealers who are selling on the installment plan. I want to be reassured, may I say to the Senator, that this amendment has been drawn after consultation with such interested persons.

Mr. SMOOT. This amendment does not cover real estate at all. The real-estate dealers have never been subject to double taxation under the rulings of the Treasury. The ruling of the Treasury in this respect has never been applied to them as it has been applied to merchants who sell sewing machines or pianos or organs or other articles.

Mr. COPELAND. It might have been applied to real-estate men, I presume.

Mr. SMOOT. But it never has been, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. COPELAND. Then, so far as this particular amendment is concerned it has been drawn after consultations with the persons interested.

Mr. SMOOT. After consultation with every one of them.

Mr. COPELAND. And all concerned are satisfied that this is as far as it will go?

Mr. SMOOT. This is the very best compromise that could possibly be arrived at.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I do not think anybody is altogether satisfied with it.

Mr. SMOOT. I say it is the best compromise that could be arrived at.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Utah on behalf of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to come in on page 243, after line 21.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

SEC. 323. REFUNDS AND CREDITS TO BE REFERRED TO THE JOINT COMMITTEE.

No refund or credit of any income, war profits, excess profits, estate, or gift tax in excess of $75,000 shall be made after the enactment of this act, until after the expiration of 30 days from the date upon which a report giving the name of the person to whom the refund or credit is to be made, the amount of such refund or credit, and a summary of the facts and the decision of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue is submitted to the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation. A report to Congress shall be made annually by such committee of such refunds and credits, including the names of all persons and corporations to whom amounts are credited or payments are made, together with the amounts credited or paid to each.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 243, after line 5, it is proposed to insert a new section, to read as follows:

SEC. —. INCOME FROM SOURCES WITHIN POSSESSIONS OF THE UNITED STATES—RETROACTIVE.

The provisions of section 262 of the revenue act of 1926 (relating to income from sources within possessions of the United States) shall be retroactively applied in computing income, war-profits, and excess-profits taxes for the taxable years 1918, 1919, and 1920.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Utah for an explanation of that amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BINGHAM] desires to speak upon it this afternoon. If he shall not cover the case I shall be glad to answer any further questions the Senator from Wisconsin may wish to ask.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, before proceeding, may I ask the Senator from Utah, Does the amendment as he has offered it comply with the requests made upon him by the War Department through the Secretary of War?

Mr. SMOOT. I think the War Department desired to go a little further than the amendment goes.

Mr. BINGHAM. As I understand, the amendment makes no provision for the relief of those who actually paid their taxes. Is that correct?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. BINGHAM. It merely relieves those who have not paid?

Mr. SMOOT. That is correct. The War Department desired to have the amendment amended so as to refund all taxes that have been paid in the Philippines, but the committee decided that it did not want to go that far.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from Connecticut yield to me?

Mr. BINGHAM. I yield to the junior Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. I wish to ask whether this amendment just offered has been adopted?

Mr. SMOOT. It has not been. The amendment, however, does not change the present law relating to dividends from corporations in the Philippine Islands, and it does not provide for the repayment of any tax which has been paid if the statute of limitations has run.

The War Department, as I answered the Senator from Connecticut, desired to go further than this amendment goes so as to provide that wherever an individual in the Philippine Islands had paid the tax it should be refunded.

Mr. KING. May I make an inquiry of my colleague, if the Senator from Connecticut will yield further to me?

Mr. BINGHAM. I am glad to yield to the Senator.

Mr. KING. How can we justify a course that relieves from taxation those who ignored or defied the law and retains in the Treasury the taxes paid by those citizens who obeyed the law and paid the taxes required of them? It would seem that those in the latter class could properly demand that the taxes paid by them be refunded.

Mr. SMOOT. All I can say in answer to the question is that there are very few who have paid. The principal justification for the amendment is that real hardship will result if we now force those persons who did not think they were subject to the tax to pay taxes for 1918, 1919, and 1920. So far as the principle itself is concerned, as outlined by my colleague, there is very little to be said. However, as I have said, there are very few who have paid, and we have tried to keep the bill in such shape as to avoid any retroactive provisions that would take money out of the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I am opposed to the proposed retroactive amendment which relieves those who should have paid taxes in 1918, 1919, and 1920 from their obligations to the Government. If we are to relieve them, then there is a moral obligation to refund to those who did pay. Let the delinquents fight it out with the Government, and let the Government collect from them what they should have paid.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, before the Senator from Connecticut proceeds, the Senator from Utah said this amendment did not apply retroactively to corporations.

Mr. SMOOT. It does not.

Mr. HARRISON. My understanding is that it does apply to corporations the same as to individuals.

Mr. SMOOT. That is as to the dividends received from corporations, I would say to the Senator. It does not change the rule as to dividends from corporations in the Philippines. The committee decided not to do that; and there was good reason why we should not do it. In fact, in many ways a corporation doing business in the Philippines has advantages over the individual carrying on business.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I should like to proceed.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut has the floor.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Before the Senator proceeds I should like to ask a question.

Mr. BINGHAM. I prefer not to yield further.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I merely wish to ask one question. I wish to ask the Senator from Utah whether this amendment is proposed on behalf of the committee?

Mr. SMOOT. The committee had this whole question before it at the time and decided that nothing should be done. The committee has not voted upon the amendment now offered; but I will say to the Senator from Wisconsin that the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BINGHAM] is compelled to leave and he desired to speak on the amendment. I simply offer the amendment now so that the Senator from Connecticut may speak upon it.

Mr. BINGHAM. I appreciate the courtesy of the Senator from Utah.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President——

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, the Senator from New York has been on his feet for some time. I yield to him.

Mr. COPELAND. I merely want to ask the Senator from Connecticut if he is going to give consideration to the number of taxpayers in the Philippines who apparently are imposed upon by the present conditions?

Mr. BINGHAM. I hope to do so.

Mr. COPELAND. I will yield the floor to him that he may proceed, because I am in the fullest sympathy with his position.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, briefly the situation in the Philippines is this: When the income tax law was passed in 1913 it applied to everybody in the Philippine Islands alike—to Americans doing business there, to Chinese doing business there, to British and other foreigners doing business there. It was a fair law so far as business men in the Philippines were concerned. In 1916 when we amended the previous income tax law we continued that provision, and it was still fair so far as Americans were concerned, because the American business man in the Philippines was not taxed any more than was the foreign business man, his competitor across the street. In 1918 when we passed that very drastic law—which was actually passed in 1919 but it is usually referred to as the act of 1918—the most drastic income law which we have ever passed, it was not made applicable to the Philippines; it was assumed that it would not apply to anyone in the Philippines. However, the Philippine Legislature was given the privilege of continuing the 1916 act and of changing that law in such a way as to enable the Filipinos to enact their own income tax law.

Mr. President, may I correct my previous statement in so far as to say that the laws of 1913 and 1916, although they applied to all business men alike, inured to the benefit of the Philippine government? In other words, the amount collected under those laws was not paid into our Treasury but into the treasury of the Philippines. When we passed the law in 1918, or shortly thereafter, the Philippine Legislature changed the terms of the law of 1916 under which business men had been paying taxes to the Philippine treasury and imposed a very much lower tax of their own. I think it was 2 per cent.

There was some misunderstanding as to whether the law of 1918 applied to the American business men or not. It certainly did not apply to foreign business men doing business in the Philippines. A few Americans believed that it applied, and paid the taxes under it. There was a contested case brought by an American who paid the tax under protest and immediately entered suit. The suit was finally determined against him. In other words, he was obliged to pay. Under the determination of that suit all Americans in the Philippines are liable to be sued by the Philippine treasury for the taxes due under the 1918 law, which is not applicable at all to their competitors across the street; in other words, for the mother country, we did an extraordinary thing. We placed a burden of taxation upon our own business men who had had the courage and the foresight to go into business in the Philippines, which we did not place upon their competitors across the street. The same thing was true of the next act which we passed.

Our attention was first called to this situation by the Wood-Forbes Commission, which in September, 1921, cabled the Secretary of War the fact that all foreigners doing business in the Philippines, no matter whether they were British, French, Spanish, or Chinese, were exempt from our income tax law, whereas Americans, their competitors across the street, were obliged to pay them in addition to the tax imposed by the Philippines.

In other words, the Treasury of the United States has now changed its policy, or the Congress has changed it for it, so that whereas in the beginning both foreigners doing business in the Philippines and Americans doing business in the Philippines paid their taxes into the Philippine treasury; after 1919 the foreigners only paid the small Philippine tax. The Americans also paid the same tax, and, in addition, were liable to pay the American tax.

The Treasury Department never has believed that it was the intention to charge them with that; and there has been no determined effort on the part of the Treasury to collect from American business men in the Philippines taxes which might have been due under the revenue acts of 1918, 1921, or 1924.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. BINGHAM. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. I am sure the Senator wants to call attention to the fact, too, that the Wood-Forbes Commission recommended in set terms that Americans be placed on the same tax basis as other nationals, and that they be not penalized because they are Americans.

Mr. BINGHAM. The Senator is correct?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BINGHAM. I yield.

Mr. KING. If the position of the Senator is correct, that is, if American citizens who engage in business in the Philippine Islands are not to pay corporate or income taxes in the United States derived from their business enterprises or investments in the islands, what shall our policy be toward these Americans who have invested billions of dollars in other countries from which they derive large profits? Our citizens who engage in business in foreign countries have to pay taxes there. Shall we, because of that fact, relieve them of paying taxes to our own Government? Shall the plea that they are compelled to meet fierce competition in countries where they are conducting business justify us in placing them in a special and favored class—and rendering them immune from any of the burdens connected with the carrying on of the Government of the United States?

Mr. BINGHAM. That is a little different question from the one involved here; but I will say to the Senator that most foreign countries do just that.

Mr. KING. It is true that Great Britain grants certain benefits to British subjects who live in China, but not to those who reside in Great Britain.

Mr. BINGHAM. As I understand, if British citizens go to Manila to compete with our own business men, the British Government does not tax them for the profits that they make under the Philippine government.

Mr. KING. They get a credit for the amount of tax paid by them to the Philippine government.

Mr. BINGHAM. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; that is what they do.

Mr. President, the Senator from Connecticut referred to the fact that our Government had not made any effort whatever to collect these taxes. If the Senator will look at the law of 1918 he will find that the collection of the taxes was put in the hands of the officials of the Philippine Islands, and, of course, they have not tried to collect any of them.

Mr. BINGHAM. I am glad the Senator brought that out. The fact remains, Mr. President, that most Americans doing business in the Philippines have not yet paid their taxes under the acts of 1918, 1921, and 1924.

Mr. SMOOT. No; and I have not any doubt it was because they were told not to.

Mr. BINGHAM. They have not paid them. If they had had to pay them many of them would have gone into bankruptcy, as was pointed out in the report of the Wood-Forbes Commission.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. BINGHAM. I do.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have been somewhat in sympathy with the position taken by the Senator from Connecticut; but I want to ask him, for my own information, to what extent these American business houses send their products to the United States for sale, and to what extent they are permitted to enter free of duty.

Mr. BINGHAM. Perhaps the Senator from Utah can answer that question better than I.

Mr. SMOOT. What is the Senator's question?

Mr. BARKLEY. I have asked the Senator from Connecticut a question and he has referred me to the Senator from Utah. To what extent do the American business men in the Philippine Islands enjoy the privilege of shipping their products to the United States without the payment of duty?

Mr. SMOOT. Everything comes in free.

Mr. BINGHAM. It comes in just as free whether it originates with a foreign concern in the Philippines or with an American concern.

Mr. BARKLEY. To what extent do these American business concerns in the Philippines send their products to America?

Mr. SMOOT. Take the sugar crop: It virtually all comes here with the exception of some of the low-grade sugar that they produce, which they sell to China. It all comes in here free.

Mr. BARKLEY. What is the amount of tax which they pay in the Philippines to the Philippine government?

Mr. SMOOT. The producers of sugar?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; the local taxes.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not know.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, with regard to the sugar companies which are owned by Americans——

Mr. SMOOT. The Americans own a very small percentage of them.

Mr. BINGHAM. I was just about to say that a very small percentage of the sugar companies were owned by Americans; but the companies that are owned by Americans are almost without exception owned by Americans whose residence is in this country or in the Territory of Hawaii, where they pay their regular income taxes on all income derived from those sugar plantations.

Mr. BARKLEY. How does the local tax there compare with the local taxes in the States, counties, and cities of the United States which must be paid by business men who engage in business in the States, counties, and cities, and who also have to pay this Federal tax?

Mr. SMOOT. It is very much lower. It is a very, very low tax.

Mr. BINGHAM. May I call the attention of the Senator from Kentucky to this fact: What we do in the Philippines is just as though right here in the city of Washington there was a British or French or German concern across the street from a concern owned by Americans, and the one owned by Americans had to pay our income taxes, while the men across the street, competing with the Americans, did not have to pay income taxes. That is the situation. We put a burden on the fact of a man's being an American in our own territory, under our own flag.

Mr. BARKLEY. Take the Senator's illustration. We will say that a Frenchman is down here on Pennsylvania Avenue engaged in competition with some American. He pays the local District taxes.

Mr. BINGHAM. He does.

Mr. BARKLEY. He pays no taxes to the French Government.

Mr. BINGHAM. But he pays taxes to the American Government—just the same taxes that his competitor pays.

Mr. BARKLEY. But, because he does not pay taxes to the French Government, does the Senator mean that we ought to relieve the American citizen on the other side of the street from the payment of taxes to the Federal Government, in order that he may not be loaded with a burden?

Mr. BINGHAM. Oh, no; all I am asking is that we shall treat the American exactly as we do the Frenchman.

Mr. SMOOT. That is just exactly what we are doing.

Mr. BARKLEY. To do that we would have to relieve him of all Federal taxes; would we not?

Mr. SMOOT. No. Mr. President. The only case that I know about of a foreigner who might do business in the District of Columbia and be relieved from taxes at home is the case of a British national. The French, and the nationals of all the other governments, have to pay their tax. There is only one country that is an exception to the rule, and that is Great Britain.

Mr. BARKLEY. Is the Senator from Utah in favor of relieving Americans in the Philippine Islands from this Federal tax?

Mr. SMOOT. No; I am not in favor of the amendment.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I do not think the answer is quite responsive to what the Senator from Kentucky asked. He spoke about the taxes charged on materials brought in from the Philippines. It would not make any difference whether they were shipped in by Americans or by British.

Mr. SMOOT. That was admitted.

Mr. COPELAND. All right. The purpose the Senator from Connecticut has in mind is that Americans in the Philippines shall be placed upon exactly the same basis as the nationals of other countries.

Mr. SMOOT. The nationals of Great Britain.

Mr. COPELAND. Yes.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BINGHAM. Certainly.

Mr. COUZENS. If this is done for Americans doing business in the Philippines, why will we not have to do the same thing for our merchants doing business in competition with British merchants, for example, in the Argentine and in all other countries?

I do not see how we can segregate Americans doing business in the Philippines from Americans doing business in any other country. In other words, if they are going to be exempt in the Philippines they ought to be exempt in the Argentine and all the rest of the world where they do business.

Mr. BINGHAM. But the difference is that we can not make laws for the Argentine, and we do make laws for the Philippines, and under the present law we penalize a man for being an American.

Mr. COUZENS. But we can exempt the American doing business in the Argentine from our Federal taxation and accomplish the same result that the British try to do when they exempt their merchants doing business in foreign countries.

Mr. BINGHAM. That is another question.

Mr. COUZENS. If it is done in one case it ought to be done in all.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, is it true that the British Government relieves Englishmen in China and in Japan and all other foreign countries from the payment of a domestic tax to the Government of Great Britain?

Mr. BINGHAM. Yes; the British Government believes in favoring the Britisher who goes into foreign countries to do trade, because they believe that their foreign trade is so valuable to them that they will do everything possible to encourage it; and the British Government, being the government over the people most engaged in foreign trade, follow the practice of encouraging their foreign traders by not obliging them to pay the local income tax.

Mr. BARKLEY. Then why should we not extend the same privilege to Americans in China and Japan and any other country where England relieves them of taxation?

Mr. BINGHAM. I shall be glad to vote to do that; but that is not what we are asked to do at the present time. What we are asked to do under this amendment, and under the substitute which I shall offer in a moment, is to see to it that we do not penalize an American for going to do business in one of our insular possessions, which is what we are actually doing now.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the amendment that is before the Senate at this moment applies only to the taxable years 1918, 1919, and 1920. I understand that the Senator is going to offer another amendment which shall apply hereafter. I do not know whether the Senator is going to offer that amendment or not; but this is the retroactive feature applying to those that have not paid the tax for 1918, 1919, and 1920. After the act of 1921, of course, there was no chance of a misunderstanding, because it was specifically provided that they should pay that tax. I think, and everybody else thought, that it did for 1918, 1919, and 1920, and it did under the law; but for those years the collection of the tax was thought to be under the officials of the Philippine Islands, and no effort was made to collect them.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Connecticut a question.

A great deal of American capital has been invested in the Philippine Islands in the production of sugar, for instance, which competes with our sugar. Does the Senator believe we ought to exempt from taxation people who invest in the sugar industry in the Philippine Islands for the purpose of coming here and underselling our sugar?

Mr. BINGHAM. No, Mr. President. As I said a few moments ago—I think the Senator was not in the Chamber at the time—practically all of those people to whom the Senator refers who have invested their money in sugar plantations in the Philippines are Americans who live in the United States or in the Territory of Hawaii, and pay the regular Federal income tax; and there is no effort whatever to relieve them of paying that. This is a matter which applies to Americans living in the Philippines, chiefly merchants and small industrialists who are engaged in business in the Philippines, in competition with Spaniards and others who are obliged to pay no tax to the United States Government at all. It is simply an effort to put those of our citizens who have the courage and the ambition to go out and help in the development of the Philippine Islands on exactly the same tax basis that the foreigners and nationals of other countries are on.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Suppose American citizens have gone into the Philippines and organized a corporation there. Would that corporation be exempt?

Mr. BINGHAM. If they lived in the Philippines.

Mr. BROUSSARD. That is just the same argument that can be advanced against Americans who invested in Cuba. We have done this for the Philippine Islands. Under the Underwood bill, their importations were limited to 300,000 tons.

Under the provisions of the Underwood Act, sugar was to go on the free list three years after the enactment of the law; and in the following year, 1914, that was repealed. It failed to re-establish the limitation on Philippine sugar. To-day we are receiving free of duty from the Philippines 500,000 tons of sugar, and if they double their production next year, we will have no limit at all. American capital goes there and produces sugar in a foreign country and imports it to this country; I say a foreign country because the Philippines are not a part of this country, as the Hawaiian Islands or Porto Rico are. They bring that sugar here and compete with us, without paying a cent of duty. I would not be willing to exempt the payment of taxes on corporations that they have organized in the Philippine Islands, in addition to the privilege they have to bring their sugar in free of duty. I think it is unfair to the domestic sugar producers. Doubtless there are other lines of industry producing agricultural products that come in and compete with American farmers. I am not in favor of that. I recall some years ago opposing such a provision in the case of China, because I knew that if we once adopted it we must apply it to other sections of the world that were friendly with us. I think the principle is vicious. I would not agree with it at all; I am much opposed to it.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, would the Senator be in favor of not taxing foreigners, Frenchmen, for instance, who were here in the city of Washington doing business, competing with our people, because they have to pay taxes at home? Would the Senator be willing to remit the income taxes of foreign concerns in the United States?

Mr. BROUSSARD. I do not think we should.

Mr. BINGHAM. Exactly. Then why does the Senator favor putting a penalty on Americans who are living under our flag in the Philippines, when he would not put that penalty on those who are living in the United States?

Mr. BROUSSARD. I assume that if it is a Frenchman, the French Government taxes him. If the French Government does not, there is no way for us to remedy that. The equities I think are entirely the other way.

Mr. SMOOT. The French Government does tax them.

Mr. BROUSSARD. I suppose they do.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I would like to say this to the Senator from Louisiana, that the sugar business in the Philippine Islands will be carried on because of the nature of the climate. If it is not carried on by Americans, it will be by somebody else. The Senator's relief, I think, lies not in opposition to the plan proposed by the Senator from Connecticut, but in a change in the tariff law on sugar.

Mr. BROUSSARD. I would like to tax every pound of sugar coming from the Philippines. There is no reason why it should come in here free of duty.

Mr. COPELAND. The matter we have to determine is whether Americans are going to exploit the Philippines and develop the country, or whether we are going to impose such hardships on them that they can not do business there, and the Dutch and the British and the French and other nationals will go in and do the business.

Mr. BROUSSARD. May I say this to the Senator from New York. Practically 90 per cent of the investments in sugar plants in Cuba are of American capital. We do not exempt them. We have a duty on their product, giving them a 20 per cent preferential. In the case of the Philippine Islands, we have no duty at all. So that to ask that the sugar from the Philippines shall come in free is asking quite a great deal more than the Americans who have a billion and a half dollars invested in Cuban sugar to-day are getting.

Mr. BINGHAM. May I say to the Senator from Louisiana that about 85 per cent of the Philippine sugar pays no tax to us at all, because the plants are owned and operated by the Filipinos or by foreigners. There is only about 15 per cent, as the Senator from Utah has said, that is owned by American capital, and nearly all of that capital is from people living in this country who pay the income tax.

Mr. BROUSSARD. That is the very reason I am opposed to it. If they had only 2 per cent, and we exempted them from the payment of tariff duty and then exempted them from the payment of the income tax, in a very short time the experience we would have in the Philippines would be that the American capital would control the sugar production of the Philippine Islands, and we would have much more trouble after that. I do not want to encourage the production of any agricultural or industrial product in any foreign country by remitting their taxes, or by granting special favors in the matter of tariffs. Let our people go outside and compete with the home people if they care to, but they must meet the conditions other people have to meet.

Mr. COPELAND. Then the logic of what the Senator says is that no American can go into the Philippines, because if he does not raise sugar, he will raise lumber, or he will raise something else that will be in competition with Americans at home.

Mr. BROUSSARD. I do not want them to compete in lumber. I do not want them to compete in anything we produce.

Mr. COPELAND. The Senator does not want Americans to do business in the Philippines.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Yes; I do want Americans to do business in the Philippines.

Mr. COPELAND. How can they do it if they are not encouraged to go on with their work?

Mr. BROUSSARD. I think the Senator from New York would give them a bonus for going there.

Mr. SMOOT. Spaniards are building plants there right now. There are two going up now, with a capacity of 5,000 tons a day. The junior Senator from Montana knows what profits they are making, because I saw a statement made by the largest sugar factory to him in which it was said they were paying only 40 cents a day for their labor, and shipping their sugar here free of any duty whatever.

Mr. COPELAND. Then why does not the Senator from Utah, the great apostle of the tariff, correct that evil? If his plan were to be carried out, every American would be driven out of the Philippines.

Mr. SMOOT. I will tell the Senator what I would be perfectly willing to do in the Philippine Islands. There was provided a limit of 300,000 tons of sugar that might come in here free. It was stated before the committee in 1913 that at no time in all the history of the Philippine Islands would they raise 300,000 tons. They are producing now 587,000 tons, and I am perfectly willing to state to the sugar producers of the Philippine Islands, I do not care whether it is an American company manufacturing sugar or Spanish people manufacturing it, "You can have a free market in the United States for 500,000 tons of sugar." The other they use at home. Whenever any Spaniard wants to go in there and make additional amounts of sugar, let him pay the tax on it. I would be perfectly willing to do that, giving Americans there every chance in the world.

Mr. COPELAND. I do not see why the Senator, who is interested also in encouraging beet-sugar raising in this country, has not done that. But this is not the way to do it.

Mr. SMOOT. I am perfectly aware of that.

Mr. COPELAND. This is not the way to do it, making it impossible for Americans to compete in the Philippines with the nationals of other countries.

Mr. SMOOT. The American has every advantage in the Philippines that the national of every other nation has, even if he has to pay the tax, just as citizens from every other country of the world pay a tax, with the exception of Englishmen. England, of course, depends upon her foreign trade. Her very life is wrapped up in it. She says, "You get out of England. We do not want you here. We want you to go to such and such a country and do business, and if you will do that, we will not tax you." All of the profits go back to England, there is no doubt about that. An Englishman who will go into a foreign country still has his love for his home, and his investments are nearly all made in English bonds or English loans.

Mr. BINGHAM. Does the Senator think that the Englishman has any greater love for his country than the American has for his; or any more desire to go back to his home, or to pay his taxes?

Mr. SMOOT. No; I do not think so.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, the object of this amendment, which I now send to the desk and ask to have read as a substitute for the amendment proposed, is merely to give the Americans doing business in the Philippines the same privileges that we give the Englishman doing business in the Philippines, and no greater.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, am I quite right in my understanding that the contention is that our fiscal policy ought to be regulated by the English Parliament, and if the English Parliament is quite willing to exempt Englishmen who do business abroad the Congress of the United States ought to follow the precedent thus set and exempt Americans doing business abroad?

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, the remarks of the Senator from Montana would be entirely applicable if the proposal were that we should remit taxes to Americans doing business in China, Argentina, or any other foreign country. That is not the question at issue at all. We have our possessions in the Philippines. We desire to have our citizens go there and do business, in order that it may redound to our own credit and to their credit and to their children's credit. But at the present time we insist that they do business there, as compared with foreigners, under a handicap. If the foreign nation charges the same income tax to their nationals doing business abroad that we do, it is true that there is no handicap, but, as the Senator knows, most of the foreigners doing business in the Philippines are British. It is the British concern which is successful. Our American concern across the street is obliged to pay the same Philippine tax that the British merchant pays, and, in addition to that, our income tax as well, which simply means that he has to go out of business.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Am I quite correct in my understanding that the exemption to which the Senator refers is under what we call the China act, under which Englishmen may incorporate themselves under the laws governing Hong Kong, and those who are incorporated under that act are exempt from the British income tax?

Mr. SMOOT. That is true.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That is the situation. In other words, as stated by the Senator from Utah, they offer a premium to the Englishman who will go out and incorporate himself under the laws of the island of Hong Kong.

Mr. BINGHAM. Yes, Mr. President; as I said to the Senator before, that would be apropos if we were asking for the same privilege for Americans doing business under foreign flags. But this is a question of Americans doing business under the American flag, and being put under a handicap in comparison with foreigners doing business in the same place.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The English have a fiscal policy, and by reason of the fact that the English have a fiscal policy, it is argued that we ought to accommodate our fiscal policy to theirs.

Mr. BINGHAM. In so far as Americans under our own flag are concerned.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Of course, that is all we can do.

Mr. BINGHAM. We could do more.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That we ought to accommodate our fiscal policy with reference to Americans who go abroad to do business to the English policy.

Mr. BINGHAM. Does the Senator mean to imply that going to the Philippines is going abroad?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. No; I regard the Philippines——

Mr. BINGHAM. This relates only to the Philippines, and the Senator referred to going abroad to do business.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I understand that perfectly well, but how can the Senator from Connecticut distinguish between a man who goes to the Philippines to do business and a man who goes to China to do business?

Mr. BINGHAM. If the Senator will look at the flag, he can see quite a difference. I ask that the amendment which I send to the desk be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 161, immediately succeeding subdivision (3) of section 251, add the following subdivision:

(4) This subsection shall apply retroactively to the years 1918 to 1927, inclusive, and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue is hereby authorized to remit, refund, and pay back any excess of income or profit taxes paid for said years pursuant to the provisions of the revenue acts of 1918, 1921, 1924, and 1926: Provided, That a claim therefor is filed within one year after the enactment of this act, anything in section 322 to the contrary notwithstanding.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. If the Senator pursues his argument, then he ought to apply it to continental United States as well as to the Philippines.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, may I say to the Senator from Montana that in the continental United States to-day we tax the foreigner doing business, for instance, here in Washington, just the same as we tax the American across the street, whereas in the Philippines we tax the American across the street and do not tax the foreigner.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The foreign country does not tax him.

Mr. BROUSSARD. They do not belong to this country, and we have no right to tax them.

Mr. BINGHAM. What right have we to tax the foreigner doing business in Washington?

Mr. BROUSSARD. They have subjected themselves to our jurisdiction.

Mr. BINGHAM. How about those going to the Philippines?

Mr. BROUSSARD. That is an entirely different proposition.

Mr. BINGHAM. Oh, no, Mr. President. When the act of 1913 and the act of 1916 were passed we applied them to foreigners doing business in the Philippines.

Mr. CARAWAY. Why do we not do that now?

Mr. BINGHAM. That would be the answer.

Mr. CARAWAY. Why does not the Senator offer an amendment to make the foreigner pay the same rate of tax that an American pays? Then, he would not be offering an amendment to induce people to export capital of the United States to the Philippines.

Mr. BINGHAM. Just how the Senator can say "exporting" when we follow the flag——

Mr. CARAWAY. If the Senator imagines that he has the same rights in the Philippine Islands that he has in the city of Washington, he would better read his history again. None of the smiles of wisdom will ever quite breach over the distinction. If you wanted to make things equal, if you did not want to do something for some particular person, you could make your tax laws apply to the foreigner in the Philippines. You can do that in exactly the same number of words that you use now in an attempt to extend a favor to somebody to get him to go to the Philippine Islands.

Mr. BINGHAM. If the Senator will introduce such an amendment, I shall be glad to vote for it. All I am seeking is to secure fair play for the American doing business in the Philippines.

Mr. CARAWAY. Is it not strange how particularly interested we are in somebody who will do business somewhere else instead of here? So much money has to be raised to run this country, but amendments are offered here to try to get the American business man to go somewhere else to do business.

Mr. BINGHAM. There never was any effort under the law of 1913 or 1916 to oblige that money which was collected in the Philippines under the income tax law to be paid into the Treasury of the United States. There was no effort made to make Americans in the Philippines pay their taxes into the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. CARAWAY. There is none now.

Mr. BINGHAM. Oh, since 1918 there has been.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BINGHAM. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. The way it strikes me, if I may say to the Senator from Arkansas, is that by a wise fiscal policy we could encourage the development of the Philippine Islands by Americans. If we could encourage Americans to go there and develop the resources of that country, I think it would redound to our great financial advantage.

Mr. CARAWAY. How would it redound to our financial advantage if we are not going to tax them?

Mr. COPELAND. We might be more considerate of them.

Mr. CARAWAY. The Senator is very willing to encourage American people go over there and then, if they establish a hive of bees, take the honey away from them later on.

Mr. COPELAND. I am perfectly willing to have the Senator put it that way. If we have to have a further bounty to have our people go there, all well and good. It is true that Americans can not compete with foreigners in the Philippines unless we do make some concession to them.

Mr. CARAWAY. I have heard that same thing said about China, that an American can not do business anywhere unless we pay a bounty. If we are going to engage in the payment of bounties, we have lots of territory in the United States where we might offer bounties to get people to develop.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Arkansas yield to me?

Mr. CARAWAY. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I would like to make another suggestion. As I look at it, we are doing the same thing, or attempting to do the same thing, that was attempted in the ship-subsidy legislation.

Mr. CARAWAY. Absolutely.

Mr. NORRIS. We are giving to those people a subsidy that we do not give to our own people, or rather we are giving it to some of our own people who are doing business there. It seems to me we ought also consider in connection with those people who are doing business in China, the Philippines, Nicaragua, and other foreign countries, that it costs the taxpayers of the United States a whole lot of money to keep the marines there and to keep the Navy there. That is no idle dream. It has not been long since I read in the newspapers of a meeting of the chamber of commerce of American citizens doing business in China, who had passed resolutions demanding that more marines be sent to China to protect them and their business relations there. If we are going to free them from taxes that we burden ourselves with, and if we are going to give them this subsidy, and in addition to that employ an army to enable them to continue their business in those foreign countries, we are giving them more than they have any right to ask.

Mr. CARAWAY. I do not know why those people who are so anxious about that do not go further and provide that if they pay local taxes, then we should let them do business absolutely free from any burdens whatsoever.

Mr. NORRIS. The only argument I have heard has been that foreign governments relieve their citizens of such taxes.

Mr. CARAWAY. No; there is one that does not do it.

Mr. NORRIS. Other foreign governments give subsidies to their ships. But that is no reason why we should do it. It seems to me if an American citizen goes to China or to the Philippines or any other country, if he is patriotic, would not expect his country to relieve him from income taxes that people at home have to pay.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President——

Mr. CARAWAY. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WHEELER. Since the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] called the attention of the Senate to the fact, it is rather amusing to me to hear the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] talk about Americans not being able to compete over in the Philippines. The manager of one sugar company, for instance, with whom I talked not long ago told me that they work their men 12 hours a day and pay them one peso a day, which is approximately 50 cents, or something under 50 cents, a day. He said that they had an investment of $1,500,000 and that they made 33⅓ per cent upon the investment.

Mr. SMOOT. It is more than that. I have their published annual statements, and one year they made over 100 per cent.

Mr. CARAWAY. But they are not able to pay any taxes!

Mr. SMOOT. Another year they made 90 per cent. I have a statement issued by the company showing exactly what they have made from year to year.

Mr. WHEELER. Not only that, but I talked with an American who is engaged in the lumber business and they are making enormous profits. He said they started without anything and that in the next 10 years they expect to make a million dollars. The same is true not only of sugar, but of coconuts and hemp and practically every line of industry over there. They are over there in the cattle business on a large scale and making huge profits. They are competing with the sugar people and cattle raisers and lumber people of this country, shipping their products in here free of charge. Not only that, but now it is proposed to give them an exemption so they will not have to pay any income tax. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BINGHAM] said that it is only citizens who go there and live, but that is not so. American citizens can go over there and organize a corporation under the law of the Philippine Islands, and that corporation will be exempted from all income tax under this provision.

Mr. BINGHAM. Does the Senator mean to imply that Americans whose money is invested in the Philippine Islands do not have to pay income taxes?

Mr. WHEELER. Oh, no, but the corporation would get away from the payment of taxes to the United States Government.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. President——

Mr. CARAWAY. I yield to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. BROUSSARD. I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Nebraska to the fact that over and above the many advantages he enumerated is the particularly significant fact that 500,000 tons of sugar are imported annually from the Philippine Islands, and although the regular duty on sugar is 2 cents, they do not pay one cent of duty.

Mr. SMOOT. That is true, and they have about one-half the freight rates from the west to Chicago that local growers in the United States have.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator from Arkansas yield to me?

Mr. CARAWAY. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. I sincerely hope that no New York paper will carry what the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] has said, because if profits are so great in the Philippines as he has stated, and they believe it in New York, millions of my people will be on the way to the Philippines to-morrow morning.

Mr. NORRIS. If the Senator has his way, they will have greater inducements than that, and if they get this exemption we will lose the Senator, too.

Mr. WHEELER. The New York papers ought to carry the information. The people in New York are probably the last ones to get any information about what is going on outside of the city of New York.

Mr. CARAWAY. Or to care for it.

Mr. WHEELER. But the facts are, if the Senator would go to the Philippine Islands he would find the profits they are making are such that it would startle him. They are making enormous profits in sugar and everything else.

Mr. COPELAND. I hope the Senator will not give emphasis to that, because it is so attractive, so appealing, and so absurd, that in spite of this combination there might be a million New York citizens depart for the Philippines to-morrow.

Mr. WHEELER. I know the Senator would not depart because he is making too much money in this country.

Mr. CARAWAY. And the radio does not work over there.

Mr. COPELAND. Oh, yes; they have short wave lengths.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President——

Mr. CARAWAY. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I would like to ask the Senator from Connecticut if there is anything in the bill that limits the profits on wooden nutmegs?

Mr. CARAWAY. Not if they make them in the Philippines.

Mr. BINGHAM. We do not ask for any protection on that product.

Mr. REED of Missouri. The Senator's State has a natural monopoly on them. [Laughter.] This is the first time I have ever known a bill to be introduced in Congress to encourage citizens of the United States to emigrate. I thought the Senator from Connecticut and his party were devoted to building up the home markets in the United States for our farmers to sell their goods.

Mr. BINGHAM. May I call the Senator's attention to the fact that when the Democrats were in power in 1913 and in 1916 and passed the income tax laws of those years they did not require Americans in the Philippines to pay any money into the Treasury of the United States on their incomes.

Mr. REED of Missouri. They forgot about it.

Mr. BINGHAM. Oh, no; they provided that the tax should be paid in the treasury of the Philippines.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I would like to inquire of the Senator from Utah about the amendment. If I understand it correctly, we have been discussing something that is not the pending question, but merely a contemplated amendment?

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator was out when I made the explanation. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BINGHAM] is compelled to leave the city to-night and he asked me to offer the amendment for him so that he could speak upon it to-night. Now he has offered another amendment to that amendment extending a further privilege than the first amendment contemplated.

Mr. NORRIS. Then the pending question is on the amendment to the amendment?

Mr. SMOOT. That is the pending question. In other words, the amendment means that any American in the Philippines who has paid income taxes shall be given back the tax that he has already paid.

Mr. NORRIS. Is that a committee amendment?

Mr. SMOOT. No. I offered it as an accommodation to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. NORRIS. I am glad to know the committee is not behind a thing of that kind. The first proposition is whether we shall make that general, as I understand.

Mr. SMOOT. No. The first proposition is applying only to the years 1918, 1919, and 1920.

Mr. NORRIS. But I understand the Senator from Connecticut has offered an amendment to that.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; and we vote first on the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I would like to ask the Senator from Utah a question. What does this language mean on page 160, line 15?—

> If 80 per cent or more of the gross income of such citizen or domestic corporation (computed without the benefit of this section), for the three-year period immediately preceding the close of the taxable year (or for such part of such period immediately preceding the close of such taxable year as may be applicable) was derived from sources within a possession of the United States.

Mr. SMOOT. That means, of course, that 80 per cent of all the income must come from a possession before any income from sources within possessions of the United States is exempt.

Mr. COPELAND. I offered an amendment which perhaps the Senator from Utah has done me the honor to read.

Mr. SMOOT. Really, I have not had a chance to go over the pending amendments. I have been so crowded with committee amendments that I have not had the opportunity to read others.

Mr. COPELAND. Perhaps we can take a vote on the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut and then I will offer my amendment if any misfortune should befall the proposal of the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. SMOOT. We are not quite through with committee amendments. This amendment was offered in order to accommodate the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. BINGHAM subsequently said: I desire to give notice that when the revenue bill shall be in the Senate, if I am here, I shall call up the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah in regard to the business men in the Philippines, and, if I am not here, the Senator from Utah has agreed that he will call it up. I refer to the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah, which was defeated this afternoon.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I ask to withdraw the amendment to the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah. After the explanations that have been made and objections which have been made to it, I shall not offer it. I ask that the vote be taken on the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah.

Mr. COPELAND. I am going to offer an amendment like the one the Senator has withdrawn.

Mr. BINGHAM. The Senator is at liberty to do it, but I hope he will let us get a vote on the other amendment first.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment is withdrawn by the Senator from Connecticut. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, section 262 of the existing law was written into law after a bitter fight when the 1921 tax bill was under consideration. The bill as originally reported from the committee provided that if a corporation did 80 per cent of its business in a foreign country it should be exempted from the provisions of the income tax law. That contest was waged in this Chamber by my father. The debate was protracted. I shall not endeavor at this time to summarize the arguments which were advanced in support of the contention made by him that the committee's amendment should be stricken from the bill.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, will the Senator from Wisconsin yield at that point?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. BINGHAM. The Senator is aware that the amendment regarding the 80 per cent clause has not been offered.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I understand that, Mr. President.

Mr. BINGHAM. The amendment now before us has nothing to do with that.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I understand that; but, Mr. President, the amendment which the Senator from Connecticut intended to offer, and the amendment which the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] has now stated he intends to offer, opens up this whole question, and I am satisfied that a majority of the Members of this Chamber will never give their consent to any such a proposition being written into the law of this country. It merely opens the way for corporations of the United States doing business in foreign countries to escape taxation. In a nutshell, that is what it comes down to.

Mr. President, in so far as the pending amendment is concerned, I should not find myself so much in opposition to that proposal. It merely provides that section 262 shall be made retroactive in so far as that act is concerned. The merits of the pending amendment I am not prepared to argue; but it does not raise the important question of public policy which is raised by the second amendment the Senator from Connecticut has sponsored and which the Senator from New York now advises the Senate he will sponsor.

Since the Senator from Connecticut has withdrawn his second amendment, I shall not discuss this subject at length at this time, because I wish to accommodate the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BINGHAM] in a speedy disposition of the pending amendment; but I serve notice upon the senior Senator from New York, and upon any other Senator, that if the proposition is to be put forward here once more to write into the laws of this country the provision with regard to the exemption of corporations doing 80 per cent of their business abroad from the income tax law of this country, I shall prepare myself to debate that question at length with the Senator from New York or with any other Senator who desires to raise that issue in this Chamber.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the amendment offered by my colleague, if I understand it, seeks to apply retroactively for the taxable years 1918, 1919, and 1920 complete exemption from taxation to American citizens who were doing business in the Philippine Islands. The amendment means that American citizens who derive incomes from investments or property or personal service in the Philippine Islands during the years just mentioned, and who have not paid the taxes due from them to the United States under the revenue laws in force during those years, shall be relieved from any liability whatever, notwithstanding the fact that some American citizens did pay to the United States taxes derived during the same years from their investments and services in the Philippine Islands. The American citizens who paid their income taxes, if this amendment is adopted, are penalized. Those who ignored the law and made no returns, thus preventing the running of the statute of limitations, are to be forgiven and relieved from all liability.

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] has just indicated that there may be some merit to the proposition that the Government at this late date should not go back to the years 1918, 1919, and 1920 and collect the heavy war taxes imposed under the revenue laws of those years.

Retroactive legislation must have strong reasons, indeed, compelling reasons, to justify it. I am not persuaded that such reasons exist in behalf of the proposal embodied in the amendment under consideration. Moreover, Mr. President, there is a movement of no small proportions in favor of exempting all incomes received by American citizens from investments in foreign countries, whether such incomes are derived in the form of dividends from corporations or from personal services, or individual investments. It is also the purpose to apply this principle to incomes derived by American citizens from the Philippine Islands, and Porto Rico.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the junior Senator from Utah yield?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I have not been able to hear all of the debate, but I should like to say to the Senator that anyone who is going to sponsor an amendment that will be retroactive in its effect as to a certain class of people ought to establish by at least a preponderance of evidence the justice or equity of such a proposal. I should like to have the Senator tell me why any persons should be put in a preferential class and why we should pay back their taxes.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, as I understand the facts, they are substantially as follows: In 1918, 1919, and 1920 some American citizens who had investments in the Philippine Islands and some of whom resided there took the position that the revenue laws of the United States then in force did not require them to pay into the Treasury of the United States either income taxes or corporate taxes received from their investments in the Philippine Islands. Other American citizens believed they were subject to the revenue laws and paid their income and corporate taxes to the United States. Those who did not believe the revenue laws applicable to them made no returns to the Treasury. By failing to do so they are not protected by the running of the statute of limitations.

Mr. NORRIS. How was the matter decided? Which of the classes was right?

Mr. KING. The court decided four or five years ago, as I recall, that the revenue laws applied and that the Government was entitled to collect income and corporate taxes from the investments in the Philippine Islands.

Mr. NORRIS. Why should they not all pay?

Mr. KING. I am inclined to think they should. It is true the Government was perhaps derelict in enforcing the law and by its inactivity tended to confirm the views of the nonpaying taxpayers that they did not come within the provisions of the law. Perhaps the Treasury officials believed that the Philippine officials would collect an equivalent tax. At any rate, the tax was not collected from a number of individuals and corporations, and they now appreciate the fact that at this late date they are liable and that the Government may proceed and enforce payment of the delinquent taxes for the years mentioned. It would seem that if those who refused to make returns or omitted to make returns are freed from taxes legally due for the years 1918, 1919, and 1920, then there would be a moral obligation upon the part of the United States to refund the taxes collected from those citizens who responded to the provisions of the law and paid their taxes into the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. NORRIS. And some have paid and some have not. This proposed action, it seems to me, will be giving credit to those who did not pay their tax.

Mr. KING. The amendment in effect is equivalent to a premium to those who were slothful or indifferent or recalcitrant, who did not pay taxes justly and legally due, and it operates to penalize and punish those who did their duty and discharged their obligations to the Government. It seems to me, Mr. President, that it would constitute a bad precedent and would justify demands being made upon the Government in a multitude of cases where strict compliance with the law, instead of being a virtue, will result in serious disadvantages.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. EDGE. I am seeking information. I do not recall the facts, and am inclined to think the Senator from Utah is more familiar with them. I desire to ask what was the law we passed a few years ago in connection with the tax exemption of certain American citizens doing business in China?

Mr. KING. Does the Senator refer to what was called the China trade corporation act?

Mr. EDGE. That is what I have in mind.

Mr. KING. My recollection is that American citizens who were stockholders in corporations organized for the purpose of carrying on business in China obtained certain deductions when they came to make their tax returns, but did not receive all of the benefits which they sought to obtain under congressional legislation.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I think I can answer the question of the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. EDGE. I shall be glad to have the point cleared up.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. In connection with an act for the reorganization of American corporations in China the Committee on the Judiciary listened to extensive arguments on the matter and a bill was prepared with an exemption in it. I think, however, the unanimous view of the committee was that the exemption ought not to be accorded, and the provision was eliminated from the bill.

Mr. EDGE. That was the final action?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Yes.

Mr. EDGE. I had forgotten as to that.

Mr. KING. I think the Senator from Montana has stated the matter correctly. The general revenue act, as I recall, allowed American citizens who derived any income from foreign investments certain credits or deductions on account of income taxes paid to any foreign country or to any possession of the United States. Accordingly, American citizens who paid income taxes to the government of the Philippine Islands or to the Government of China or to any other government derived from investments in either of said countries, were entitled when making their returns to the Treasury Department for the purposes of taxation, to claim as a deduction any income tax paid to any foreign government or to any possession of the United States. And domestic corporations were also entitled to be credited with the amount of any income, war profits, and excess-profits taxes, paid to any foreign country or to any possession of the United States. There were, however, some limitations as to the deductions to be allowed which I shall not attempt to state at this time. My recollection is that the law applicable to the years 1918, 1919, and 1920 was quite liberal in the matter of deductions allowed to American citizens on account of income or corporate taxes paid in the Philippine Islands.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, does the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I merely desire to say to the Senator from Utah that I have not had occasion to look up the recent statutes so far as British nationals doing business abroad are concerned, but in 1921 when an effort was made to provide for an amendment similar to this affecting corporations of this country the argument was made and reiterated over and over again on this floor in justification and in support of the committee's recommendation that the British Government and other foreign governments did exempt their nationals or national corporations doing business abroad, I find, however, upon reviewing the debate that my distinguished predecessor in this body challenged that statement again and again upon the floor, and the proponents of the proposal were never able to produce the statutes to justify the statement which had been made. Subsequently, my predecessor did produce here in the RECORD a statement showing that the British income tax laws did apply to all citizens who received dividends or other profits from their business abroad, if they were resident in their own country, and that is the proposition which is put forward here.

Mr. KING. As I recall the discussion to which the Senator refers I think he has accurately stated the position taken by his predecessor, who contended that British subjects engaged in business in China but who claimed their residence in Great Britain paid the same rate of income taxes as British subjects deriving their income from investments in England. There may have been some deductions allowed from gross income as deductions were allowed for municipal taxes and rates levied in England. My recollection is, however, that Britishers living in China and who were associated with Chinese in business enterprises in China, conducting the same through corporations, had applied to them by Great Britain a different rule in the matter of income-tax exactions.

Undoubtedly appeals will be made to Congress and those appeals will grow stronger as American investments in foreign countries are increased, to exempt from all forms of taxation, incomes and profits received by American citizens from foreign investments. The contention will be made that American citizens engaging in business in other countries are required to meet competition and are subject to taxes in the countries in which they are operating, and that to require of them that they shall be subject to the income tax laws of the United States is placing them at a disadvantage with their competitors. Billions of American capital are going abroad and many Americans are engaging in business enterprises in various parts of the world. From these investments and business activities profits are derived. In my opinion, while deductions should be made from gross income on account of taxes paid abroad the same as deductions are allowed from gross income on account of municipal and State taxes paid in the United States, it would be unwise and unjust to relieve such American citizens from taxes upon incomes derived from enterprises and investments in foreign countries and American possessions.

Mr. COPELAND. I am quite astonished, may I say to the Senator from Wisconsin, although I have no doubt he is right, about the attitude of Great Britain toward its subjects abroad. I have here in my hand what I assume to be a correct transcript of a cable sent by Governor General Wood on the 7th of September, 1923, to the President. I quote from it as follows:

> British subjects abroad are never subjected to British taxation on income derived from sources outside of Great Britain, and by the finance act of 1920 England has authorized a refund to overseas British of taxes heretofore levied on incomes derived solely from British sources.

That seems to contradict the statement made by the Senator from Wisconsin. I know, of course, that the statements can be reconciled, because there may be some mistake, possibly, in the language of the cablegram, although I assume it to be a correct statement of the cablegram sent by General Wood to the President.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I did not understand the Senator from Wisconsin to say that British corporations were compelled to pay taxes to the British Government. That is true in the case of other countries but under British laws there is an exemption, and I stated the reason why, and so did the Senator from Montana. Did the Senator from Wisconsin state that the British companies abroad were compelled to pay taxes at home?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I said that the stockholders of British corporations receiving an income from corporations doing business abroad were subject to the income tax of Great Britain.

Mr. SMOOT. As to the dividends.

Mr. COPELAND. I assume that is true.

Mr. SMOOT. That is true.

Mr. COPELAND. But the question here as I see it is one of national policy. What are we going to do with the Philippines?

It is a matter of no concern to me. I have not a dollar invested in the Philippines, and no personal friend of mine has; but here are these islands, with their vast natural resources. How are we going to treat them? They might better be developed by Americans, as I view it, than by nationals of other countries.

I do not regard this as a bonus. I do not look at it in that way at all; but here a tax is levied upon certain corporations doing business in the Philippines, and only nine of them paid any taxes; and I am told that if these particular companies are forced to pay these back taxes, they will go into bankruptcy. They would not have assets enough to pay their taxes.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield right there?

Mr. COPELAND. Yes.

Mr. EDGE. How can a corporation go into bankruptcy as a result of paying income taxes on profits?

Mr. COPELAND. I am speaking about back taxes—taxes which have been levied and have not been collected. If they are forced to pay them, what are they going to do? I think this matter is much more serious than some Senators appear to think.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator for a moment?

Mr. COPELAND. Yes.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Which proposition is the Senator discussing now? Is he discussing the proposition to make section 262 retroactive so far as the act of 1918 is concerned, or is he in favor of the proposition contained in the second amendment?

Mr. COPELAND. I was talking about the whole subject of our relation to the Philippines.

Mr. SMOOT. The second amendment has been withdrawn.

Mr. COPELAND. Yes; the second one has been withdrawn; but may I ask the Senator from Utah about the amendment which he has offered? Why does he limit it to the taxable years 1918, 1919, and 1920?

Mr. SMOOT. Because the act of 1921 specifically provided for this tax in section 262 of the act of that year.

Mr. GEORGE. That is, the act of 1921 takes care of most of them, but not necessarily all of them?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; it imposed a tax upon all of them alike after 1921. This is to cover the years 1918, 1919, and 1920. It covers those who refused to pay any tax. The ones that paid the tax do not get any refund.

As far as the tax is concerned, I doubt very much whether any concern that pays its taxes during those years will be involved financially. There may be some, but I do not know why.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Utah. [Putting the question.] By the sound the noes seem to have it.

Mr. BINGHAM. I ask for a division.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A division is demanded. Those in favor of the amendment will rise and stand until they are counted. [A pause.] Those opposed will rise and stand until they are counted.

Mr. BINGHAM. This is the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. For the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. HARRISON. I understood that it was a Senate committee amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. No; I stated that it was offered for the Senator from Connecticut. The Senator was out of the Chamber.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask for a revote on this proposition.

On a second division, the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the next amendment is on page 204, line 3.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. NYE in the chair). The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 204, the committee proposes to strike out lines 3 to 14, both inclusive, and insert——

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I want to ask the junior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BINGHAM] whether his colleague desires to be present when this amendment is taken up? I believe, in justice to the senior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN], who is a member of the committee, that I will withdraw the amendment, because it may be that he wants to be present when it is considered. [A pause.] I am informed, however, that the Senator said to let it go through.

Mr. EDGE. Let us have it stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. The committee proposes to strike out, on page 204, lines 3 to 14, both inclusive, and to insert:

Section 702 of the revenue act of 1926 (imposing a tax on the use of certain foreign-built boats) is repealed, to take effect July 1, 1928.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Utah a question with regard to this amendment. I have a letter which is dated long enough ago so that it may not be applicable at all. It says, in part:

I have seen the amendment exempting from the increased 500-per-cent tax boats built or contracted for before December 1, 1927. The value of this exemption is practically avoided by clause 2 of the same amendment.

Does that refer to some other amendment which was pending some time ago?

Mr. SMOOT. No; I think that has reference to the House provision. The House imposed a tax of five times the amount of the existing law.

Mr. COPELAND. Is that what the committee struck out?

Mr. SMOOT. We strike that out, and repeal the law.

Mr. COPELAND. Let me read this letter. That will be the brief way to get to it.

Since previously writing you, I have seen the amendment exempting from the increased 500-per-cent tax boats built or contracted for before December 1, 1927. The value of this exemption is practically avoided by clause 2 of the same amendment, which provides that if a yacht built or contracted for before December 1, 1927, is sold, leased, or chartered, the increased rate shall apply for all years after the sale or charter. This, of course, will affect all boats delivered in the past and now in this country, as well as boats ordered or contracted for before the new legislation was even contemplated. Clause 2 of the amendment absolutely kills the resale value and charter value, and I believe is unfair and retroactive legislation.

Mr. SMOOT. That letter is correct as far as the House provision is concerned; but the Senate committee proposes to repeal that act itself.

Mr. COPELAND. Then my correspondent is protected if this amendment prevails?

Mr. SMOOT. He is protected with the amendment that the committee has recommended.

Mr. COPELAND. I thank the Senator.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, if we adopt the amendment, what will be the duty on such boats?

Mr. SMOOT. There would not be any, with the exception that the matter would go into conference, and then we will decide upon it.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Yes; but if we adopt this amendment, to what tax will these boats be subject?

Mr. SMOOT. No tax at all.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, right at that point, as I understand, if we adopt this amendment we are really repealing the existing law, are we not?

Mr. SMOOT. That is what it says; it repeals section 702 of the revenue act of 1926.

Mr. EDGE. All right.

Mr. SMOOT. That act taxed certain boats $2 for each foot, and $4 a foot for a 100-foot boat, and $8 a foot for boats above 100 feet.

Mr. EDGE. Then, in other words, we go to conference, should this amendment be adopted, in the position that there is absolutely no duty at all on foreign-built yachts.

Mr. SMOOT. That is true.

Mr. EDGE. Then, of course, it must be clearly understood, as far as my personal vote is concerned—for that is quite an industry in this country—that if this amendment is adopted, the conferees on the part of the Senate will insist on some substitute to protect this great industry as far as treaty rights will permit it.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to be perfectly frank with the Senate and tell them the situation as the committee saw it.

The rates of $10, $20, and $40, provided for in the House bill, were five times the amount of the existing rates. A question was raised by our State Department as to objections that have been raised to the House provision and to the present law.

Mr. EDGE. By the German Government?

Mr. SMOOT. By the German Government. What the committee decided was to strike this out and let it go to conference, and we will work out something there to take care of this situation in a way with which we hope all will be satisfied.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, this applies only to yachts, does it, or to all kinds of boats? I want to ask the Senator from Utah about that.

Mr. SMOOT. It applies to yachts, pleasure boats, power boats, motor boats with fixed engines, and sailing boats, of over 5 net tons and length over 32 feet.

Mr. EDGE. Practically to all classes.

Mr. SMOOT. Virtually to all yachts of that class.

Mr. NORRIS. If this amendment prevails, the effect of it will be to put boats on the free list?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; if the House yielded.

Mr. NORRIS. I understand; but we ought to vote on it just as though it were going to become part of the law. I can not myself understand how these members of the committee, being high protectionists, would bring in an amendment here that would put us on a free-trade basis in order to satisfy a lot of fellows who want to buy some yachts.

Mr. SMOOT. No; I want to say that a great part of these boats now would be subject at once to the tariff rate of 40 per cent.

Mr. NORRIS. Not if we pass this amendment. We repeal the law.

Mr. SMOOT. No; we repeal this particular law, but we do not repeal section 370 of the tariff act at all.

Mr. NORRIS. There is still a tariff on them?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; on certain boats.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I think the Senator has a misapprehension about this matter.

Mr. NORRIS. Perhaps I have. I am simply trying to get at the effect of the amendment.

Mr. FLETCHER. This is an excise tax charged against the use of a boat. If you buy a yacht, for instance, or have one built in an American shipyard—a yacht, we will say, costing you a hundred dollars, or something like that—you have to add, say, $25 to it, and the $25 goes to the Government, not to the shipbuilder. That is the tax that the Government charges you for the use of that yacht. That is all there is to it.

Mr. NORRIS. Even though I am an American citizen, and do that here?

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes. That is under this law that we are repealing.

Mr. NORRIS. That is the bill of the House?

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes; that is the original act.

Mr. NORRIS. That is the thing that we are repealing here. I notice in the amendment that it says a certain section of a certain act is repealed.

Mr. FLETCHER. Section 702.

Mr. NORRIS. Is that a section of the tariff act?

Mr. FLETCHER. No. That relieves you, if you are buying a yacht, of paying $25 to the Government for the privilege of using it.

Mr. NORRIS. Any tariff provision that may cover yachts is still intact?

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. It is not affected by this legislation?

Mr. FLETCHER. This has nothing at all to do with it. It is simply an assessment for the use of the boat. It may not be a yacht; it may be an ordinary boat, a fishing boat, any sort of a fishing boat that you want to buy. You have to pay so much for the use of it.

Mr. EDGE. I may say that this does not apply alone to large yachts. It applies to all kinds of craft, as explained by the amendment, very small craft; but, not to permit the suggestion of the Senator from Nebraska to go without a word, the wisdom of the House is plainly evidenced. As the bill appears before us protection was necessary, because they raised it, as I recall, five times; and I believe the majority of the Finance Committee felt that that was a just tax or a just tariff.

Mr. NORRIS. I am not finding fault with it.

Mr. EDGE. But apparently there is a treaty condition that, in the opinion of the Department of State, interferes with the tax; and, as I understand the chairman of the committee—and this is the reason why I asked the question—it is the hope that the conferees of the two Houses will be able to prepare a section that will be within our treaty rights and still protect American shipbuilders.

Mr. NORRIS. I will say to the Senator from New Jersey that I listened to the reading of the amendment and to some of the things the Senator from Utah said, and I reached the conclusion that this repealing act referred to our tariff act. I am wrong about that, I am informed.

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. That clears it all up in my mind. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. VANDENBERG in the chair). The question is on the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the next amendment is, on page 205, line 7, to strike out "$1 each year" and insert "$3 each year."

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, of course the Senator does not want that amendment to prevail?

Mr. SMOOT. There are a good many reasons why it should prevail.

Mr. COPELAND. What is the reason why it should prevail? Let the Senate understand what this is.

This is a proposal to tax every doctor in the country $3 instead of $1. Every family doctor, every one of your friends in the medical profession, is aroused over this and feels outraged by it. It is a piece of class legislation, and there is not any reason that I can think of why it should pass. That is the reason why I am asking the Senator from Utah for one reason why it should be made the law.

Mr. GEORGE. May I inquire of the Senator from New York if the physician does not have to register every prescription of drugs that come under the narcotic act?

Mr. COPELAND. Yes.

Mr. GEORGE. Irrespective of the payment of this license?

Mr. COPELAND. Yes.

Mr. GEORGE. There is a complete record of the handling of the drugs?

Mr. COPELAND. Yes; a complete record.

Mr. McKELLAR. I desire to ask the Senator from Utah a question. How much revenue does this tax of $1 bring in?

Mr. SMOOT. I do not know whether it is separated or not.

Mr. McKELLAR. Does it cost nearly as much to collect as the tax amounts to?

Mr. CARAWAY. If there ever was a nuisance tax, it looks as if this would be one.

Mr. McKELLAR. This looks like a nuisance tax, and I can not see any reason why we should tax the doctors of the country either $3 a head or $1 a head. It looks to me as if it is a trivial kind of business.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, in the consideration of this particular item, may I say that the minority members of the Finance Committee all voted against this increase from $1 to $3, and reserved the right to oppose it here.

Mr. McKELLAR. Why should we impose any tax?

Mr. SMOOT. One prevailing reason was that there was a decision of the Supreme Court, handed down by Chief Justice Taft, which held that the constitutionality of the act depended upon whether it was for revenue only.

Mr. GEORGE. If the Senator will pardon me, the effect of that decision was to hold that it was a revenue act, and that if it did not produce any revenue, there would be a question as to its constitutionality.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. COPELAND. In that connection, let me say to the Senator that the doctors are not unwilling to have the dollar provision left in.

Mr. SMOOT. That was the case. The tax originally was $3, and then it was reduced to $1, and the case came up on the $3 proposition, and the question was whether that provision was a revenue producer. If we provide $1, and another case goes to the Supreme Court of the United States and it is shown that the $1 does not pay the expenses of collecting it, then more than likely the law would be held unconstitutional.

Mr. McKELLAR. Under those circumstances, why not strike out the entire tax? If there is doubt as to whether it pays the cost of collection, surely we should not impose the $1. It does seem to me wholly unreasonable that we should impose any tax.

Mr. SMOOT. The poor doctor who will charge $10 for a prescription, of course, can not afford to pay $1 a year. Is that the position the Senator takes?

Mr. McKELLAR. No. Doctors do not write that sort of prescriptions in Tennessee.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I know the question was raised as to whether the narcotic control was a proper thing to include in a revenue act. There is no doctor in the country who would be willing to have that narcotic control wiped out. So I say the doctors are willing to pay the dollar. But they should not pay more than that.

Mr. SMOOT. Suppose the dollar does not pay the expenses?

Mr. COPELAND. I am sorry, but I am going to read the appeal of the American Medical Association.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I wish the Senator from New York would permit me to interrupt him a moment.

Mr. COPELAND. Certainly.

Mr. SIMMONS. I want to ask the Senator from Utah why we imposed the dollar tax on doctors.

Mr. SMOOT. In the beginning?

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes; what was the purpose of it?

Mr. SMOOT. I think it was done because of the fact that there was a desire to find out about how much was sold, and who sold it; and the tax was imposed upon it.

Mr. SIMMONS. It was not imposed for the purpose of raising revenue—nobody thought we would get much revenue out of it—but it was in order that the Government might keep track of physicians who were prescribing these articles that come under the Harrison Narcotic Act.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. SIMMONS. I can tell the Senator how much revenue would be raised.

Mr. SMOOT. It is $200,000, I think.

Mr. SIMMONS. The estimate is that the $3 amendment will produce $290,000, and the $1 will produce $97,000. I insist that the purpose was not to get revenue, but I recognize that the decision of the Supreme Court was that there must be some revenue as a result of the amendment. The question is whether the dollar rate raises more than the amount required to be expended in order to collect it. It raises $97,000, and I can not see how the Government would put out that much money in order to keep track of these things. The $1, therefore, in my judgment, will accomplish the purpose as well as the $3, and there is no reason why it should be multiplied by 3.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I know the doctors can not very well afford to pay this, and as far as I am concerned I will let the Senate vote upon it, and if it goes out, I shall not care.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not care. I want to say that I congratulate the doctors upon being the most persistent and best propagandists among all classes of people in the United States.

Mr. President, there is one other amendment, on page 243, line 22, Bureau of Internal Revenue personnel.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 243 the committee proposes to strike out lines 22 to 25, both inclusive, and on page 244 to strike out down to and including line 10, as follows:

SEC. 707. BUREAU OF INTERNAL REVENUE—PERSONNEL.

(a) The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to fix the compensation, without regard to the provisions of the classification act of 1923, of the following officers and employees of the Bureau of Internal Revenue, appointed (whether before or after the enactment of this act) in accordance with the civil service laws: Twenty-three assistants to the General Counsel at a compensation not in excess of $7,500 a year each; 26 administrative or technical employees at a compensation not in excess of $7,500 a year each; and 50 administrative or technical employees at a compensation not in excess of $6,000 a year each.

(b) Section 1201 (b) (1) of the revenue act of 1926 is repealed.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will not the Senator explain what that means?

Mr. SMOOT. This was an amendment that was put in by the House to provide for 99 employees in the Treasury Department, giving them increased salaries notwithstanding the classification act.

Mr. McKELLAR. The action of the committee is to strike that out?

Mr. SMOOT. To strike it out, and let it go to conference.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I have been asked that the estate-tax provision go over until to-morrow, as a number of Senators desire to speak upon it.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, will not the Senator call it up at this time with the understanding that it will not be debated?

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator wants to offer an amendment?

Mr. BINGHAM. I would like to offer an amendment, and ask to have sundry documents printed in the RECORD.

Mr. SMOOT. That is all right. Let the amendment be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut offers the following amendment, which the clerk will read.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 192, strike out lines 20 to 25, inclusive, and lines 1 to 5, on page 193, and insert:

SEC. 401. TERMINATION OF ESTATE TAXES.

Title III of the revenue act of 1926 shall not apply in the case of the transfer of the net estate of any decedent dying after the enactment of this act.

Mr. BINGHAM. I ask that the documents which I send to the desk be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SOUTH MANCHESTER, CONN., December 13, 1927.

Hon. HIRAM BINGHAM,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR BINGHAM: I am writing to express my hope that you will use your influence in opposition to the continuation of the inheritance tax as now in force. This in part is due to my feeling that it is best for the Federal Government to leave this field of taxation open to the respective States, but that is only secondary. My real objection is to the obnoxious provision whereby the Federal Government bribes or coerces the several States to enact legislation by means of a liberal rebate of the Federal tax to them if they do so. It seems to me that this strikes at the very foundation of our ideals and fundamental principles of government.

If the Federal taxing power is to be exercised by Congress for the obtaining of funds with which to influence State legislation, we may as well give up the idea that this is a federation of sovereign States, each exercising local option in matters of local concern. That means that we have abandoned the ideals of the founders and are repeating the old experiment of governing great countries by a centralized national authority. The principle at stake is out of all proportion to the pettiness of the issue involved. We are selling our birthright for a mess of pottage. We are throwing overboard the most magnificent piece of statescraft which the world has yet produced, and for nothing.

Yours very respectfully,

CHARLES CHENEY.

THE FEDERAL ESTATE TAX AS A GOVERNMENT EVIL

By William H. Blodgett, tax commissioner State of Connecticut

Patrick Henry, in voicing opposition to the adoption of the Federal Constitution in the Virginia Convention, exclaimed:

"Where are the purse and sword of Virginia? They must go to Congress. What has become of your country? The Virginian government is but a name." (Elliott's Debates III, pp. 366–410.)

Fear of excessive power in the proposed new government excited wide-spread opposition to the adoption of the Constitution by the colonists. Justification for such fear was found in the long struggle of the people in the mother country to preserve their rights and liberties. The colonists, with knowledge of the contest between the Parliament and the Stuart kings which lasted nearly all of the seventeenth century, mistrusted usurpation of powers and centralization in government beyond all things else. Their kin across the seas had been participants in this almost interminable struggle. Furthermore, they had just concluded successfully the Revolutionary War, which was brought about by the exercise of centralized powers wielded from a great distance and from beyond the borders of the continent. To them all of the serious experiences of mankind, immediate and centuries old, seemed to justify the extraordinary reluctance with which they yielded to the necessity of forming the more perfect union which was proposed. But the necessity for the establishment of such new union with carefully guarded and more centralized powers than previously were thought necessary was apparent to the ablest and most far-seeing statesmen of those times. The Constitution framers, observing the dangers of excessive centralization of powers on one hand and anarchy arising from excessive localization of powers on the other hand, succeeded in writing into the Constitution that perfect balance of powers on which has rested the security of this governmental structure during the whole period of its existence.

Replying to Patrick Henry and all others who pointed out the dangers of excessive centralization and urging the adoption of the proposed Constitution, Alexander Hamilton said:

"Everything must be left to the prudence and firmness of the people; who, as they will hold the scales in their own hands, it is to be hoped, will always take care to preserve the constitutional equilibrium between the general and the State governments." (17th Federalist.)

Whatever may be thought of Hamilton in other respects, it must be noted that his was a most practical outlook. But how has the hope and confidence expressed by Hamilton in the people been justified? What may be said now of the prudence and firmness of the people who hold the scales in their own hands? What care has been exercised in recent years to preserve the equilibrium which all then agreed to be so essential to the perpetuity of the new government?

"The preservation of the States and the maintenance of their governments are as much within the design and care of the Constitution as the preservation of the Union and the maintenance of the National Government. The Constitution and all its provisions looks to an indestructible union composed of indestructible States." (Chief Justice Chase, Texas v. White, 7 Wall. 700.)

The difficulties encountered by the framers of the Constitution in their efforts to establish an enduring federation in terms granting no more than necessary powers to the central government, and at the same time reserving and guaranteeing to the States for the benefit and use of the people all those innumerable powers essential to the existence of freedom of action separately by the State governments, seemed for a considerable period of time, during which the Constitutional Convention was in session, to be insurmountable. With respect to this problem the convention came nearly to disaster. The device to which the Constitution framers agreed, though lending itself to new conditions somewhat imperfectly, remains and must remain always as the most essential abutment of the more perfect structure which it was the design of the founding fathers to establish. The declaration of rights, corresponding in its purpose to the ancient Bill of Rights known to their English forbears, was the means insisted on by Thomas Jefferson for the protection of the people and of the States against all forms of usurpation by the new government. Mr. Jefferson expressed the hope that 4 of the 13 States would withhold ratification of the Constitution in order to compel the adoption by amendment of the bill of rights. In one of his letters he said:

"Tyranny of legislatures is the most formidable dread at present, and will be for many years. That of the executive will come in time, but it will come at a remote period."

A number of the ratifying States did so on condition that the bill of rights would be made part of the Constitution by amendment. Although the four States did not withhold ratification, as Mr. Jefferson suggested, 10 amendments constituting the declaration of rights were proposed and adopted very shortly after the new mechanism of government commenced to function. The provisions of the tenth amendment are worth observing:

"The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people."

The provisions of the Constitution, considered by some to be adequate protection against centralization, were considered inadequate by Mr. Jefferson and other able thinkers of the time. The declaration of rights was intended to be as adamant against Federal legislative assault upon the rights of citizens and of the States. What has been the result? May we not now with greatest propriety commence to take stock of the situation, and, if found necessary, display some of that prudence and firmness of the people which was the basis of the hope of Alexander Hamilton? Notwithstanding this effort to protect the States and the people against aggression of the centralized powers, the new governmental machinery had scarcely been set in motion when there arose, to test the wisdom of the statesmen and jurists of the country, questions pertaining to the doctrine of implied powers. Chief Justice John Marshall, America's greatest jurist, by his wise interpretations of the fundamental law gave it life and adaptability. All now generally agree that it was through his foresight that the Constitution, or any constitution of the kind, was saved to bless the future generations of mankind. However, it is quite clear that the Constitution would not have been adopted at all had its proponents admitted that it contained, or would be construed as containing, any implied powers whatever.

Lord Bryce, with whose writings respecting our system of government there is none to compare, visualized our plan of government and tersely described it in the following language:

"Under the plan of the Constitution makers an American, through a long life, may never be reminded of the Federal Government, except when he votes at a presidential election, buys a package of tobacco bearing the Federal stamp, lodges a complaint against the post office, and opens his trunk for a customhouse officer on a pier when he comes from a European tour. His direct taxes are paid to officials acting under State laws. The State, or local authority constituted by State statute, registers his birth, appoints his guardian, pays for his schooling, gives him a share in his father's estate, licenses him when he marries or enters a trade, divorces him, enters civil action against him, declares him a bankrupt, and hangs him for murder. The police that guard his home, the local boards which look after the poor, control the highways, impose water rates, manage schools—all these derive their powers from State laws. In comparison with such a number of functions the Federal Government is but a department of foreign affairs."

In a land of vast areas and great population and of wide diversities of climate and industries and modes of life, different areas being subject to somewhat different economic restraints, it is essential that each section, by separate States thereof, should be free to carry on and develop, each in its own way, so long as none meddles with the freedom of any other State. In this Republic State rule is not granted by the Federal Government. Powers reserved in the States never belonged to the Federal Government at all. The States clearly were the grantors of power and the central Government was the grantee. The value of State governments and the importance of State authority may not be ignored in a country so large as this. Security rests, in a larger measure than we are likely to know, upon the elasticity afforded to the various sections of the country by State units through which the people may exercise direct influence regarding matters of their more immediate concern. In the period of stress and growing storm which immediately preceded the Civil War the party platform on which Lincoln first ran for President contained the following plank:

"Resolved, That the maintenance inviolate of the rights of the States, and especially the rights of each State, to order and control its own domestic institutions according to its own judgment exclusively, is essential to that balance of power on which the perfection and endurance of our political fabric depend * * *."

Those familiar with the history of that period know that Lincoln, standing on the principle stated in this provision of his platform, had other plans for solving the question of slavery than by interfering with the recognized constitutional rights of the several States.

In The Critical Period in American History, written by the historian, John Fiske, may be found this language:

"If the day should ever arrive when the people from the different parts of our country should allow their local affairs to be administered by prefects sent from Washington, and when the self-government of the States shall have been so far lost as that of the departments of France, or even so far as the counties of England, on that day the progressive political career of the American people will have come to an end, and the hopes that may have been built upon it for the future happiness and prosperity of mankind will be wrecked forever."

The proponents of the Constitution took the view that dangers of State encroachments upon Federal powers were greater than the danger of encroachments of the Federal Government upon the powers of the States. Few, if any, tendencies have been witnessed to indicate that there was justification for such fear. History shows that, where the greatest power in government is lodged, greater power is sought, and, except for the prudence and firmness of the people which Hamilton saw was necessary to the maintenance of this Government, ancient rights, however firmly established, will be lost. There is nothing new in this observation. Human nature has not changed perceptibly in this respect. Power in Government affairs begets more power. It has been so always. Vigilance is the price of liberty.

Encroachments upon powers reserved for States may result from the adoption of constitutional amendments, from Executive action, or from congressional enactments. The National Council of State Legislatures is concerned with enactments of the Congress of the United States which encroach, or which tend to encroach, upon the powers of the several States. Questions concerning such encroachments involve discussions of what is called State rights. Many of the rights claimed as belonging to States in a more strict sense may not be rights at all, unless the court which is vested with authority to pass judgment thereon has so interpreted the Constitution of the United States as to recognize such claimed rights. It appears, therefore, that by use of the words "State rights" is meant such innumerable powers as are not, in terms or by implication, granted to the Federal Government, and which in sound policy may be exercised to better advantage by the States. Recognition of the spirit of the Constitution is the great essential to the maintenance of the equilibrium between State and Federal powers. Generally, through the exercise of State powers, the citizens are affected directly and at home and with respect to their immediate affairs. In such matters the citizen, through his State government, exerts his influence; it is here that he sees the effects of his political activity and interest. In this view State rights may be thought of rather as a matter of sound policy, looking beyond and into the spirit of the Constitution and applying its principles, rather than as positive right reserved in terms by the Constitution and secured to the States by judicial opinion.

By early construction of the Constitution the Supreme Court became the final arbiter of the rights of minorities and of the States. The jurisdiction of this court to pass judgment upon the constitutionality of enactments of the Congress has long since been settled. However, only 39 acts of Congress to this date have been held unconstitutional. The disposition of Congress to usurp power may be most clearly shown by pointing to the plans proposed for breaking down the power and authority of the court in this respect. This purpose continues and appears periodically in the Congress, notwithstanding the fact that all amendments adopted since 1804, commencing with the thirteenth, have increased the powers of the Congress at the expense of State powers, and, further, that the court has on such rare occasions rendered opinions adverse to the validity of congressional enactments. The prudence and firmness of the people in resistance to this form of aggression may well be called forth to defeat every effort further to weaken this bulwark of national safety.

A vast field of legislation has been occupied in recent years by the Federal Government, either by authority of the general welfare clause of the Constitution or under the doctrine of implied powers. Through the use of the Federal taxing power, the power of the purse in which Patrick Henry saw danger, encroachments upon the powers of the States have increased at an amazing pace during the last half century. Congressional activities in two important directions other than by proposals to amend the Constitution yield abundant evidence of the disposition of Congress progressively with the passing of time to find excuse to concern Federal authority with the minute details of business which should forever remain under exclusive State control. To carry out such activities the necessity of establishing new Federal bureaus and commissions, with authority to issue regulations having the effect of law, follows in baneful consequence.

Year by year self-government of States is becoming a mockery, the regulation makers being bureau chieftains hidden from view but placed above the law as public masters rather than public servants. The doctrine that this is a government of law and not of men is becoming a byword. The doctrine that there is equality before the law must necessarily vanish with the ever-increasing pretensions of Federal officeholders whose regulations override, or take the place of, statutes enacted by competent legislative bodies.

It is most likely, however, that the bureau chiefs, commissioners, and other agents all along the line have done as well in the past, and are doing as well now, as similar officials are likely to do in the future with the work assigned to them. The appointees of the Federal Government very generally possess intelligence and efficiency. Undoubtedly, too, the laws enacted are quite as wise as laws in relation to the same subject matter are likely to be in the years to come. These difficulties are deeply seated. The trouble is primarily with the citizens themselves, who, instead of resisting tendencies toward centralization, have altogether too freely sought to have the State relieved of responsibility and authority by at least sanctioning congressional activities into fields where Congress should not enter. Responsibility for this business, however, must be assumed by the Congress, it having failed to observe that the maintenance of State governments is within the design and care of the Constitution.

One form of aggression upon reserve powers of States may be found in the so-called dollar-matching or State-aid program of the Federal Government. By this program money received by the exercise of the Federal taxing power is used to subsidize States to engage in activities in which, except for such financial inducements, they would not engage at all. The use of money in the Federal Treasury taken from the people to speed up the use of reserve State powers is a flagrant abuse of the Federal power of the purse. The extension of Federal authority with respect to matters pertaining to maternity and infant hygiene, vocational education, the control of highway construction by States, and many other such activities by the mere mentioning of them is sufficient to show how far afield Congress has already gone beyond the intent and limitations prescribed by the framers of the Constitution. Persistent efforts in recent years to shift responsibility pertaining to public education, divorce, and other lines of activity certainly would be looked on with amazement by the statesmen of the constitutional period, and, indeed, by their successors who pioneered the Government through the first hundred years of its existence.

Aside from tending to extravagance on the part of the Federal Government, State-aid practices of the kind induce extravagance on the part of the States. The citizens, who pay the bills, have little influence with respect to the use of the Federal taxing power, while in the States the temptation to accept every such grant of Federal money, coming like manna from the skies, is difficult to overcome. The continuance of this program in constantly widening fields of Federal activity can have no other effect than to bring the States into an increasing degree of subservience. States, if any there are, which desire Federal control of their affairs through the influence of the power of the Federal purse impliedly admit they are unable to assume their separate responsibilities. Such States assume the position of being liabilities rather than assets upon the Federal Treasury. A condition of State mendicancy nowhere in fact exists.

Of immediate concern to all citizens who feel the original relationship between Federal and State authority was wise, who feel that the principles and spirit of the Constitution should be maintained, is the entrance by Federal authority in 1924 upon a new plan of State control. Reference may be had to section 301, subsection (b), of the revenue act of that year. This subsection reads as follows:

"The tax imposed by this section shall be credited with the amount of any estate, inheritance, legacy, or succession tax actually paid to any State or Territory or the District of Columbia, in respect of any property included in the gross estate. The credit allowed by this subsection shall not exceed 25 per cent of the tax imposed by this section."

We have in this language the first attempt of the Federal Government to influence the States in the legitimate use of their reserve taxing power. In section 301, subsection (a), of the same act, being the section immediately preceding the above quotation, was set forth a schedule showing the rate of tax to be applied to each net estate having a value of more than $50,000, that amount being exempt from taxation under the provisions of the revenue act of 1924. The percentage of tax was graduated according to the value of the net estate and the rate extended from 1 to 40 per cent, the 40 per cent rate being applicable to large estates.

By means of the 25 per cent credit allowance to estates it was then intended that each State should raise its own estate, inheritance, or legacy tax rates sufficiently high so that in computing the State tax they could obtain the full 25 per cent allowance. Any State failing to do this subjected the estates of its own citizens to payment to the Federal Government of an amount in excess of that to be paid by citizens of other States having sufficiently high rates to absorb the full amount of credit. A financial advantage, therefore, was offered to each State to enact sufficiently high rates to absorb the full credit. Failing in this respect, the amount of death taxes in the aggregate to be paid by any estate was neither enhanced nor diminished by the provisions of this subsection. The failure of any State to impose death taxes had the effect of punishing the State to the amount of 25 per cent of the gross tax which the Federal Government in every case collected. States having constitutional amendments which did not permit the imposition of this form of tax were required to pay the full measure of penalty. The provisions of the law quoted appeared not to have been sufficiently drastic in coercive effect to accomplish all that the Congress desired. In 1926 the law was amended in such manner that a credit of 80 per cent of the aggregate amount of Federal tax was allowed. (See sec. 301, subsec. (b), of the revenue act of 1926.) Thus the Federal pressure is seen to be progressive. Three States (namely, Alabama, Florida, and Nevada) enacted no law by which to absorb the 25 per cent credit; neither have they enacted any law to absorb the 80 per cent credit; but the new law reaches far beyond the three States named, for in order to absorb the 80 per cent credit most, if not all, of the States then imposing death taxes were obliged to raise the same or lose money in varying amounts which they might obtain. As under the 1924 law, States which were unable to enact death tax laws by reason of constitutional prohibitions suffered the extreme penalty.

Suppose a millionaire of either Alabama, Florida, or Nevada should die during the time the revenue act of 1926 is in effect, just what is the consequence of the provisions of this Federal statute? The estate of such decedent is at once made subject to the Federal tax of $80,000. This amount is required to be paid to the Federal Government and for its general use. Having no death tax law, the 80 per cent credit allowance is unavailable, and the State loses $64,000, which, if it would enact sufficiently high death tax rates, it might obtain for its own uses. If the same person were a resident at the time of his death of a State having a sufficiently high death tax rate, all up to 80 per cent of $80,000, or $64,000, would be credited by the Federal Government in favor of such State. The State of residence would receive in such case $64,000, and the Federal Government would receive 20 per cent of $80,000, or $16,000. The aggregate of such taxes paid on the estate would be the same regardless of the State of residence of the decedent. It is clear, therefore, that the estate of the deceased resident of Alabama, Florida, or Nevada would pay to the Federal Government four times the amount which would be paid by any taxable estate of a decedent whose residence at death was in a State having death tax rates sufficiently high to absorb the full amount of credit allowance. The financial urge upon States, by reason of the situation created by this Federal law, to enact death tax laws and to enact them at a sufficiently high rate to absorb the full credit allowance, is seen to be very great. With respect to other States the Federal pressure is increased or decreased to depend upon whether the State rates are high or low. The Federal estate tax law of 1926 raised the exemption from $50,000 to $100,000. As a tax law this made the matter worse, because it disclosed the temper and spirit of the Congress to sacrifice sound principles of taxation on the altar of expediency or to enter upon a program of social legislation under the guise and use of the taxing power of the Government. President Coolidge obviously saw this when, on February 19, 1925, he said:

"I do not believe that the Government should seek social legislation in the guise of taxation. We should approach the question directly, where the arguments for and against the proposed legislation may be clearly presented and universally understood. If we are to adopt socialism, it should be presented to the people of this country as socialism, and not under the guise of a law to collect revenue. The people are quite able to determine for themselves the desirability of a particular public policy and do not ask to have such policies forced upon them by indirection."

So far as is known, no administration of the Federal Government has adopted a policy of equalizing fortunes by the use of the taxing power. However, Congress, in 1924, after a short debate and as far as is known without public hearing, did increase the rate of tax from a maximum of 25 per cent to 40 per cent.

At the time this was done there was no fiscal reason for increasing such rates; on the contrary, there was reason against it. The administration opposed rather than asked for this result. But why were the rates so increased? It was not done in response to the demands of the public. The high rates were cut in half in response to the demands of the public two years later, but while the high rates were so reduced the exemption was doubled, the enactment of that year being employed openly and intentionally to require States to increase rates to take up all or a part of the reduction made in the new Federal schedule. Using the language of Professor Adams, has not the intent and purpose of the Congress been "to reduce and relieve the striking inequalities in wealth and income?"

The plan for coercing States is claimed to be necessary because of the actions of Florida, that State having adopted a constitutional amendment which forbids the imposition of such tax. It may be noted in this connection that the change in the Florida constitution places that State in the same position as Alabama and Nevada. In reality what Florida did was to advertise the fact that such an amendment had been adopted as a means of inducing citizens from other States to take up their residence in Florida. Alabama and Nevada, having done little or no advertising of the kind, are seldom mentioned as being of sufficient importance in the picture to justify congressional attention. Next to the now deflated land boom, the hysteria over Florida's tax advertisements is the greatest phenomenon of the decade. It may be said in passing with respect to Florida's tax situation that the State, like all others, will have to find revenue to meet its public expenditures. That the public debt of the municipalities and subdivisions of the State of Florida has increased in the last four years faster than such debt has increased in any other State of the country is very well known. In the course of a very short time, if not immediately, plans for raising revenue in Florida will have to be revised. The time will come when it will not be sufficient to say that the State, as such, has no public debt. The millionaires who take up their residence there will be compelled to observe that whether the State has a public debt or not is not of greatest importance. On the contrary, it will be learned that the principal of local bonds must be paid at maturity and that Florida as a State will have to find means, either by itself or its subdivisions, to raise the revenue to redeem such bonds. If such should not be the case, and Florida by any plan of financial legerdemain can so manage affairs that its tax burdens as a whole will be less than those imposed on citizens of the other States in the country, that State should reap the benefit which flows from superior management of its financial affairs. It is possible when Florida comes to the point of revamping her tax laws, as she must do, she will be able to do so in such outstanding and excellent manner that other States can profit by her example. If Florida, or any other State, so manages its public business as to attract nation-wide or world-wide attention, and thereby, together with good climate, offers an incentive to people to take up their residence within its borders, Congress appears to be going far afield to enact legislation, punitive or otherwise, by which to divert from that State the benefits which in justice and sound reason ought to flow to such State. If the overburdened taxpayers of cities of the country, or of any other locality where public debts are increasing at an alarming pace, desire to escape oppressive tax burdens, the other States which maintain more responsible governments should suffer no punishment because of the public spirit and interest which citizens thereof have shown in the management of public business. The present Federal estate tax anomaly places the States in a strait-jacket. It is based on the doctrine that the citizen, in whichever State he lives, must pay taxes locally and for State purposes in accordance with the congressional will. The strait-jacket is a presumption of authority and works an injustice to every State in which the citizens have thoughtfully attended to public business. The 80 per cent credit device accomplishes by indirection that which could not be considered as possible by directly imposing on any State the obligation to enact any kind of tax laws. No one would stand for such direct action by the Congress; such a proposal would not be considered. By the indirection found in the Federal law the same purpose is accomplished. Prior to 1924 the determination of whether the State would or would not have death tax laws was regarded as a matter exclusively of its own concern. Since the passage of this law, while free to make such determination, each State is subjected to penalty for failure to make the determination in accordance with the Federal plan.

The States in the Constitutional Convention yielded the right to the Federal Government to impose taxes only in reliance upon the constitutional limitations as to apportionment and uniformity. It was intended that the Constitution should forbid discrimination by the levying of duties, imposts, or excises upon a particular subject in one State and a different duty, impost, or excise on the same subject in another State. The burden was to be uniform in all States.

The necessity for uniform death taxes is no greater than the necessity for imposing uniform personal income taxes or uniform corporation net income taxes. No reason exists for uniformity in the several States with respect to such taxes. Indeed, uniformity in this regard is undesirable except as there may exist uniform sentiment in the States imposing such taxes and other uniform conditions too varied in character to be enumerated. If the strait-jacket principle is sound, other strait-jackets, possibly and probably less comfortably fitting, may be devised in course of time to fit other States which refuse to obey the congressional will. By application of Federal power of the purse the discomfort of three States now may be slight in comparison with that which other States may feel in a decade or two.

If it were necessary for the Federal Government to establish such principle as underlies this tax, no good citizen would inveigh against it. There is no such Federal necessity. Serving no useful Federal purpose, it is submitted that it serves no useful State purpose. If the constitutionality of this question should be raised in the courts and the Supreme Court of the United States should decide on its merits that an enactment of this kind is constitutional, the situation would be unchanged. Whether constitutional or unconstitutional, this law not only is in conflict with the spirit of the fundamental law, but it destroys that equilibrium essential to the progressive political career of the American people. As the historian Fiske pointed out:

"The hopes that may have been built upon it [the Constitution of the United States] for the future happiness and prosperity of mankind will be wrecked forever."

OFFICE OF THE TAX COMMISSIONER,
STATE OF CONNECTICUT, STATE CAPITOL,
Hartford, Conn., January 3, 1928.

Hon. HIRAM BINGHAM,
Care of United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR BINGHAM: Your letter of the 28th instant, wherein you ask me to please tell you more of the particulars respecting the duress to which the State of Connecticut has been subjected is at hand. This request for information leads straightway into the meat of this coconut. The record of the hearing had before the Ways and Means Committee prior to the enactment of the revenue act of 1926 discloses the fact that the estate-tax provision was not devised as a revenue measure. To state it more accurately, the revenue feature was incidental to another purpose in the enactment. Anyone reading that hearing can form his own conclusions as to what its purpose was. With respect to this, there may be some differences of opinion. However, an important and probably the main design of the law was to obtain uniformity with respect to death taxes which States should impose. To obtain such uniformity among the States, there was need of interference with States' business. There was the necessity of devising some scheme by which to induce, enforce, and coerce States to have death taxes and at rates sufficiently high to meet the congressional requirement. It was admitted that States if let alone would not maintain uniform rates. Therefore, the necessity of coercion, persuasion or compulsion, or pressure or duress by Federal authority upon State legislatures. Congressman HULL of Tennessee, chairman of the Democratic National Committee, at the recent hearing (record p. 600) stated this:

"I am one Member who is anxious and willing to see that the States levy a very substantial inheritance tax."

By this statement Mr. HULL claims the right of Congress to determine what tax and what rates States should impose. There is no reason for splitting hairs on what constitutes duress, coercion, urge, pressure, or what Mr. HULL calls "cooperation." The fact is if Connecticut, as it has done, continues to be without sufficiently high rates to meet the congressional will and to absorb the full 80 per cent credit, the estates of its deceased citizens, where the net estate is in excess of $100,000, will pay more money to the Federal Government than will the estates of deceased citizens of States which surrender to the congressional pressure and absorb the full 80 per cent credit. There is a tremendous misunderstanding about this 80 per cent business. Some Congressmen appear to think that it is a refund from the Federal Government to the States and talk freely about refunding the amount of money paid to the Federal Government. There is no refund. It is a set-off or credit computed by the Federal officials after the amount of death taxes due to the States in every case will have been paid. If Connecticut wishes to employ arithmetic and use a lead pencil upon which to determine its political principles, it can save money to its treasury; but to this time in its history, as I understand it, its principles have not been either purchased, sold, or given away without sharp and decent resistance. The record of the hearing had prior to the enactment of this law in 1926 shows that the 80 per cent credit clause, while designed to accomplish uniformity, had the support of those in Congress, and now the Committee on Ways and Means, who desired to accomplish a redistribution of wealth. I think the uniformity claim is "window dressing" for the redistributors. They regard uniformity and redistribution of wealth as of more importance than the independence of the States, and found the means of controlling State systems of taxation through indirection employed in this 80 per cent clause of the law. In the pamphlet which I sent to you, at page 13, I illustrated the position in which Florida, Alabama, and Nevada were situated and, among other things, brought out accurately the conclusion that the estate of a millionaire who dies in Florida will pay to the Federal Government four times the amount that a millionaire would pay in a State which had yielded to this Federal coercive scheme. This sentence is found in the pamphlet, after illustrating the Florida situation:

"With respect to other States the Federal pressure is increased or decreased to depend upon whether the State rates are high or low."

The inheritance-tax rates in Connecticut, as you will see by the inclosed schedule, are, and have been since 1915, fairly high. For the year ended June 30, 1925, of the total State receipts 9.96 per cent was collected from the inheritance tax; for the year ended June 30, 1926, 8.47 per cent; and for the year ended June 30, 1927, 8.08 per cent. The percentage of inheritance taxes collected to the total State receipts was decreased slightly in the last three years because of the increase of receipts from motor vehicle and gasoline taxation. Prior to these years the inheritance-tax receipts ran between 10 and 11 per cent of the total State receipts. This is exclusive of the so-called Connecticut penalty tax which is imposed on the property of decedents found in estates with respect to which no ad valorem tax had been paid in the five years preceding the death of such decedent, but 80 per cent of the penalty-tax receipts go to the towns wherein the decedent resided at the time of his death. Such receipts are, in fact, death taxes, but I have not included this in the percentage figures for the reason that they are not entirely State receipts. I am not certain that I can show you what percentage of the full 80 per cent credit Connecticut is obtaining because of the complications involved in such an undertaking. If I should undertake to explain a problem in quadratic equations by letter to a person who had not studied algebra, I should be confronted with a similar difficulty. The point is it is almost impossible for anyone to understand this who has not had practical contact with it. Some phases of it no one in this tax department can figure out. I am sending to you herewith a manuscript entitled, "Mutual interdependence of Connecticut inheritance tax and Federal estate tax (1926 act)." This is written in as simplified form as we are able to get it out. Those in the bureau in Washington who are handling this subject will understand this, but they will not attempt to show its difficulties to Members of Congress, as, of course, these phases of this question have never been printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. They have never been gone into by any Congressman, so far as I know, and I am asking Senator SMOOT to give us a hearing so that we can get into the meat of this coconut and try to make its difficulties understandable to those in congressional authority. I think that they should know something about the mischief-making provision of the 1926 laws.

After you will have gone through this document, if you do not then feel that you are clear with regard to it, let me know and I will send Mr. Knapp to you, or, possibly, Mr. O'Donnell, who are daily in contact with this problem. They know more about this than I do, because I do not interfere with their administration work unless there is dispute between them and the taxpayer. I wish you joy in trying to find out what this means.

Another phase of this problem is interesting. In 1924 the situation with respect to estates was as follows: Florida, Nevada, and Alabama had no death taxes. Mississippi and Utah had estate taxes only. Oregon and Rhode Island had both an estate tax and an inheritance tax. All the rest of the States had inheritance taxes at varying rates. In 1927 Alabama, Florida, and Nevada had no death taxes. Georgia, Mississippi, North Dakota, and Utah had an estate tax only. Of these States, the tax levied by Georgia was to take up the slack of the 80 per cent. As to Mississippi, from 1918 to 1924, it had both an inheritance tax and an estate tax. In 1924 the inheritance tax was abolished and an estate tax at fairly high rates was established. North Dakota formerly had an inheritance tax, but in 1927 substituted an estate tax at low rates. Utah had an estate tax with only low rates since 1901. The following States have both an estate tax and an inheritance tax:

"California, Colorado, Delaware, Maine, Massachusetts, Montana, Missouri, New York, North Carolina, Oregon, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, Vermont, and Virginia."

In the case of all, except one, of these States an estate tax was added in order to take up the slack of the 80 per cent credit. This one State is Oregon, which has had both an inheritance and an estate tax for a number of years, but in 1927 an additional estate tax was imposed to take up the slack of the 80 per cent credit provision. (Chapter 810 of the laws of 1926.) All the rest of the States have inheritance taxes only.

I will try to obtain for you, as I have not the information at hand, the names of the States which increased their inheritance-tax rates owing to pressure of the revenue act of 1926, and which, at the same time, passed resolutions calling on Congress to repeal this law. This is extremely interesting. Green, GARNER, and RAINEY seem to be interested more in the amount of money expended in order to procure a hearing before the Ways and Means Committee than in any other subject connected with this business. Of course, it is silly to claim that 23 States were purchased in order to pass the resolution condemning the 80 per cent clause. I am writing to Mr. Casey, of the National Council of State Legislatures, asking him to send to you a copy of each of the resolutions passed by the States. At a later date I will send you a communication showing the reasons why, in the judgment of tax people, New York and California adhere to the notion that this Federal estate-tax scheme is desirable. Briefly, it is desirable in those State because they are plunging so heavily into debt that they find it comfortable to pass the buck to Congress as a reason for increasing their inheritance-tax rates. Massachusetts is an example of this also. The tax commissioner of Massachusetts admits that if the Federal estate tax law should be repealed the legislature of that State would not raise the rates so as to collect such money as is now being gotten from that source of revenue. He is willing to appeal over the heads of the people of Massachusetts as expressed in the legislature of that State for help to get revenue from this source. There is no appeal in Connecticut to the Federal Government or anywhere else for help to raise revenue to meet the needs of Connecticut people. I claim the right of the people here to determine what taxes they will pay, both as to rates and form of taxation, where the money is to be used for their immediate needs and benefits.

Yours truly,

WM. H. BLODGETT,
Tax Commissioner.

These rates have obtained in law, with one inconsequential change, since 1915:

TABLE NO. 20.—Analysis of classification of beneficiaries, rates, and exemptions under provisions of Connecticut inheritance tax law (ch. 190, P. A., 1923)

RELATIONSHIP TO DECEDENT CLASS A
Parent, grandparent, husband, wife, lineal descendant, adopted child, adoptive parent, lineal descendant of adopted child.	$10,000 or less, no tax.	In excess of $10,000 to $25,000, inclusive, 1 per cent.	In excess of $25,000 to $100,000, inclusive, 2 per cent.	In excess of $100,000 to $200,000, inclusive, 3 per cent.	In excess of $200,000, 4 per cent.
CLASS B
Son-in-law, daughter-in-law, stepchild, brother or sister of full or half blood, descendant of such brother or sister.	$3,000 or less, no tax.	In excess of $3,000 to $25,000, inclusive, 2 per cent.	In excess of $25,000 to $100,000, inclusive, 3 per cent.	In excess of $100,000 to $200,000, inclusive, 4 per cent.	In excess of $200,000, 5 per cent.
CLASS C
All others unless otherwise exempt under ch. 190, P. A., 1923, and ch. 47, P. A., 1925.[1]	$500 or less, no tax.	In excess of $500 to $25,000, inclusive, 5 per cent.	In excess of $25,000 to $100,000, inclusive, 6 per cent.	In excess of $100,000 to $200,000, inclusive, 7 per cent.	In excess of $200,000, 8 per cent.

[1] All property passing to corporations or institutions located in this State aid, to municipal corporations in this State for public purposes, gifts of certain articles to corporations and institutions located in this State for preservation and free exhibition and all property devised or bequeathed exclusively for religious, educational, or missionary purposes to any religious, educational, or missionary corporation wherever situated.

Tax on net estate. Exemption applies to class as whole.

Gifts not exceeding $300 to associations or corporations for the perpetual care of cemetery plots are exempt from such tax.

MUTUAL INTERDEPENDENCE OF CONNECTICUT INHERITANCE TAX AND FEDERAL ESTATE TAX (1926 ACT) SHOWN BY A ONE MILLION DOLLAR NET ESTATE.

"Net estate" as used above, means the net estate remaining after the deduction from the gross estate of all of the allowable deductions under Connecticut law, such as debts, executors' fees, expenses of administration, etc. In thus arriving at the net estate there is not deducted either the $100,000 flat exemption allowed by the Federal estate tax nor the exemptions allowed by Connecticut law, which are $10,000 on property passing to class A (wife, children, etc.), $3,000 on property passing to class B (brothers, sisters, etc.), and $500 on property passing to class C (cousins and strangers to the blood).

TABLE I.—Simplest set-up

	Class A	Class B	Class C
1. Connecticut inheritance tax	$36,650	$44,690	$76,725
2. Federal estate tax (gross)	41,500	41,500	41,500
3. Federal estate tax after deducting 80 per cent credit	8,300	8,300	8,300
4. Total amount of death duties payable by the estate	44,950	54,990	85,025

The above is how it would work out at its very simplest, starting with the flat figure of $1,000,000, for figuring both Federal and State taxes. But since the Federal estate tax, being an administration expense, is an item to be deducted from the Connecticut gross estate in order to arrive at the Connecticut net estate, if we wish to obtain a more accurate computation of the Connecticut tax we shall be obliged to deduct from the assumed $1,000,000 net estate the amount which it may be expected that the executors will have to pay to the Federal Government as an estate tax (i. e., $8,300). The computation then becomes as follows:

TABLE II.—Ordinary set-up

	Class A	Class B	Class C
1. Connecticut inheritance tax	$36,318	$46,275	$76,061
2. Federal estate tax (gross)	41,500	41,500	41,500
3. Federal estate tax after deducting 80 per cent credit	8,300	8,300	8,300
4. Total amount of death duties payable by the estate	44,618	54,575	84,361

The above indicates the ordinary method by which the Connecticut inheritance-tax department proceeds in computing the Connecticut inheritance tax on every estate which is large enough to be subject to the Federal estate tax. The situation is such that estimates must be used. We can not accurately determine the amount of Federal estate tax to be used as a deduction from the Connecticut gross estate, because the Federal Internal Revenue Bureau has a rule that the 80 per cent credit can not be taken until the State inheritance tax is finally determined and paid. Contrariwise, under our Connecticut law, the Connecticut inheritance tax can not be computed until the Connecticut net estate is known, and that can not accurately be determined until the Federal estate tax is settled and paid. In this dilemma, neither tax being determinable until the other is, the only way out is to use estimates, which will approximate the true result, but can not be accurate.

It must be remembered that the above is based on the assumption that the net estate is $1,000,000 for both Federal and State purposes. It is seldom, however, that this correspondence exists. There are at least five factors which may, and often do, vary.

(A) The Federal appraisals may differ from the State appraisals of the same property. This often happens. Owing to its superior strategical position the Internal Revenue Bureau can force estates to accede to higher valuations than can the State.

(B) The decedent may have owned real estate or other property outside of Connecticut and not subject to Connecticut inheritance tax, but which is nevertheless subject to Federal estate tax.

(C) There may have been "previously taxed property" in the estate—that is, certain property owned by decedent may have been subject to Federal estate tax within five years, in which case it is exempt from Federal estate tax on this particular decedent's estate. Connecticut has no such rule as to "previously taxed property."

(D) Gifts to certain institutions may be exempt under Federal law which are not exempt under Connecticut law.

(E) Connecticut tax proceedings must be closed within 14 months after decedent's death. The Federal Government has three years. It often happens that the Federal authorities, long after the Connecticut tax is fixed, reopen the case and change many figures.

Besides these there are many other ways in which Federal and State authorities may differ in arriving at the net taxable estate. A mere reading of regulations 70, governing Federal estate tax, will indicate how minute and meticulous are the regulations, and how many points they cover. It would serve no useful purpose here to go into detail, but there may be mentioned differences of viewpoint upon exercises of powers of appointment, and upon gifts to take effect at death (especially since the case of Coolidge v. Nichols (47 Sup. Ct. Rep. 710, 712, Ed. 797, U. S. S. C. May 31, 1927), which has thoroughly upset the situation; the effect of foreign transfer taxes upon the question of whether the estate is entitled to the full 80 per cent credit or only part thereof, and so on.

There are, indeed, many cases where it is quite impossible ever to determine either tax with even a remote approach to accuracy; this so whenever the State tax is less than 80 per cent of the Federal tax. In such a case no executor or administrator, however well qualified by experience, can compute the tax which his estate will be called upon to pay. His best estimate may be thousands of dollars out of the way. The State inheritance-tax official is in the same situation, and all because of the mutual interdependence of Federal and State death duties.

An example will make this clear: Take an estate of $1,500,000 passing to class A (lineal descendants of decedent), and suppose, to make it as simple as possible, that no variable factors are introduced, so that Federal and State authorities start upon exactly the same basis. The Federal tax on an estate of this size, not deducting the credit, would be $88,500. The Connecticut tax would be $46,650. The Connecticut tax being 52.7 per cent of the Federal tax, the executor can take not more than 52.7 per cent credit against the Federal tax, or $46,639.50, so that the executor will have to pay the Federal Government the balance, or $41,860.50. This necessitates recomputing the Connecticut tax, using $41,860.50 as a deduction in ascertaining the net estate. The Connecticut tax on this basis is $50,325.58. But this figure is 56.8 per cent of the Federal tax, so that the executors ought to be allowed to take that much credit or $50,268 and would have to pay as Federal tax only the balance, or $38,232. Again it is necessary to recompute the Connecticut tax on this new basis, and so on ad infinitum. Neither tax can ever be determined by this method. If it is figured back and forth long enough the result will eventually be zero. When this point is reached in such a case, the executor and the State inheritance-tax department usually quit figuring in disgust and decide upon an arbitrary figure which shall represent the amount allowed as a deduction on account of Federal estate tax in ascertaining the net estate subject to Connecticut inheritance tax.

The problems thus raised by two mutually dependent indeterminates can only be solved by a complicated algebraic formula. Executors and administrators are ordinarily in no position to work out such a formula for themselves, and it is unreasonable to expect them to do so. A similar matter was once passed upon by the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Edwards v. Slocomb (264 U. S. 61). This case was under the revenue act of 1918, but the principle is equally applicable to subsequent acts, including those of 1924 and 1926. In the case mentioned decedent, after making specific bequests in her will, had bequeathed the residue to charitable and educational institutions, which bequests were exempt from estate tax. In order to arrive at the amount of residue which would be exempt, the Government claimed that there should be deducted from the gross estate not only the allowable deductions, such as debts, expenses, etc., and the amount of specific bequests, but also the amount of Federal estate tax which was to be paid on this estate. The purpose of this was, of course, to cut down the amount of residue which would be exempt. It resulted in the ridiculous procedure of having to guess at what the Federal estate tax might be in order to use it as a deduction in ascertaining the Federal estate tax itself. This is a reductio ad absurdum in taxation.

Justice Holmes, in refuting the Government's contention, said, "The Government offers an algebraic formula by which it would solve the problems raised by two mutually dependent indeterminates. It might fairly be answered, as said by circuit court of appeals, that 'algebraic formulæ are not lightly to be imputed to legislators.'" It was held that the contention of the Government was not supportable and that for the purposes of the deduction on account of charitable bequests the amount of bequests to charity out of the residuary estate is the amount of the residuary estate after State transfer or succession taxes have been paid therefrom by the terms of the will, without further reduction by the amount of the Federal estate tax on the net estate, though such tax in fact does reduce by its amount the residuary estate passing to charity.

This decision by the United States Supreme Court makes clear the attitude of that court toward a tax law which is so arranged that complicated algebraic formulæ must be used in order to arrive at the amount of tax. The present situation, however, is one that calls for an algebraic formula, because of the two mutually dependent indeterminates in any case where the Connecticut inheritance tax is less than the 80 per cent of the Federal estate tax. It is thus manifest that the 80 per cent credit clause in section 301 (b) of the present Federal act contains in itself an absurdity which has already been disapproved by our Supreme Court, and which, therefore, should be wiped off the books.

Since the above-mentioned decision, the Federal Government, so far as is known, has abandoned the use of such formulæ, but because of the absurdity inherent in section 301 (b) of the law, the burden of using such an algebraic formula is thrown squarely upon the Connecticut inheritance-tax department if accuracy is desired, as, of course, it is. The Federal Government does not have to trouble about any formula, because the Federal Government says flatly that it will pay no attention to any claim for credit until the Connecticut tax is correctly determined and paid. This necessitates fixing the Connecticut tax first, which can not be done, as shown above, without the use of an algebraic formula so complicated that, to the knowledge of the Connecticut inheritance-tax department, none has yet been worked out.

The only way to avoid this absurdity is to raise Connecticut rates so high that they will surely absorb the 80 per cent credit. Here appears an added element of coercion upon Connecticut.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, I wish to offer an amendment. I do not want to have it read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be received, printed, and will lie on the table.

Mr. FLETCHER. I understand the pending amendment will be the one offered by the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. SMOOT. That is correct.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, announced that the House insisted upon its amendments to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 82) providing for the erection of a public historical museum on the site of Fort Defiance, Defiance, Ohio, disagreed to by the Senate; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. LUCE, Mr. ALLEN, Mr. DAVENPORT, Mr. GILBERT, and Mr. BULWINKLE were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS SIGNED

The message also announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions, and they were signed by the Vice President:

S. 766. An act to fix the compensation of registers of local land offices, and for other purposes;

S. 1662. An act to change the boundaries of the Tule River Indian Reservation, Calif.;

S. 2084. An act for the purchase of land in the vicinity of Winnemucca, Nev., for an Indian colony, and for other purposes;

S. 2340. An act to transfer to the city of Duluth, Minn., the old Federal building, together with the site thereof;

S. 3026. An act authorizing the construction of a fence along the east boundary of the Papago Indian Reservation, Ariz.;

S. 3365. An act to authorize allotments to unallotted Indians on the Shoshone or Wind River Reservation, Wyo.;

S. 3456. An act allowing the rank, pay, and allowances of a colonel, Medical Corps, United States Army, to the medical officer assigned to duty as personal physician to the President;

S. 3556. An act to insure adequate supplies of timber and other forest products for the people of the United States, to promote the full use for timber growing and other purposes of forest lands in the United States, including farm wood lots and those abandoned areas not suitable for agricultural production, and to secure the correlation and the most economical conduct of forest research in the Department of Agriculture through research in reforestation, timber growing, protection, utilization, forest economics, and related subjects, and for other purposes;

S. 3565. An act to provide compensation for disability or death resulting from injury to employees in certain employments in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes;

S. 3699. An act for the relief of the land-grant railroad operated between the station formerly known as East Portland, in the State of Oregon, and Roseville, in the State of California;

S. 4034. An act authorizing the Calhoun Bridge Co., an Illinois corporation, its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Illinois River at or near Grafton, Ill.;

S. 4045. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Highway Department of the State of Tennessee to construct a bridge across the French Broad River on the Newport-Ashville (N. C.) road near the town of Del Rio, in Cocke County, Tenn.;

S. 4059. An act authorizing the State Highway Commission, Commonwealth of Kentucky, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Tennessee River at or near the mouth of Clarks River;

S. 4060. An act authorizing the State Highway Commission, Commonwealth of Kentucky, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Cumberland River at or near Canton, Ky.;

S. 4061. An act authorizing the State Highway Commission, Commonwealth of Kentucky, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Cumberland River at or near Smithland, Ky.;

S. 4062. An act authorizing the State Highway Commission, Commonwealth of Kentucky, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Tennessee River at or near Egners Ferry, Ky.;

S. 4253. An act authorizing H. L. McKee, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across Lake Sabine at or near Port Arthur, Tex.;

S. 4254. An act authorizing the State of Texas and the State of Louisiana to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across the Sabine River at or near Pendleton's Ferry;

S. 4288. An act authorizing the State Highway Commission, Commonwealth of Kentucky, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the South Fork of the Cumberland River at Burnside, Pulaski County, Ky.;

S. 4289. An act authorizing the State Highway Commission, Commonwealth of Kentucky, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Cumberland River at or near Neelys Ferry, in Cumberland County, Ky.;

S. 4290. An act authorizing the State Highway Commission, Commonwealth of Kentucky, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Cumberland River at or near Burkesville, Cumberland County, Ky.;

S. 4291. An act authorizing the State Highway Commission, Commonwealth of Kentucky, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Cumberland River, at or near Arat, Cumberland County, Ky.;

S. 4292. An act authorizing the State Highway Commission, Commonwealth of Kentucky, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Cumberland River at or near Center Point, in Monroe County, Ky.;

POLITICS AND THE COLORADO RIVER

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I ask to have printed in the RECORD an article entitled "Politics and the Colorado River," published in the Electrical World of the 12th instant, by R. I. Harriman, president of the New England Power Co., of Boston, Mass.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

POLITICS AND THE COLORADO RIVER—SCHEME TO INJECT FEDERAL GOVERNMENT INTO POWER BUSINESS DISGUISED AS SAFEGUARD AGAINST IMPERIAL VALLEY FLOODS

By H. I. Harriman, president New England Power Co., Boston, Mass.

SOUND EXPERT ADVICE

(Impressive because restrained and convincing because it offers a constructive program based on competent personal investigation on the ground, Mr. Harriman's analysis of the Boulder Dam project and the related political program for utilizing the Colorado River at the expense of the Federal Government deserves careful reading by every friend of individual initiative in the United States. Mr. Harriman shows most effectively how protection against floods can be attained at a cost far below the anticipated outlay required to embark the Federal Government in the power business as a gigantic by-product of an apparently innocent scheme to regulate and utilize stream flow in a basin occupying one-thirteenth of the area of the country.)

Under the guise of a beneficent plan to protect the Imperial Valley of California against floods from the Colorado River by damming that stream at Boulder Canyon, developing hydroelectric power for transmission to the Los Angeles district, and constructing a water supply from the Colorado Basin to serve a future population of 5,000,000 in southern California, it is proposed to launch the United States Government into the power business at enormous cost and with all the uncertainties which beset vast political undertakings entered into without due regard to economic factors which should control action in such a situation.

A proper understanding of the problem of the Colorado River demands a brief explanation of the topography of its basin and the characteristics of its river flow. The Colorado Basin lies betwen the Continental Divide and the Coast Range. It includes southern Wyoming, parts of Utah and Colorado, the western half of New Mexico, substantially all of Arizona, and slight areas in Nevada and California. Its area of more than 200,000 square miles is a territory larger than the German Empire and comprises about one-thirteenth of the entire area of the United States. It is a land of extreme variations in rainfall, in elevation, and in the character of the country. The northerly part of the basin is highly mountainous and heavily timbered, a territory of warm summers and cold winters, a land of deep snowfall, a region that stores snows of winter and pours them forth in irresistible floods in the early summer.

The middle section of the Colorado Basin is a territory of low rainfall (6 or 7 inches), of high plateaus, and of vast canyons. In no place in the world are there such deep, marvelously colored, and wonderfully beautiful gorges and canyons.

The southern portion of the basin is a desert country, relatively low in elevation, with a rainfall varying from 3 to 4 inches, and of tremendous summer heat, 115° to 120° being not unusual temperatures over much of this southern area in the months of June, July, and August. Irrigation is of tremendous importance in the arid West. The normal annual flow of the Colorado River is about 17,000,000 acre-feet, extreme years ranging from 9,000,000 to 25,000,000 acre-feet. Storage of water is vitally essential. The normal flow will irrigate about 5,000,000 acres, but in extremely dry years only half that area can be served. The Reclamation Service estimates that in the United States Basin of the river about 7,000,000 acres could be irrigated if the water supply was sufficient. To this we must add about 1,000,000 acres in the delta region of Mexico. Already about 2,500,000 acres in the United States Basin is irrigated, plus 200,000 in Mexico.

In 1921 representatives of the various States in the basin convened to draw a treaty which would definitely divide the waters of the river between the various States and permit the development of storage without fear that the States not benefited would be deprived of the future use of their just portion of the water.

The conference, while only partially successful, agreed that the four upper basin States should always so regulate their takings for irrigation that over a 10-year period an annual average of not less than 7,500,000 acre-feet should pass Lees Ferry for use by the three lower basin States, and to this was added 1,000,000 acre-feet for the use of the lower basin States represented by the flow of the Gila River.

Unfortunately, the treaty did not attempt to divide the waters between the various States in the upper and lower basins, and so far Arizona has failed to ratify the treaty, fearing that without an agreement with California it would be unsafe for her (Arizona) to consent to a division of the waters between the upper and the lower basins unless simultaneously a treaty were enacted between California and Arizona giving Arizona protection against the immediate appropriation by the Sunset State of more than her share of the flowage into the lower basin States. California's ratification is conditional only and is to be made effective if the United States creates a huge storage reservoir on the lower river.

The upper basin States demand ratification without reservations. The cost of placing water in the Imperial Valley of California is probably not over half the cost of delivery to the high table lands of Arizona, and until there is a division of the water to which the lower basin States are entitled Arizona will probably refuse to ratify the treaty. Both Arizona and the upper basin States fear that Mexico will put to prior use much of the water that otherwise might be used on United States land. Water is the lifeblood of these States and each State fears that Mexico or some other State will deprive it of a part of the water that it might otherwise use and doom a portion of its territory to perpetual desert.

In the canyon section of the river 6,000,000 horsepower can be developed on a 60 per cent load factor. This exceeds the energy that can be developed on the St. Lawrence River or at Niagara Falls. To-day there is little market for this potential power, as the territory is very sparsely settled with no industry and no local use. Only the lower section of the river lies within transmission distance of the large electrical market of southern California, but to anyone who visualizes the phenomenal engineering and industrial progress of the last 50 years it is not difficult to imagine that the entire potential power of the stream may be used within the next half century.

The danger of a break of the river into the Imperial Valley is ever present and the homes of 60,000 people with a taxable value exceeding $100,000,000 will be in constant danger until the Federal Government takes adequate steps to open a new and proper channel for the sea. Storage on the main Colorado River would, of course, reduce the flood menace to this valley, but the threat of floods from the Gila will still exist and the valley will never be safe, storage or no storage, until a new and adequate channel is cut to the Gulf.

Competent engineers affirm that if the United States and Mexico execute a proper treaty a new channel can be cut at a cost not exceeding $5,000,000 substantially parallel to the original channel of the river, which will safely carry the flood waters of the Colorado to the Gulf without menace to the Imperial Valley and without danger of undue silting.

We turn now to consider measures pending in Congress for the construction by the Federal Government of a huge storage dam near Boulder Canyon, the creation of a 1,000,000-horsepower plant and the digging of an all-American canal to turn the waters of the river into the Imperial Valley through a channel lying in the United States alone.

The Reclamation Service estimates the total cost of the above projects at $125,000,000. Others have estimated the cost at double that amount, but whatever the cost, it will be by all odds the largest business adventure within the boundaries of the United States which the Federal Government has ever attempted.

The merits and demerits of this proposed all-American canal involve a long story which will not be entered into here. Suffice it to say that a board of Government engineers has reported the canal to be feasible at a cost of approximately $31,000,000, but it also suggested that if the canal were to be built and a larger area of land watered storage would be necessary against the low-water season.

The search for storage aroused the interest of Los Angeles. The managers of the municipal electric system there had for some time been perturbed over the necessity of buying from a private corporation a major portion of the electricity that it sold to its customers. The citizens were not, however, prepared to vote a huge bond issue that would enable the city to develop its own hydroelectric system and the suggestion of storage on the Colorado for the benefit of the Imperial Valley seemed to open the possibilities of Federal aid. Astute politicians combined forces and one step has led to another until the early plan to irrigate a few thousand acres of mesa lands above the Imperial Valley has developed into a project to secure Federal construction of an irrigation, storage, and hydroelectric development of enormous proportions. This project is claimed to be the only sound method of protecting the Imperial Valley against floods, which have twice swept into it and which now threaten its existence.

It is universally conceded that the Federal Government should take adequate steps to protect the Imperial Valley from another disastrous flood. The valley is menaced, not primarily because of the size of the Colorado flood, but because the original stream bed of the river became clogged during the two years or thereabouts when it flowed into the valley. Recently, American engineers, in consultation with Señor Mejorada, a distinguished Mexican engineer, have revived and improved the plan for an adequate channel protected by levees from the international border to the Gulf and they estimate its present cost at $5,000,000. If this plan is carried through the Imperial Valley will be adequately protected against all floods and a channel provided which will maintain itself by natural erosion and with little, if any, annual cost. It is a plan approved by Mexico and undoubtedly the United States Government can secure the right for the construction and maintenance of this channel if proper representations are made at Mexico City. Yet we hear nothing of this project, though it is the least expensive and most adequate plan for protecting the Imperial Valley against floods.

This channel is needed whether or not storage is constructed on the main Colorado River, for the Gila River and other streams entering below the proposed site of the Boulder Canyon Dam produce short floods of as great height, but of less duration, as those of the main river. The Boulder Canyon project would in no way protect the Imperial Valley from the Gila River floods.

The most available site for storage is probably the Mojave Canyon site below Needles, sometimes known as the Topock site, where a dam of moderate height will impound 10,000,000 acre-feet at a cost estimated between $10,000,000 and $15,000,000. This project was seriously recommended some years ago by Secretaries Weeks, Work, and Wallace, who then comprised the Federal Power Board. It did not meet with favor in southern California because it did not include a great power development or an all-American canal.

Storage should, of course, be created in the upper stretches of the river above its rapid drop so that the flow may be regulated and conserved for all the potential power plants of the stream. In the upper basin there are two or three sites at which large storage can be created, and on the main river there are three additional sites. Of these last, at the upper site, Lees Ferry, where 20,000,000 acre-feet can be stored and the river regulated to an even flow of about 15,000 second-feet, the most desirable location appears to exist for a great storage reservoir. This is at the head of the canyon section of the main river and would make possible the development of the entire stream for power. A second site is at Boulder Canyon, or Black Canyon, where a storage of equal size can be created, and finally there is the Topock site below Needles, in the Mojave Canyon, where a reservoir of any size up to 20,000,000 acre-feet can be created. A storage of 6,000,000 acre-feet is more than sufficient to prevent destructive floods on the lower river.

With the floods of the main river regulated by a reservoir at Lees Ferry the construction problem of all the lower dam sites on the river will be greatly simplified. Preliminary borings indicate rock of a suitable character, but much further detailed study should be given to this site before any work is started.

A dam at Boulder or Black Canyon, near the foot of the rapid water of the Colorado River, is also probably feasible, although the bedrock is so far below the water level as to make the problem of building the foundation under a torrent rushing through a box canyon quite unprecedented and some engineers say all but impossible.

The storage capacity of Boulder Canyon will be of value in regulating the stream for any power plant located at that dam, or for further irrigation in the Imperial Valley and in Mexico, but it will have no value for the great power plants which will eventually utilize the main power of the river. At some time in the future storage must be created either at Lees Ferry or in the upper basin to regulate the flow of the Colorado for the 13 or 14 power plants which will ultimately be built to utilize the fall in the Grand Canyon. When this upper storage is created the storage at Boulder Canyon will be unnecessary and the Boulder Dam will become a power dam without other function.

At the Topock site a storage of from 6,000,000 to 10,000,000 acre-feet can be created at a cost of from $10,000,000 to $15,000,000, or a storage up to 24,000,000 acre-feet at a corresponding additional cost. A 6,000,000 acre-foot storage will be of ample size to reduce the floods on the main river to a point that will in no way threaten Imperial Valley and substantially to increase the low water flow of the Colorado during the irrigation season, but no great amount of power can be developed at Topock. For this reason this project has not appealed to the managers of the municipal plant of Los Angeles, who desire to have the Federal Government supply them with electrical energy, or to the promoters in the Imperial Valley who wish to have the carrying charges of the all-American canal met from the sale of power.

The Boulder Canyon project is a power project pure and simple and is an effort to inject the Federal Government into the business of generating electricity. Boulder Canyon is not the proper location for a storage dam for the regulation of the main river. A river should be regulated at the head of its rapids and not at the foot. Again, the Boulder Dam is entirely unnecessary for the protection of or for irrigation in the Imperial Valley, because both of these objects can be attained at a small fraction of the cost of the Boulder Dam by the construction of a dam at Topock.

BOULDER DAM IN ITS TRUE LIGHT

Let us examine the Boulder project in its true light as a project to force the Federal Government into an investment of not less than $125,000,000 for the purpose of generating power for the cities of southern California, and for the further purpose of building an all-American canal which the Imperial Valley can not afford to carry.

If the project is carried out there will be developed at Boulder approximately 1,000,000 horsepower, or 750,000 kilowatt, on a 55 per cent load factor. This means the annual production of about 3,500,000,000 kilowatt-hours.

The Federal Power Commission, which has carefully examined the market for Boulder energy, estimates that it will take southern California from 9 to 10 years to absorb this block of power after delivery is begun. It further estimates that the cost of Boulder power delivered at Los Angeles, including all transmission costs and losses, will be between 4¾ and 5 mills per kilowatt-hour. This is on the assumption that the Boulder project, including the all-American canal, will cost not exceeding $125,000,000. If the cost of the project should exceed that amount the cost of energy delivered in southern California would be increased proportionately.

STEAM POWER COSTS DECREASING

The cost of power from Boulder Dam in fairness should be compared to the cost of power generated in a modern steam plant near Los Angeles. The Southern California Edison Co. is now producing power, all charges included, in its Long Beach plant at slightly less than 4½ mills per kilowatt-hour. In its new and improved plant now under construction it is expected that the cost will be reduced to 3⅞ mills per kilowatt-hour, and in view of the remarkable strides that are being made in increasing the efficiency of steam plants it is not fanciful to imagine that the cost of steam power in southern California, with oil at its present price, will be approximately 3 mills at the time when the Boulder Dam project can be completed. Even if the oil supply of southern California is exhausted and it is necessary to turn to Utah coal, energy cost should not exceed 4 mills per kilowatt-hour. Thus the power users of southern California will be paying a mill a kilowatt more for Boulder energy, with the uncertainties of long-distance transmission, than for steam energy generated at their door. This will mean an annual loss of $3,500,000, and it may be twice that amount.

Boulder power at 4¾ mills is based upon the assumption that the dam itself can be built for $40,000,000, yet it must be recognized that the project is one of great hazard, that a dam 550 feet high has never as yet been constructed; that it is necessary to go 127 feet below the channel of the river in order to find bedrock and to excavate perhaps 20 or 30 feet into this bedrock, thus making the total height of the dam from bedrock to crest nearly 700 feet; and that the work of clearing and preparing the foundations must be done in a stream less than 300 feet wide and carrying each year floods of half the volume of the water which passes over Niagara Falls, and in some years a flow equal to the flow of Niagara. Competent engineers have estimated the cost of the Boulder Dam at from $90,000,000 to $100,000,000, and some say that the project is almost impossible of accomplishment because of the unsurpassed difficulties in building such a huge dam in such a narrow gorge carrying such enormous floods.

It is urged that stored water from the Colorado River is necessary in order that Los Angeles and the other cities of southern California may have adequate domestic water supply. Los Angeles now gets its water supply from local sources and from the Owens River, and the best engineering evidence would indicate that this supply can be doubled before it is necessary to turn to the Colorado. Obviously the water of the Colorado should not be used by Los Angeles until every other source has been exhausted because of the great distance which it must be carried and the fact that it must be pumped over a ridge of the coast range 1,500 feet high. When the population of Los Angeles reaches 5,000,000 it may be necessary for her to secure a part of her water supply from the Colorado, but even western optimism must admit that such a contingency will not arise for several decades.

It is further urged that the Boulder project is required in order to protect the Imperial Valley from floods, yet we have seen that this protection can be supplied in other ways at a fraction of the cost.

Again, it is stated that Boulder power is required by southern California. While admitting the great growth of the power demand of the Sunset State, we have seen that its power requirements can be furnished at a very much lower cost from steam.

Finally, the need of additional stored water for irrigation is stressed. Such additional supply can be had at moderate cost from the Topock Dam, and further engineering study will reveal where the main storage of the Colorado should be located.

A SANE PROGRAM

What, then, is a sane program for the development of the Colorado River? The one pressing need is the protection of the Imperial Valley from floods. This protection can best be supplied by the construction of a suitable channel from the international border to the Gulf of California, and it is suggested that the first step should be the negotiation of a treaty with Mexico providing for the construction of such a channel.

As a second step the Topock Dam should be constructed both for flood protection and for irrigation. The construction of this dam requires no treaty with Mexico, and work on it can be started at once.

The new channel and the Topock Dam can together be constructed at a cost of from $15,000,000 to $20,000,000, and together they will protect the Imperial Valley from floods and they will furnish it with such additional irrigation supply as may be required in the next decade.

With these two projects under way the Engineer Corps of the United States Army, assisted, possibly, by other engineering departments of the Government, should be given an adequate appropriation with which to make a complete study of the entire river. Such a study should include borings at all possible dam sites, complete surveys and a comprehensive plan which will most efficiently provide for the future development of power and irrigation. Such a program is sane, constructive, and relatively inexpensive and will avoid costly mistakes and a wasteful use of one of the greatest resources of the far West.

THE MERCHANT MARINE—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I desire to call up the conference report on the merchant marine bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection the Senate proceeded to consider the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 744) to further develop an American merchant marine, to assure its permanence in the transportation of the foreign trade of the United States, and for other purposes.

The conference report is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 744) to further develop an American merchant marine, to assure its permanence in the transportation of the foreign trade of the United States, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"TITLE I—DECLARATION OF POLICY

"SEC. 1. The policy and the primary purpose declared in section 1 of the merchant marine act, 1920 (U. S. C., title 46, sec. 861), are hereby confirmed.

"TITLE II—SHIPPING BOARD VESSELS

"SALES BY BOARD

"SEC. 201. The United States Shipping Board shall not sell any vessel or any line of vessels except when in its judgment the building up and maintenance of an adequate merchant marine can be best served thereby, and then only upon the affirmative vote of five members of the board duly recorded.

"REMODELING AND IMPROVING

"SEC. 202. In addition to its power to recondition and repair vessels under section 12 of the merchant marine act, 1920, as amended (U. S. C., title 46, sec. 871), the board may remodel and improve vessels owned by the United States and in its possession or under its control, so as to equip them adequately for competition in the foreign trade of the United States. Any vessel so remodeled or improved shall be documented under the laws of the United States and shall remain documented under such laws for not less than five years from the date of the completion of the remodeling or improving and so long as there remains due the United States any money or interest on account of such vessel, and during such period it shall be operated only on voyages which are not exclusively coastwise.

"REPLACEMENTS

"SEC. 203. The necessity for the replacement of vessels owned by the United States and in the possession or under the control of the board and the construction for the board of additional up-to-date cargo, combination cargo and passenger, and passenger ships, to give the United States an adequate merchant marine, is hereby recognized, and the board is authorized and directed to present to Congress, from time to time, recommendations setting forth what new vessels are required for permanent operation under the United States flag in foreign trade, and the estimated cost thereof, to the end that Congress may, from time to time, make provision for replacements and additions. All vessels built for the board shall be built in the United States, and they shall be planned with reference to their possible usefulness as auxiliaries to the naval and military services of the United States.

"TITLE III—CONSTRUCTION LOAN FUND

"TERMS AND CONDITIONS OF LOANS

"SEC. 301. (a) Section 11 of the merchant marine act, 1920, as amended (U. S. C. title 46, sec. 870; 44 Stat. L., pt. 2, 1451), is amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 11. (a) That the board may set aside, out of the revenues from sales, including proceeds of securities consisting of notes, letters of credit, or other evidences of debt, taken by it for deferred payments on purchase money from sales by the board, whether such securities are to the order of the United States, the United States Shipping Board, the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation, or the United States Shipping Board Merchant Fleet Corporation, either directly or by indorsement, until the amounts thus set aside from time to time aggregate $125,000,000. The amount thus set aside shall be known as the construction loan fund. The board may use such fund to the extent it thinks proper, upon such terms as the board may prescribe, in making loans to aid persons citizens of the United States in the construction by them in private shipyards or navy yards in the United States of vessels of the best and most efficient type for the establishment or maintenance of service on lines deemed desirable or necessary by the board, provided such vessels shall be fitted and equipped with the most modern, the most efficient, and the most economical engines, machinery, and commercial appliances; or in the outfitting and equipment by them in private shipyards or navy yards in the United States of vessels already built, with engines, machinery, and commercial appliances of the type and kind mentioned; or in the reconditioning, remodeling, or improvement by them in private shipyards or navy yards in the United States of vessels already built.

"'(b) The term "vessel" or "vessels," where used in this section, shall be construed to mean a vessel or vessels to aid in whose construction, equipment, reconditioning, remodeling, or improvement, a loan is made from the construction loan fund of the board. All such vessels shall be documented under the laws of the United States and shall remain documented under such laws for not less than 20 years from the date the loan is made, and so long as there remains due the United States any principal or interest on account of such loan.

"'(c) No loan shall be made for a longer time than 20 years. If it is not to be repaid within two years from the date when the first advance on the loan is made by the board the principal shall be payable in equal annual installments, to be definitely prescribed in the instruments. The loan may be paid at any time, on 30 days' written notice to the board, with interest computed to date of payment.

"'(d) All such loans shall bear interest at rates as follows, payable not less frequently than annually: During any period in which the vessel is operated exclusively in coastwise trade, or is inactive, the rate of interest shall be as fixed by the board, but not less than 5¼ per cent per annum. During any period in which the vessel is operated in foreign trade the rate shall be the lowest rates of yield (to the nearest one-eighth of 1 per cent) of any Government obligation bearing a date of issue subsequent to April 6, 1917 (except postal-savings bonds), and outstanding at the time the loan is made by the board, as certified by the Secretary of the Treasury to the board upon its request. The board may prescribe rules for determining the amount of interest payable under the provisions of this paragraph.

"'(e) No loan shall be for a greater sum than three-fourths the cost of the vessel or vessels to be constructed or than three-fourths the cost of the reconditioning, remodeling, improving, or equipping hereinbefore authorized for a vessel already built.

"'(f) The board shall require such security as it shall deem necessary to insure the completion of the construction, reconditioning, remodeling, improving, or equipping of the vessel within a reasonable time and the repayment of the loan with interest; when the construction, reconditioning, remodeling, improving, or equipping of the vessel is completed the security shall include a preferred mortgage on the vessel, complying with the provisions of the ship mortgage act, 1920 (U. S. C., title 46, chap. 25), which mortgage shall contain appropriate covenants and provisions to insure the proper physical maintenance of the vessel, and its protection against liens for taxes, penalties, claims, or liabilities of any kind whatever, which might impair the security for the debt. It shall also contain any other covenants and provisions the board may prescribe, including a provision for the summary maturing of the entire debt, for causes to be enumerated in the mortgage.

"'(g) The board shall also require and the security furnished shall provide that the owner of the vessel shall keep the same insured against loss or damage by fire, and against marine risks and disasters, and against any and all other insurable risks the board specifies, with such insurance companies, associations, or underwriters, and under such forms of policies, and to such an amount, as the board may prescribe or approve; such insurance shall be made payable to the board and/or to the parties, as interest may appear. The board is authorized to enter into any agreement that it deems wise in respect to the payment and for the guaranty of premiums of insurance.'

"(b) Section 11 of the merchant marine act, 1920, as in force immediately prior to the enactment of this act, shall remain in force in respect of all loans made before the enactment of this act.

"INCREASE OF CONSTRUCTION LOAN FUND

"SEC. 302. (a) There is authorized to be appropriated, to be credited to and for the purposes of the construction loan fund created by section 11 of the merchant marine act, 1920, as amended, such amounts as will, when added to the amounts credited to such fund by the United States Shipping Board under authority of law (exclusive of repayments on loans from the fund), make the aggregate of the amounts credited to such fund (exclusive of such repayments) equal to $250,000,000.

"(b) When $250,000,000 has been credited to such fund (whether by the board under authority of law or from appropriations authorized by this section, but exclusive of repayments on loans from the fund) then no further sums (except such repayments) shall be credited by the board to such fund.

"(c) The construction loan fund shall continue to be a revolving fund. Repayments on loans from the fund shall be credited to the fund, but interest on such loans shall be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts.

"TITLE IV—OCEAN MAIL SERVICE

"SCOPE OF TITLE

"SEC. 401. All mails of the United States carried on vessels between ports (exclusive of ports in the Dominion of Canada other than ports in Nova Scotia) between which it is lawful under the navigation laws for a vessel not documented under the laws of the United States to carry merchandise shall, if practicable, be carried on vessels in respect of which a contract is made under this title.

"REQUIREMENTS OF POSTAL SERVICE

"SEC. 402. As soon as practicable after the enactment of this act, and from time to time thereafter, it shall be the duty of the Postmaster General to certify to the United States Shipping Board what ocean mail routes, in his opinion, should be established and/or operated for the carrying of mails of the United States between ports (exclusive of ports in the Dominion of Canada other than ports in Nova Scotia) between which it is lawful under the navigation laws for a vessel not documented under the laws of the United States to carry merchandise, distributed so as equitably to serve the Atlantic, Mexican Gulf, and Pacific coast ports, the volume of mail then moving over such routes and the estimated volume thereof during the next five years, the times deemed by him advisable for the departure of the vessels carrying such mails, and other requirements necessary to provide an adequate postal service between such ports.

"RECOMMENDATIONS BY SHIPPING BOARD

"SEC. 403. The board shall, as soon as practicable after receipt of such certification from the Postmaster General, determine and certify to him the type, size, speed, and other characteristics of the vessels which should be employed on each such route, the frequency and regularity of their sailings, and all other facts which bear upon the capacity of the vessels to meet the requirements of the service stated by the Postmaster General. The board in making its determination shall take into consideration the desirability of having the mail service performed by vessels constructed in accordance with the latest and most approved types, with modern improvements and appliances.

"AUTHORITY TO MAKE CONTRACTS

"SEC. 404. The Postmaster General is authorized to enter into contracts with citizens of the United States whose bids are accepted, for the carrying of mails between ports (exclusive of ports in the Dominion of Canada other than ports in Nova Scotia) between which it is lawful under the navigation laws for a vessel not documented under the laws of the United States to carry merchandise. He shall include in such contracts such requirements and conditions as in his best judgment will insure the full and efficient performance thereof and the protection of the interests of the Government. Performance under any such contract shall begin not more than three years after the contract is let, and the term of the contract shall not exceed 10 years.

"VESSELS

"SEC. 405. (a) The vessels employed in ocean mail service under a contract made under this title shall be steel vessels, shall be steam or motor vessels, and shall be either (1) American-built and registered under the laws of the United States during the entire time of such employment, or (2) registered under the laws of the United States not later than February 1, 1928, and so registered during the entire time of such employment, or (3) actually ordered and under construction for the account of citizens of the United States prior to February 1, 1928, and registered under the laws of the United States during the entire time of such employment.

"(b) A vessel for the services of which a contract is entered into under authority of this title, and the construction of which is hereafter begun, shall be either (1) a vessel constructed, according to plans and specifications approved by the Secretary of the Navy, with particular reference to economical conversion into an auxiliary naval vessel, or (2) a vessel which will be otherwise useful to the United States in time of national emergency.

"(c) From and after the enactment of this act all licensed officers of vessels documented under the laws of the United States, as now required by law, shall be citizens of the United States; from and after the enactment of this act and for a period of four years, upon each departure from the United States of a vessel employed in ocean mail service under this title, one-half of the crew (crew including all employees of the ship other than officers) shall be citizens of the United States and thereafter two-thirds of the crew as above defined shall be citizens of the United States.

"ADVERTISING FOR BIDS

"SEC. 406. Before making any contract for carrying ocean mails under this title the Postmaster General shall give public notice by advertisement once a week for three weeks in such daily newspapers as he shall select in each of the cities of Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, New Orleans, Charleston, Norfolk, Savannah, Jacksonville, Galveston, Houston, and Mobile, calling for bids for carrying of such ocean mails; or when the proposed service is to be on the Pacific Ocean then in Los Angeles, San Francisco, Portland, Tacoma, and Seattle. Such notice shall describe the proposed route, the time when such contract will be made, the number of trips a year, the schedule required, the time when the service shall commence, the character of the vessels required, and all other information deemed by the Postmaster General to be necessary to inform prospective bidders as to the character of the service to be required.

"AWARDING CONTRACTS

"SEC. 407. Each contract for the carrying of ocean mails under this title shall be awarded to the lowest bidder who, in the judgment of the Postmaster General, possesses such qualifications as to insure proper performance of the mail service under the contract.

"CLASSIFICATION OF VESSELS

"SEC. 408. (a) The vessels employed in ocean mail service under this title shall be divided into classes as follows:

"Class 7. Vessels capable of maintaining a speed of 10 knots at sea in ordinary weather, and of a gross registered tonnage of not less than 2,500 tons.

"Class 6. Vessels capable of maintaining a speed of 10 knots at sea in ordinary weather, and of a gross registered tonnage of net less than 4,000 tons.

"Class 5. Vessels capable of maintaining a speed of 13 knots at sea in ordinary weather, and of a gross registered tonnage of not less than 8,000 tons.

"Class 4. Vessels capable of maintaining a speed of 16 knots at sea in ordinary weather, and of a gross registered tonnage of not less than 10,000 tons.

"Class 3. Vessels capable of maintaining a speed of 18 knots at sea in ordinary weather, and of a gross registered tonnage of not less than 12,000 tons.

"Class 2. Vessels capable of maintaining a speed of 20 knots at sea in ordinary weather, and of a gross registered tonnage of not less than 16,000 tons.

"Class 1. Vessels capable of maintaining a speed of 24 knots at sea in ordinary weather, and of a gross registered tonnage of not less than 20,000 tons.

"(b) The classification of a vessel may be based upon its speed without regard to its tonnage if the Postmaster General is of opinion that speed is especially important on the particular route on which the vessel is to be employed, and that a suitable vessel documented under the laws of the United States of a higher classification is not available on reasonable terms and conditions, or, on account of the character of the ports served or for other reasons, can not be safely or economically employed on such route.

"COMPENSATION UNDER CONTRACTS

"SEC. 409. (a) The rate of compensation to be paid under this title for ocean mail service shall be fixed in the contract. Such rate shall not exceed: For vessels of class 7, $1.50 per nautical mile; for vessels of class 6, $2.50 per nautical mile; for vessels of class 5, $4 per nautical mile; for vessels of class 4, $6 per nautical mile; for vessels of class 3, $8 per nautical mile; for vessels of class 2, $10 per nautical mile; and for vessels of class 1, $12 per nautical mile. As used in this section the term 'nautical mile' means 6,080 feet.

"(b) When the Postmaster General is of opinion that the interests of the Postal Service will be served thereby he may, in the case of a vessel of class 1 capable of maintaining a speed in excess of 24 knots at sea in ordinary weather, contract for the payment of compensation in excess of the maximum compensation authorized in subsection (a), but the compensation per nautical mile authorized by this subsection shall not be greater than an amount which bears the same ratio to $12 as the speed which such vessel is capable of maintaining at sea in ordinary weather bears to 24 knots.

"(c) If the Postmaster General is of opinion that to expedite and maintain satisfactory service under a contract made under this title airplanes or airships are required to be used in conjunction with vessels, he may allow additional compensation, in amounts to be determined by him, on account of the use of such airplanes or airships. Such airplanes or airships shall be American-built and owned, officered, and manned by citizens of the United States.

"(d) The Postmaster General shall determine the number of nautical miles by the shortest practicable route between the ports involved and payments under any contract made under this title shall be made for such number of miles on each outward voyage regardless of the actual mileage traveled.

"VIOLATION OF CONTRACTS

"SEC. 410. In the case of failure of a vessel from any cause to perform any regular voyage required by a contract made under this title a pro rata deduction shall be made from the contract price on account of such omitted voyage; and suitable deductions, to be determined by the Postmaster General, may be made from the compensation payable under the contract for delays, failures to properly safeguard the mails, or other irregularities in the performance of the contract. Deductions so determined upon shall be deducted by the Postmaster General from the payments otherwise due and payable under the terms of the contract. The Postmaster General may, in case of emergency, permit the substitution for a particular voyage of a vessel not within the provisions of the contract, even though not conforming to the requirements of section 405.

"PASSENGERS, FREIGHT, AND EXPRESS

"SEC. 411. Any vessel operating under a contract made under this title may carry passengers and their baggage, and freight and express, and may do all ordinary business done by similar vessels.

"NAVAL OFFICERS

"SEC. 412. Naval officers of the United States on the active list may volunteer for service on any vessel employed in mail service under a contract made under the provisions of this title, and when accepted by the owner or master thereof may be assigned to such duty by the Secretary of the Navy. While in such employment such officers shall receive from the Government half pay, exclusive of allowances, and such other compensation from the owner or master as may be agreed upon by the parties; but such officers while in such employment shall be required to perform only such duties as appertain to the merchant marine.

"MAIL MESSENGERS

"SEC. 413. Upon each vessel employed in ocean-mail service under a contract made under this title, the Postmaster General shall be entitled to have transported such mail messengers as he may require, for whom shall be provided subsistence, suitable staterooms, and working quarters, all free of charge.

"AMENDMENTS AND REPEALS

"SEC. 414. (a) Section 24 of the merchant marine act, 1920 (U. S. C., title 46, sec. 880), is amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 24. That all mails of the United States shipped or carried on vessels shall, if practicable, be shipped or carried on American-built vessels documented under the laws of the United States. No contract hereafter made with the Postmaster General for carrying mails on vessels so built and documented shall be assigned or sublet, and no mails covered by such contract shall be carried on any vessel not so built and documented. No money shall be paid out of the Treasury of the United States on or in relation to any such contract for carrying mails on vessels so built and documented when such contract has been assigned or sublet or when mails covered by such contract are in violation of the terms thereof carried on any vessel not so built and documented. This section shall not be applicable in the case of contracts made under Title IV of the merchant marine act, 1928.'

"(b) Section 7 of the merchant marine act, 1920 (U. S. C., title 46, sec. 866), is amended by striking out so much thereof as reads as follows: 'The Postmaster General is authorized, notwithstanding the act entitled "An act to provide for ocean mail service between the United States and foreign ports, and to promote commerce," approved March 3, 1891, to contract for the carrying of the mails over such lines at such price as may be agreed upon by the board and the Postmaster General.'

"(c) The act entitled 'An act to provide for ocean mail service between the United States and foreign ports, and to promote commerce,' approved March 3, 1891 (U. S. C., title 39, secs. 657–665), is repealed.

"(d) So much of the act entitled 'An act making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes,' approved March 3, 1917, as provides for contracts for the carrying of mails between the United States and Great Britain (U. S. C., title 39, sec. 666), is repealed.

"(e) Subdivision (b) of section 4009 of the Revised Statutes, as amended (44 Stat. L., pt. 2, 900), is amended to read as follows:

"'(b) The provisions of subdivision (a) of this section shall not limit the compensation for transportation of mail which the Postmaster General may pay under contracts entered into in accordance with the provisions of section 4007 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 39, sec. 652), section 24 of the merchant marine act, 1920 (U. S. C., title 46, sec. 880), or title 4 of the merchant marine act, 1928.'

"(f) Any contract made prior to the enactment of this act shall remain in force and effect in the same manner and to the same extent as though this act had not been enacted. Any such contract which expires on June 30, 1928, may be extended for a period of not more than one year from such date.

"TITLE V—INSURANCE FUND

"SEC. 501. Section 10 of the merchant marine act, 1920 (U. S. C., title 46, sec. 869), is amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 10. That the board may create out of insurance premiums, and revenue from operations and sales, and maintain and administer separate insurance funds which it may use to insure in whole or in part against all hazards commonly covered by insurance policies in such cases, any legal or equitable interest of the United States (1) in any vessel constructed or in process of construction; and (2) in any plants or property in the possession or under the authority of the board. The United States shall be held to have such an interest in any vessel toward the construction, reconditioning, remodeling, improving, or equipping of which a loan has been made under the authority of this act, in any vessel upon which it holds a mortgage or lien of any character, or in any vessel which is obligated by contract with the owner to perform any service in behalf of the United States, to the extent of the Government's interest therein.'

"TITLE VI—TRANSPORTATION OF GOVERNMENT OFFICIALS

"SEC. 601. Any officer or employee of the United States traveling on official business overseas to foreign countries, or to any of the possessions of the United States, shall travel and transport his personal effects on ships registered under the laws of the United States when such ships are available, unless the necessity of his mission requires the use of a ship under a foreign flag: Provided, That the Comptroller General of the United States shall not credit any allowance for travel or shipping expenses incurred on a foreign ship in the absence of satisfactory proof of the necessity therefor.

"TITLE VII—MISCELLANEOUS

"AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

"SEC. 701. The appropriations necessary to carry out the provisions and accomplish the purposes of this act are hereby authorized.

"REQUISITION OF VESSELS

"SEC. 702. (a) The following vessels may be taken and purchased or used by the United States for national defense or during any national emergency declared by proclamation of the President:

"(1) Any vessel in respect of which, under a contract hereafter entered into, a loan is made from the construction loan fund created by section 11 of the merchant marine act, 1920, as amended—at any time until the principal and interest of the loan has been paid; and

"(2) Any vessel in respect of which an ocean mail contract is made under title 4 of this act—at any time during the period for which the contract is made.

"(b) In such event the owner shall be paid the fair actual value of the vessel at the time of taking, or paid the fair compensation for her use based upon such fair actual value; but in neither case shall such fair actual value be enhanced by the causes necessitating the taking. In the case of a vessel taken and used, but not purchased, the vessel shall be restored to the owner in a condition at least as good as when taken, less reasonable wear and tear, or the owner shall be paid an amount for reconditioning sufficient to place the vessel in such condition. The owner shall not be paid for any consequential damages arising from such taking and purchase or use.

"(c) The President shall ascertain the fair compensation for such taking and purchase or use and shall certify to Congress the amount so found by him to be due, for appropriation and payment to the person entitled thereto. If the amount found by the President to be due is unsatisfactory to the person entitled thereto, such person shall be entitled to sue the United States for the amount of such fair compensation and such suit shall be brought in the manner provided by paragraph 20 of section 24 or by section 145 of the Judicial Code, as amended (U. S. C., title 28, secs. 41, 250).

"DEFINITIONS

"SEC. 703. (a) When used in this act, and for the purposes of this act only, the words "foreign trade" mean trade between the United States, its Territories or possessions, or the District of Columbia and a foreign country: Provided, however, That the loading or the unloading of cargo, mail, or passengers at any port in any Territory or possession of the United States shall be construed to be foreign trade if the stop at such Territory or possession is an intermediate stop on what would otherwise be a voyage in foreign trade.

"(b) When used in this act the term "citizen of the United States" includes a corporation, partnership, or association only if it is a citizen of the United States within the meaning of section 2 of the shipping act, 1916, as amended (U. S. C., title 46, sec. 802).

"REAFFIRMATION OF POLICY

"SEC. 704. The policy and the primary purpose declared in section 7 of the Merchant Marine Act, 1920 (U. S. C., title 46, sec. 866), are hereby reaffirmed.

"SHIP OPERATIONS

"SEC. 705. In the allocations of the operations of the ships, the Shipping Board shall distribute them as far as possible and without detriment to the service among the various ports of the country.

"SHORT TITLE

"SEC. 706. This act may be cited as the 'merchant marine act, 1928,'"

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, did the conferees agree to change the provision of the bill as it left the Senate which requires unanimous consent of the board in order to sell any of the property under the jurisdiction of the board?

Mr. JONES. It was changed to provide that a vote of five would be sufficient.

Mr. EDGE. I have read some things in the newspapers, and I want to confirm them. I understand that the construction fund has been changed from 50, or 66⅔ per cent, as was provided, to 75 per cent.

Mr. JONES. Yes; 75 per cent.

Mr. EDGE. The original bill provided for 50 per cent and in some cases to 66⅔ per cent.

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. EDGE. I want to congratulate the Senator for improving the bill very much.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I want merely to suggest to the Senator from Washington that I understand that some of the Senators desire to discuss some of the provisions of this conference report. I do not believe it can be done this evening.

Mr. JONES. I have spoken to all those where there was any indication that they would like to talk about it, and they all said they did not care to speak on it. There may be others, of course.

Mr. BLAINE. I was discussing the matter with one of the Senators, and he advised me that he desired to look into the report, and he expected to do so this evening. I think this is too important a proposition to be hastily acted upon. In my opinion, I do not believe that the conference report ought to be adopted. I do not want to enter upon a discussion of it at this time unless it becomes necessary. My remarks will be brief when the opportunity is afforded to discuss the conference report, at the time when it may be up for disposal.

Mr. JONES. Does not the Senator think we might reach a vote on it by half past 5?

Mr. BLAINE. The Senator who discussed the matter with me is not in the Chamber at this time.

Mr. JONES. Does the Senator mind telling who it was? I have talked to several.

Mr. BLAINE. The senior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] is one with whom I discussed this matter.

Mr. JONES. I have not talked with him.

Mr. BLAINE. He procured the report, and I understand has left the Chamber, and expected to investigate the report and perhaps discuss it. At this time I have some questions I would like to ask the Senator from Washington, and they might be disposed of now.

Mr. JONES. I would be glad to answer them if possible.

Mr. BLAINE. So that I may not be mistaken about the fact as to what the bill attempts to accomplish, I understand the bill provides for a loan fund of $125,000,000 out of revenues.

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. BLAINE. And then additions to the loan fund, bringing it up to $250,000,000, out of an appropriation, if it is authorized.

Mr. JONES. The first provision is practically the law as it is now, the act of 1920.

Mr. BLAINE. Then, I understand that in the construction of vessels that are to be used in the coastwise trade, that are built by private industry, they are required to pay not less than 5¼ per cent per annum for the money they borrow.

Mr. JONES. That is the existing law, the act of 1920.

Mr. BLAINE. Am I correct in the understanding that vessels engaged in foreign trade may obtain loans at a rate of interest as low as 2½ per cent?

Mr. JONES. No; I do not understand it is that low. I understand that the lowest rate is about 3¼ per cent.

Mr. FLETCHER. It is whatever the Government rate is.

Mr. JONES. Yes; it is the Government rate.

Mr. BLAINE. Unless I am mistaken, there are some Government securities bearing interest as low as 2½ per cent.

Mr. JONES. That rate would not apply on these loans.

Mr. BLAINE. The only interest rates that do not apply are the rates on savings bank securities, under the conference report.

Mr. JONES. It is provided that—

> During any period in which a vessel is operated in the foreign trade the rate shall be the lowest rate of yield to the nearest one-eighth of 1 per cent on any Government obligation bearing date subsequent to April 6, 1917 (except postal-savings bonds), and outstanding at the time the loan is made by the board and certified by the Secretary of the Treasury.

As I understand it, the lowest rate would be 3 or 3¼ per cent.

Mr. BLAINE. I had assumed we had bonds bearings interest as low as 2½ per cent.

Mr. FLETCHER. Those are excluded. Those were issued before the date fixed here.

Mr. BLAINE. I am inquiring for information. Then I also understand that these loans may be made to the extent of three-fourths of the cost of the vessel to be constructed or reconditioned or remodeled or improved, as well as to equip the vessels.

Mr. JONES. That is correct.

Mr. BLAINE. That includes machinery that is placed on the vessel for operating the vessel?

Mr. JONES. I suppose so.

Mr. BLAINE. To the extent of 75 per cent of the value.

Mr. JONES. The board, of course, can insist upon additional security if they deem it necessary.

Mr. BLAINE. Loaning to the extent of 75 per cent of the value of the machinery makes a very insecure loan, in my opinion, because machinery is subject to very rapid depreciation.

Mr. JONES. In my judgment, there will be practically no loans made upon machinery as of itself. At any rate, the board can require additional security if they deem it necessary.

Mr. BLAINE. Then, I also understand that the subsidy which is offered to privately owned and operated vessels in foreign trade is about $7,000,000 per annum, as an additional charge against the Government for the carrying of the United States mails.

Mr. JONES. That is estimated to be the amount, from $7,000,000 to $10,000,000, if this is taken advantage of to the limit. But it is also estimated that if the faster ships are constructed the increase in postal revenue will be very great and that the cost will be more than taken care of by the revenues. The Postmaster General so estimates.

Mr. COPELAND. At the present time we are paying, because of a lack of fast vessels in the mail service, about $1,500,000 to British ships for carrying our mails, which will now be carried by our ships, presumably.

Mr. BLAINE. Under this provision we pay $7,000,000 more.

Mr. JONES. We pay more if this be taken advantage of by our ships.

Mr. BLAINE. Am I to understand that if the Government-owned vessels shall continue to be operated under this bill, the present merchant marine is maintained by the bill?

Mr. JONES. Yes; until the vessels are disposed of.

Mr. BLAINE. Will they be permitted to carry the mails at the same rate of charge as will be made by those engaged in private operation?

Mr. JONES. I would certainly think so, where they are operating over a route that requires the United States mails to be carried.

Mr. BLAINE. And the Post Office Department may enter into contracts with the Shipping Board for the carrying of the United States mails in foreign commerce?

Mr. JONES. I think so. I do not know of anything to prevent it.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I say to the Senator from Wisconsin that I understand the bill authorizes a loan fund of more than $125,000,000; indeed, a fund of $250,000,000.

Mr. BLAINE. Yes.

Mr. KING. I would like to ask the Senator from Washington how that $250,000,000 is to be obtained?

Mr. JONES. By appropriation, if Congress makes the appropriation. Of course Congress can refuse to do it. This is merely an authorized enlargement of that fund up to $250,000,000.

Mr. KING. What is in the fund now?

Mr. JONES. The last I heard there was about $80,000,000.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. BINGHAM. I learned from the Shipping Board to-day that although the amount on the books credited to the fund is a little over $80,000,000, actually a part of that has been loaned so that there is available for loans only a little over $69,000,000.

Mr. KING. May I ask the Senator from Washington what he expects will result to the Shipping Board if this bill becomes a law? Is it to be perpetuated?

Mr. JONES. Not by this bill. It is continued, however, until the Government ships are disposed of, of course.

Mr. KING. Does not the Senator believe that this will perpetuate the Shipping Board and strengthen its power and give it a strangle hold which will be much greater than it is under the present law?

Mr. JONES. I do not think so.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I would like to answer the question of the Senator from Utah. I think this bill will terminate the Shipping Board within a reasonable time. That is the reason why I have enthusiasm for it. It is going to develop a privately owned merchant marine and put the flag on the seven seas. It will be privately owned and privately operated, and it will not be many years before we will be proud of our merchant fleet. The Shipping Board, in my judgment, will go out of business because every possible plan will be encouraged by the provisions of the bill to make it possible for American citizens to enter into the merchant marine business in competition with foreign vessels and put our flag where we desire to have it. No longer will it be necessary for us to subsidize, at tremendous expense, the operations of the Shipping Board.

Mr. JONES. There is certainly more of a prospect to put the Shipping Board out of existence under the terms of this bill than under the terms of existing law.

Mr. COPELAND. In my opinion, under the existing law it never would be put out of business. It has the right under the law to come here and ask for appropriations to build itself up. This bill will insure the construction of new ships, fine new vessels that will compete with the best now afloat.

Mr. KING. The Senator from New York, in my opinion, is entirely too optimistic. He may have prophetic powers, but I hazard the guess now that he will not live long enough to see a merchant marine created under the operations of this bill, nor will he live long enough to see the Shipping Board go out of business. Indeed, it will grow stronger, more bureaucratic, more paternalistic, and less efficient, in my opinion, as the years go by.

Mr. COPELAND. I may state that if we do not put this bill into effect the Senator from New York will live long enough to see increasing appropriations for the building up of a Government-owned merchant marine that never can compete on terms of equality with the merchant fleets of other nations.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, is the Senator from Utah a patient of the Senator from New York? [Laughter.]

Mr. KING. No; but I am very patient with the Senator from New York.

Mr. BORAH. I came into the Chamber after the discussion began. Assuming that the authorization is carried out and the appropriation is made, how much of a fund would the bill create for loan purposes?

Mr. JONES. Under the terms of the bill the loan fund can be increased to $250,000,000, and then it becomes a revolving fund.

Mr. BORAH. At the present time we have a fund of something like $70,000,000?

Mr. JONES. Yes; unallocated.

Mr. BORAH. It would then create a fund of something like $320,000,000?

Mr. JONES. No. The aggregate of the loan fund would be $250,000,000.

Mr. FLETCHER. The $125,000,000 is to be raised from sales and the disposition of notes and obligations. Then there is authorized to be appropriated $125,000,000 more, so as to raise the fund to $250,000,000. That is the ultimate limit. That is merely authorized.

Mr. President, I do not want to prolong the discussion, but I think the conference report ought to be agreed to. I am not in full accord with it throughout. There are some things I would like to see quite different from what is provided for in the bill. I am saying this in reply to the Senator from New York as much as anything else, because I do not want the RECORD to go with his statement in it and nothing to the contrary. I want to say to the Senator from New York that if I thought the bill would terminate the Shipping Board to-day and put it out of business right away I should vote against it, and fight it for all I am worth.

Mr. COPELAND. I would not have the Senator think that I thought it was going to put the Shipping Board out of business to-day, but I said that the building up of a more effective merchant marine would accomplish that purpose.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Vote! Vote!

Mr. FLETCHER. Senators are asking for a vote on the conference report, but this is the only time I have said anything upon it, and I think I know something about it.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator ought to be heard.

Mr. FLETCHER. I want to say that the first thing that commends the conference report to me is in section 1, to wit, that "the policy and the primary purpose declared in section 1 of the merchant marine act of 1920 are hereby confirmed." What was that primary purpose? It was to establish and maintain an adequate merchant marine as the fixed and settled policy of Congress. That is the primary purpose and it is reiterated here. That is the first proposition.

Then another thing that commends it to me is that it requires the affirmative vote of five members of the Shipping Board before sales may be made indiscriminately and recklessly or otherwise. I wanted to have it the unanimous vote of the Shipping Board. We have a board organized here in possession of millions and millions of dollars' worth of property and undertaking a great enterprise of vital importance to the country. It is a necessary undertaking for the people of the country. Before they themselves decide or are pressed into a decision to the effect that the property is to be sacrificed in order to carry out some particular policy of some administration I wanted them to go on record unanimously in favor of the disposal of public property to accomplish that end. But the House preferred to make it a majority vote, as it is now provided, and finally they decided to require that five members of the board must vote affirmatively in favor of sales, and the conferees have accepted that provision. I think it is entirely reasonable to require the affirmative vote of at least five members of the board and put them on record before the property is to be disposed of.

There are other features about it which I shall not take time now to discuss, but I wished to say that much. The Senate bill is largely embodied in this conference report. The principal provisions of the bill which the Senate passed are embodied in the report.

Mr. JONES. I might say that all of the Senate provisions are retained except the requirement for a unanimous vote of the Shipping Board.

Mr. FLETCHER. And except the mail-contract provision and the extension of the loan fund. We authorized loans up to 66⅔ per cent, and it has been increased to 75 per cent, but as the Senator from Washington has stated, the board can require additional security, and, perhaps, thus the loans will be protected. Those additions we have accepted, and I think this is a bill which will at least remove from American citizens the charge that they have got to have help and aid before we can ever get them interested in the merchant marine.

I have contended, and I contend to-day, that American shipyards can build ships in competition with the world; I have contended and I contend now that the American people can operate ships in competition with the world without aid; but it has been said that they can not do so, and they have not been willing to undertake it. Now we give them a chance. If they do not take advantage of this opportunity, there is nothing left but for the Government to own and operate the merchant-marine ships in the overseas trade.

Mr. COPELAND. That is true.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Florida permit me before he takes his seat to ask him one question?

Mr. FLETCHER. Certainly.

Mr. SIMMONS. When the Shipping Board disposes of one of these ships, how long are the purchasers required to operate it under the American flag?

Mr. FLETCHER. Under existing contracts they are compelled to operate it for five years. There are some members of the board who want the time fixed longer than that.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, the Senator from Florida misunderstands the question of the Senator from North Carolina. Such ships can not ever be transferred to another flag without the vote of the Shipping Board.

Mr. FLETCHER. No; our ships can not go under another flag, but I thought the Senator from North Carolina had reference to sales. The present contracts under which ships are sold oblige the purchasers to continue to operate them in the service, in the same trade and under our flag, for five years, but, of course, a ship can not be transferred to a foreign flag without the consent of the board under any circumstances.

Mr. SIMMONS. If the board shall sell a ship under those conditions, does the purchaser of that ship have to do anything that would make such a ship an auxiliary of the Navy in any sense?

Mr. FLETCHER. There is no obligation on the purchaser's part, but this bill contemplates that in all replacements and in all reconstruction, additions, and that sort of thing the Navy shall be consulted, and that it shall go over the plans, and the purpose shall be to equip ships for use in time of emergency.

Mr. JONES. With a view to their use as naval auxiliaries?

Mr. FLETCHER. That is provided for in the bill.

Mr. SIMMONS. Those ships are now equipped for such use?

Mr. FLETCHER. They will be.

Mr. SIMMONS. And if they shall be sold or replaced, the ships replacing them must likewise be so equipped?

Mr. FLETCHER. Precisely.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Florida a question?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. If the conference report shall be adopted, there will be a very heavy obligation resting upon Congress to make the appropriation which is therein authorized?

Mr. FLETCHER. As to the loan fund?

Mr. BORAH. Yes.

Mr. FLETCHER. And as to the replacements; but the bill provides that in case of replacement the Shipping Board must first ascertain the needs and make recommendation to Congress. Congress has to pass on the question of whether or not it will authorize the expenditure. That is provided for in the bill. The expenditure is not authorized now, but is to be authorized or not as Congress may see fit when the report of the Shipping Board shall come in and all of the facts are laid before Congress.

Mr. BORAH. The loan feature is deemed essential to the successful operation of the proposed law?

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. So that, I say, if we shall pass the bill, while it is not binding, if we expect to make a success according to the principles expressed in the bill, we shall have to provide an appropriation.

Mr. FLETCHER. To make up the fund of $250,000,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] whether or not the proposed increase in the appropriations contemplated by the bill is contrary to the President's financial program.

Mr. JONES. We shall find out when the bill is submitted to him for his approval.

Mr. BLAINE. The answer is not satisfactory, but I suppose it is as complete as the Senator from Washington can make it.

Mr. JONES. I will say that I am very confident that the bill will be approved.

Mr. BLAINE. Then, Mr. President, I desire to discuss the proposition from that standpoint. I do not know how long I may continue the debate, but I do not believe that the conference report should be adopted.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. BLAINE. I yield.

Mr. KING. I dislike to make the request of the Senator having the bill in charge, but I should be glad if he would allow the conference report to go over until to-morrow.

Mr. JONES. I think we ought to act on the conference report this evening.

Mr. KING. I do not want the RECORD to show that the conference report has been adopted by the Senate by a unanimous vote. I am opposed to it, and I wish to take the time to point out some of the objectionable features in the report. I do not wish to do it to-night—Senators are tired and anxious to leave—but I can not, of course, control the Senator or the Senate.

Mr. JONES. I wonder whether or not we might reach an agreement as to a time for voting on the conference report to-morrow. I do not want to keep the Senate here; I wish to be as accommodating as possible in the matter. If the Senator were given an hour to-morrow, or some such time as that, would that be sufficient to enable him to finish his argument?

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I am opposed to limiting debate. I am opposed to cloture. I have no desire to postpone a vote upon this measure, but I think the proposition should be thoroughly discussed. I think the country ought to be informed upon this proposition, and upon this proposition as it relates to other measures pending before Congress, about which we have reached no agreement, and the reasons why agreement has not been reached upon those measures. Therefore, Mr. President, I can not determine now what time may be necessary in order to discuss those propositions. When they are discussed, so far as I am concerned I have no desire to protract the debate.

With that statement, Mr. President, I am quite willing to accommodate the Senate and those concerned about this bill in regard to whatever the Senator from Washington requests as reasonable.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I wonder if it would be agreeable to the Senator to have us vote not later than 2 o'clock to-morrow. That would give two hours.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, my observation has been that there is not very much opportunity in the first two hours to discuss any particular measure.

Mr. JONES. I will say that the Senator from Wisconsin would have the floor.

Mr. BLAINE. It is like a free-for-all proposition.

Mr. JONES. No; I would make it part of the understanding that the Senator from Wisconsin should have the floor when we convene to-morrow, and take all the time that he desires. We would meet in recess, as I understand.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, with regard to the question of a recess or an adjournment, I want it distinctly understood that we are going on with the revenue bill. We have spent too much time on it already; and I do hope, if it is not disposed of, that the Senator in charge of it will begin to have night sessions; and I think it will be a mistake to take up conference reports which can be passed at other times.

Mr. JONES. If we have an understanding that we shall vote on this matter not later than a definite time, would not the Senator be willing that we should go on and finish it?

Mr. CURTIS. It would have to be within a reasonable time.

Mr. JONES. I suggested not later than 2 o'clock.

Mr. CURTIS. I do not think it is treating the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] right to put all these things in ahead of his bill.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Kansas. I am very grateful to him; but this is an important measure that is now being heard, and it either means that we shall sit here now and hear the thing out—which I am perfectly willing to do if it is desirable—or that we shall give a reasonable time for it in the near future.

Mr. CURTIS. If the Senator from California says it is all right with him, I should be perfectly willing, if we could get an agreement to vote not later than 2 o'clock to-morrow, to have that done.

Mr. JOHNSON. I should be agreeable to that, because it is a measure that is necessary to be presented and passed, and the Senator has a right to have it passed. Would that be satisfactory to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I know that the Senator from California is not so credulous as to think that there is going to be a vote on the Boulder Dam bill at this session of Congress.

Mr. JOHNSON. Oh, but I am!

Mr. BLAINE. It is not on the cards.

Mr. JOHNSON. I do not know what cards the Senator means.

Mr. BLAINE. I am going to be a prophet, and predict now that that vote will not come at this session of Congress. So far as I am concerned, I am willing to take up the Boulder Dam proposition and vote upon it any day.

Mr. JOHNSON. I know that.

Mr. BLAINE. But I have observed, and I am perfectly frank to state it, that that is not the program of those who are opposing not only the Boulder Dam bill but certain other legislation before this Congress; and so far as I am concerned, Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from California that I am willing to stay here all summer and fight out these propositions.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I want to say, in response to that, that if it is within the realm of human possibility and human endurance to have a vote upon the Boulder Dam bill, we are going to have a vote. I do not propose that this session of Congress shall adjourn at a time that shall be fixed by certain leaders who are opposed to necessary legislation if I can prevent it. As the time passes and the days go on here, and the endeavor is made by certain individuals who direct legislation to leave legislation undone and unenacted in this body or in the other body, I hope those who believe with me that legislation which is essential should be adopted will stand firm and not permit any such adjournment to be taken.

Beyond that, sir, we are entitled to a vote upon such a measure as the Boulder Dam bill. We are entitled to it if we have to sit here day and night, day and night, day and night, day and night until that vote is accorded us; and we are going to endeavor to do just that thing.

I do not prophesy what will happen, and I do not boast of what may occur. I am unable to determine. I can only say that so far as I am concerned every effort will be made of which I am capable and every endeavor will be pursued to get a vote upon this very essential measure. It would be a shame and a disgrace, in my opinion, if a particular vote should not be had one way or the other, if we were denied, upon beneficent legislation of this sort, a vote by the Senate or a vote by the House of Representatives.

So I assure the Senator from Wisconsin, notwithstanding his dire prophecy, that there is going to be an effort made in behalf of Boulder Dam legislation to get a vote—an effort, a test, if you desire, of physical endurance, and every effort that the rules will permit to see that ultimately a vote shall be had in the Senate before we adjourn.

So much for that.

Mr. JONES. I want to say to the Senator, so far as I am concerned, that I am in hearty accord with his position.

Mr. JOHNSON. I am quite sure the Senate must be in accord with it, for what sort of a body is this that stands here supine and says that legislation that is of consequence or that a bill that is of great importance shall not even have a vote, either at this session or at some other? Are we so weak, have we fallen so low, sir; have we so little strength and so little ability that we can not give a vote to people who demand it here or to legislation that requires it?

I will not believe it, sir, until finally the Senate shall have thus determined; and in order that the Senate may determine its action and do its duty it will have the opportunity in the days to come, and a vote will be accorded if it be within the realm of human possibility to accord it upon this legislation.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I hope and trust that my predictions will not come true, and that the measure in which the Senator from California is interested and in which the people affected by the development of Boulder Dam are interested and in which the people of the United States as a whole are interested may be given its place in this session at a time when there will be an opportunity to vote upon the question.

So far as it is within my individual power, I shall give all the assistance I can toward promoting a vote upon the question of Boulder Dam. I hope that the Senator from California—as I know he will, knowing him as I do—will continue to make his fight and the fight of the people of the Southwest and the people of America for legislation to develop this great natural resource that to-day is flowing idly into the ocean, promoting neither service nor usefulness, but rather devoted to destruction.

So, Mr. President, I, for one, will forego many of the nonessential or comparatively nonessential questions in order that there may be a vote upon Boulder Dam; and I want to assure the Senator from California that it is not my desire to prolong any discussion that may result in defeating the opportunity for a vote upon the question of Boulder Dam.

Mr. JOHNSON. I never doubted that, Mr. President.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield, and, if so, to whom?

Mr. BLAINE. I yield to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to submit a unanimous-consent request, that we recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow, and that we vote on the conference report not later than 1 o'clock. That will give two hours.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I said just a few moments ago that I can not agree to closing debate upon any proposition. I presume that two hours will be ample time within which to discuss the conference report.

Mr. CURTIS. I suggested two hours, because I was told by a Senator that the Senator thought two hours was sufficient.

Mr. BLAINE. I think two hours is sufficient, but I can not foreclose the right of other Senators.

Mr. CURTIS. If the Senator is willing to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow, I will ask that we take a recess until 11 o'clock, and then we can go on.

Mr. BLAINE. That is perfectly satisfactory.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, just a word. I do not want to take up time if a recess is desired; but I feel it my duty to say that I thoroughly concur in what the Senator from California and the Senator from Wisconsin have said. I am satisfied that my colleague from Nevada [Mr. ODDIE] feels the same way.

This matter is not of nearly the importance to Nevada that it is to the Imperial Valley. Nevertheless, it is of importance to the whole Southwest; and whether Senators oppose the bill in its present form or not, as I have said before, the purpose of it is meritorious, and is absolutely essential to protect human life.

I am going to insist, with the Senator from California and others, that this bill and any amendments presented by the committee or anyone else be voted on, and that the matter, if possible, be disposed of. It has been pending for three years; and, in my opinion, there is absolutely no excuse for not voting upon it.

CAMPAIGN CONTRIBUTIONS

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I ask that a letter addressed by President Nicholas Murray Butler to the editor of the American Review of Reviews on the question of campaign contributions be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. VANDENBERG in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is here printed, as follows:

[Printed in American Review of Reviews, May, 1928]

MONEY IN AMERICAN POLITICS

The question which you raised as to how the legitimate cost of State and national campaigns is to be met on sound principles of public administration and without scandal, is far-reaching and of vital importance. Public opinion has been outraged of late more than once by the enormous expenditures involved in our recurring political campaigns, by the sources and uses of many of the large gifts, and by the unacknowledged political and personal obligations under which the party organizations have been put to the chief donors and those who have collected large sums from others.

As to the use of these moneys, it is probable that much more is spent wastefully than is spent corruptly. The habit of men in public life who are spending money contributed by others is not one of economy and close administration. So far as this aspect of the matter is concerned, a detailed, definite, and public accounting of campaign expenditures would help to correct such abuses as exist. If any campaign funds are spent corruptly, then present laws, if vigorously applied to punish offenders, are wholly adequate.

On the other hand, it must be borne in mind that the perfectly legitimate costs of a political campaign under present-day conditions are very great. For example, it would cost many thousand dollars to prepare, print, address, and post a single political circular or announcement to the enrolled Democratic or Republican voters in the city of New York.

Not all political speakers and canvassers can contribute their time any many are not even in position themselves to meet the cost of necessary traveling expenses while canvassing or campaigning. A party organization is well within its rights as well as within the proprieties when it meets expenses of this kind. Here again the remedy for abuse is public accounting. Crookedness loves concealment, and when full and detailed statements of the income and expenditures of party organizations and political committees have to be made, crookedness will make every endeavor to hide its head.

It would be sound public policy to require every political organization and committee to be registered with some appropriate public officer, and to report to him at stated intervals definitely and in detail the names of those who have made contributions to its work and the amount of each contribution. Similarly and at stated intervals a like report should be required as to expenditures, properly classified. These regulations should include many organizations, such as the Anti-Saloon League, the Ku-Klux Klan and others that are political without being fixedly partisan.

Such requirements as these, together with the pressure of an increasingly sensitive public opinion, will be the chief reliance for improvement in this field of public action. There will be the usual outcry for new, drastic, and comprehensive legislation. This is the unfailing proposal of the legalistically minded who love phrases and punitive statutes, quite regardless as to whether these can be made effective or not. There will be those who will suggest that party organizations and party committees be made public officers, and their supervision and control taken over by Government.

Such policies, if entered upon, would only make a bad matter infinitely worse. They represent once more the impertinences of Government, which seems quite unable to mind effectively its own business. We, the people, are now free—and propose to remain free—to associate and to organize as we choose; to advance or to oppose any particular public measure; and to agree to bring before our fellow citizens, for election to any office whatever, the candidate of our choice in whatever way we please.

These matters belong to the people and are high up among the reserved rights and liberties which they have not surrendered and do not propose to surrender to Government. Government with its huge array of penal statutes and its swollen bureaucracies is already quite inefficient enough, and quite costly enough for all practical purposes. The remedy for abuses of the sort which properly give you so much concern is not more laws, but fewer laws and better morals.

FIVE CIVILIZED TRIBES OF INDIANS

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, a few days ago there passed this body a bill extending the period of restrictions in lands of certain members of the Five Civilized Tribes of Indians. The bill later passed the House, and was signed by the President on the 10th of this month.

Upon examination of the law it was found that there is one word in error. In the bill we find the phrase "heirs of devisees," whereas it should be "heirs or devisees." So the Interior Department recommended that a new bill be introduced to correct that error and change the word "of" to "or."

The bill has been introduced. The Indian Affairs Committee makes a favorable report upon it. I now submit the report (No. 1174) and ask for the immediate consideration of the bill.

Mr. CURTIS. Is that the only change?

Mr. THOMAS. It is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 4448) to amend section 4 of the act entitled "An act to extend the period of restrictions in lands of certain members of the Five Civilized Tribes, and for other purposes," approved May 10, 1928, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4 of an act approved May 10, 1928, entitled "An act to extend the period of restrictions in lands of certain members of the Five Civilized Tribes, and for other purposes" (Public, No. —, 70th Cong., 1st sess.), be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 4. That on and after April 26, 1931, the allotted, inherited, and devised restricted lands of each Indian of the Five Civilized Tribes in excess of 160 acres shall be subject to taxation by the State of Oklahoma under and in accordance with the laws of that State, and in all respects as unrestricted and other lands: Provided, That the Indian owner of restricted land, if an adult and not legally incompetent, shall select from his restricted land a tract or tracts, not exceeding in the aggregate 160 acres, to remain exempt from taxation, and shall file with the Superintendent of the Five Civilized Tribes a certificate designating and describing the tract or tracts so selected: Provided further, That in cases where such Indian fails, within two years from date hereof, to file such certificate, and in cases where the Indian owner is a minor or otherwise legally incompetent, the selection shall be made and certificate prepared by the Superintendent for the Five Civilized Tribes; and such certificate, whether by the Indian or by the Superintendent for the Five Civilized Tribes, shall be subject to approval by the Secretary of the Interior; and, when approved by the Secretary of the Interior, shall be recorded in the office of the Superintendent for the Five Civilized Tribes, and in the county records of the county in which the land is situated; and said lands, designated and described in the approved certificates so recorded, shall remain exempt from taxation while the title remains in the Indian designated in such approved and recorded certificate, or in any full-blood Indian heir or devisee of the land: Provided, That the tax exemption shall not extend beyond the period of restrictions provided for in this act: And provided further, That the tax-exempt land of any such Indian allottee, heir, or devisee shall not at any time exceed 160 acres."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THE PATH TO PEACE

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I hold in my hand a copy of an able address delivered by Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler recently in Denver, Colo., on "The path to peace," together with a statement read at the annual meeting of the trustees of the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace in this city on May 10, 1928. I ask unanimous consent to have these matters printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE PATH TO PEACE

(An address by Nicholas Murray Butler delivered at Cosmopolitan Hotel, Denver, Colo., afternoon of December 12, 1927)

Mr. President and gentlemen, you will not deny me the privilege of expressing my most grateful appreciation for your very cordial and kindly reception, and also my own great personal satisfaction at finding myself back, after an interval, in Colorado.

My experience with these Western States is that I was generally there before most of those who now adorn them. When I first came to Colorado it was only five years old, and from that time to this I have delighted in its attractions and its beauty. My satisfaction in the friendships formed here, warm and close and numerous, has grown with the years, and the compliment and the honor of being invited by the Institute of Social Studies of the University of Denver to come and speak to you on this momentous topic is one for which I am most grateful.

Let me waste no words in getting to the heart of the subject. The proposal to substitute methods of conciliation, arbitration, and judicial process for war is, so far as the United States is concerned, in very much the same situation as the weather in Mark Twain's famous remark. You remember that Mark Twain said of the weather in Connecticut that everyone complained about it, but that nobody ever did anything about it. [Laughter.] That is the situation in respect to ourselves and our foreign policy at the present time.

From the foundation of our Government down to 1916, from the time of Washington and Jefferson to that of Wilson, we had as a Nation an unbroken record of leadership in all that relates to the strengthening of international relations, to the building up of international trade and to the establishment of international peace. We have now become, as a Government, through sheer paralysis, one of the chief obstacles that now exists in the world to these movements. It is not our conscious fault, for no American, whatever his party or his faith, could have wished it so; but it is the result of conditions that have come upon us, and it is time for us to begin to study how to remedy the situation.

Our foreign relations began on a very high plane. That was partly because of the character of the men who conducted them, partly because of the temper of the young Nation. You may imagine that when Benjamin Franklin and John Adams and Thomas Jefferson were drafting treaties and guiding foreign policy, a very high standard of achievement was reached. We have never written treaties on a higher plane, if so high, as our very first treaties with France, with Prussia, and with Great Britain. If you will take pains to go back and read to-day our first treaty ever made with a foreign people, the treaty of amity and commerce with France signed in 1778, followed by the treaty with Prussia in 1782, or the treaty which established peace with Great Britain at the end of the War of Independence in 1782 also, you will find them cast in a mold, with a breadth of view and vision and genius and temper and sympathy and understanding, that has never been surpassed in our later history.

And in our dealings with the nations to the south of us we reached high-water mark in the treaty which ended the war of 1846 with Mexico. That treaty of Guadaloupe Hidalgo is another treaty which might have been written 50 years hence, so far as it rests upon the soundest moral, political and social principles for the establishment and control of the international order.

We have come to a full stop. This went on from 1778 to 1916. Now we are in a situation which is the unhappy result of partisan difference, of personal dispute and ambition, neither of which should ever be permitted to disturb the course of international policy. Surely, gentlemen, our own relations with the other great peoples of the world ought not to be the subject of partisan difference or personal struggle or political ambition. But if in August, 1919, President Wilson had not shown so cordial a dislike to Senator Lodge and if Senator Lodge had not so cordially hated President Wilson, an agreement could have been reached for the continuance of our policy of leadership, and the condition of the world to-day might have been very, very different.

But it was not to be. Men fell apart; they made groups; they became partisans of a point of view or of a person. From that day to this we have been in effect paralyzed and as a Government incompetent to go forward, simply dealing with the business of the day or the week as it comes to the desk of the Department of State or to the table of the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate. We are in the position that the Executive dare not to take too much initiative lest the Government appear to be committed to something which the Senate will not approve. The Senate does not agree with the Executive; often it does not even agree with itself. In consequence we are committed and have been committed to years of useless, futile rhetoric and talk, and nothing being done.

What are we going to do about it? There is an earnest group who say to us to-day, let us outlaw war; let us pass a law declaring war to be outlawed. Suppose we do, and then suppose that war refused to be outlawed. Who is going to arrest it and bring it to the examining magistrate? Who is going to commit it for trial? Who is going to indict it? Who is going to constitute the jury, and the judge? And if war is convicted, who is going to be the sheriff to inflict the punishment, and where is the penitentiary in which it is to be confined?

No, gentlemen, words have no such power as that. You can not outlaw war by passing resolutions against it. The deep, lasting emotions, good, bad, or indifferent, of human nature and of the human heart can not be dealt with in any such cavalier fashion as that. That proposal is mere rhetoric, and will get us absolutely nowhere unless, perhaps, it be placed as an obstacle in the way of the adoption of propositions that are immediate and practical and susceptible of application to the affairs and the international relations of to-morrow.

The present situation is that the nations of the earth, except the United States and Mexico and Russia, have become members of the League of Nations, with its seat at Geneva. Our people and our Government have decided not to do so, and at the moment that is not a practical question for debate. Indeed there are very many earnest workers in the cause of peace who believe that, circumstances being as they are, it is just as well that our Government is not a member of the league, although, I think, they all believe that we should cooperate with it whenever practical; that we should hold up its hands; that we should strengthen its authority; and that we should be very happy to applaud its steadily growing measure of success. You must remember, gentlemen, that Europe has come a long, long way since 1914. If you could go to Geneva and see what the secretariat of the league has to do in regard to matters that have no relation whatever to politics, you would see what a vast change has come over the administration of a common business.

It is no longer possible for a plague to break out in some remote part of the world and pass unimpeded from nation to nation and from people to people, carrying with it destruction and death. At Singapore there is a reporting station where every case of one of those terrible scourges which breaks out, whether in Australia, in the South Seas, in the East Indies, China, Japan, India, or where you will, is immediately reported, so that the entire health force may be mobilized to combat it and stamp it out.

Then think what is being done for the backward and dependent peoples merely by the invention of the system of mandates. No longer can a power, however important, however large, however rich, exploit a poor and backward people, rich in raw material, lying off at a distance, unseen and unreported upon. I have myself been in Geneva and have seen the Undersecretary for Colonial Affairs of the British Government standing at the foot of a table and gladly answering questions from representatives of a dozen European countries as to how in a particular mandate in Africa this problem was solved, how this matter was attended to, how this difficulty was surmounted. That was a very splendid and a very inspiring sight. We owe the league the fullest share of cooperation in all these great humanitarian and social undertakings, so numerous and so complex that I have not time to enter upon their enumeration, much less their description.

There are three men to whom this generation should lift its hat in universal honor; the three men who, taking their political lives in their hands, brought about the agreements of Locarno, and so far as declarations of public policy can do it, have expelled war from central and western Europe, which has been one of its chief seats for nearly 2,000 years. Each of those men has his nationalists and his superpatriots at home to combat. There is no path of roses for the French Minister of Foreign Affairs or for the German Minister of Foreign Affairs or for the British Secretary of Foreign Affairs who starts to build closer and better relations with his neighbors. They, too, have their critics, their opponents, and their obstacles. But I say to you that this generation of ours, particularly in America, should raise its hat in grateful honor to Briand and Stresemann and Austen Chamberlain.

Let me take time to show you how by their personal relations they made many things possible—because foreign relations are half psychology and only half diplomacy. Let me tell you a story to illustrate how the relations of these gentlemen have become intimate and cordial; and I can vouch for its accuracy.

In March, 1926, the question had come up of admitting Germany to the League of Nations. Germany wished to have a seat on the council of the league. That could only be brought about by unanimous vote. Brazil objected. The whole world was on tiptoe as to what would be done. Would a Latin republic, thousands of miles away, have it in its power to block the increasing relationship of friendship and entente between France and Germany? Briand and Stresemann were in a back room of their hotel, taking into careful consideration the question of what should be done on the morrow. Eighty or a hundred newspaper men, representing the chief journals of the world, were in the outer room waiting. Briand said to Stresemann, "Doctor, I do not see what we can do about it. Brazil has a legal right to object, and she seems to insist upon her legal right." Stresemann said, "No; it looks as if we had come to a deadlock. This is really dreadful; what can we do?" "Well," said Briand, cheerfully, "let us go to bed and sleep on it."

"Perhaps in our dreams something will come to us." "Splendid," said Stresemann; "that is the thing to do next; let us go to bed and sleep on it!" So Briand, taking Stresemann's arm, with his familiar cigar in his right hand, opened the door and went out to the waiting reporters. These men came with the keenest anticipation. What would be done; what was going to happen next? Drawing himself up perfectly straight, Stresemann nodding assent, Briand said, "Gentlemen, I wish to say to you that France and Germany are in absolute accord as to the next step to be taken!"

That was telegraphed all over the world, from Chile to Japan, and the world felt the next morning that an immense step had been taken in the establishment of peace; and the curious thing, gentlemen, is that it had; it had!

That is the psychological situation. Now, what are we going to do about all this? What is our relation to it?

For the moment we have lost our moral and our intellectual leadership in the cause which we promoted for 150 years. Were it not for our commanding position economically we should have lost much of our habitual authority in the world. What are we going to do about it as a Government?

At this moment there is opportunity, gentleman, for a specific act, such as rarely comes to a government or a people, that fits exactly into this picture.

All Europe is anxious about security and disarmament. They feel security to be a problem in a way which we never have, because hostile armies have been tramping over their territory time and again for a thousand years. They are anxious to disarm; they have largely disarmed. Germany has no army; England has practically none; France has only 45 per cent of what it had in 1914, and it has reduced its term of service from three years to one. Smaller nations, excepting the new ones in eastern Europe, are in the same category. But they are all anxious about security. How shall that best be gained?

M. Briand is a great psychologist as well as a great statesman; and you will remember perhaps that on the 6th day of last April, the tenth anniversary of the entry of our Government into the Great War, he publicly made to our people a proposal by summoning the Associated Press representatives in Paris and reading to them a formal statement, not to the Government, but to the American people, that France was ready to join with us in renouncing war as an instrument of public policy. The Congress was not in session. No official answer was made or perhaps could have been made. The press of the country spoke in warm commendation; organized bodies of all sorts and kinds applauded this suggestion. And now Senator CAPPER, of Kansas, has given us an opportunity to make reply in terms so simple, so direct, so convincing, that a child can understand, and without in any way running counter to any of our prejudices or traditions, or raising any of those disputed questions which brought us to grief in the summer of 1919. Senator CAPPER has introduced into the Senate of the United States a joint resolution declaratory of public policy. This is not a law in the sense of a statute, impinging and immediately binding upon our citizenship; it is a declaration of policy like the Declaration of Independence itself. And it is simple, short, and direct. I see that it is set forth on the paper which has been placed in the hands of those who are present here to-day. Let me say a few words about it.

This declaration of policy consists of three parts: "By treaty with France and other like-minded nations formally to renounce war as an instrument of public policy and to adjust and settle its international disputes by mediation, arbitration, and conciliation"; "By treaty with France" means the acceptance, open and public and avowed, of M. Briand's invitation. "Other like-minded nations" means that we are ready to do the same thing with any nation that will take the same position, and I violate no confidence in saying that Great Britain, Germany, Italy, and Japan are ready to-morrow to sign such an agreement with us if we are ready to make it!

What possible objection can there be to that? We renounce war as an instrument of policy. Senator CAPPER does not say there will never be any war. That would be foolish. We renounce it as an instrument of policy when we sit down with France and other like-minded nations in a dispute over a tariff; over, if you please, a colony; over any of the things which arise in the daily life of nations. We do not think of war; we do not have it in the back of our heads. We do not have any Army or Navy policy based upon war with that nation. We are not thinking about security in our relations to France and other like-minded nations, still less are we thinking in terms of war.

We like-minded people, civilized on a like plane, have come to a decision that we can settle our differences like honorable gentlemen, face to face; and if the solution is not satisfactory, then by that resort to judicial process which lies at the very basis of our orderly civilization. All that we ask is that we shall treat France and Great Britain and Germany and Italy and Japan precisely as for 115 years we have treated our neighbor the Dominion of Canada.

Now, Mr. Chairman, what possible objection can there be to that? I confess my ingenuity was not adequate to suggest any. But two have been suggested from Washington—which is where I should expect objections to come from. [Laughter.]

It is urged that inasmuch as the Congress has the power to declare war, the Congress can not make such a declaration as this because it would limit its constitutional authority to declare war. [Laughter.] Now I submit that argument as simply as I can, in order that you may get its full effect: Because the Congress of the United States has power to declare war, it is constitutionally unable to do anything to promote peace! [Laughter.] Surely the great purposes of the American people have some higher limits than mere war.

Why, Mr. Chairman, when that provision was written into the Constitution we had already told three nations that we were not going to go to war. We had already told them this, and the very same sentence which says Congress shall have the power to declare war also says that it shall have the power to issue letters of marque and reprisal, that is, to send out privateers to prey on the sea-borne commerce of the world; but do they dare do it? Would they ever dream of doing it? Did not all the civilized powers except ourselves join 70 years ago in the Declaration of Paris whereby privateering was abolished, and did not we ourselves accept that principle at the time of the Spanish War? What then, becomes of the argument? It is really too silly for words—that because the Congress has the power to declare war it can do nothing of this kind or really of any other kind, to promote peace! May that argument rest in peace! [Laughter.]

Then it has been suggested by a legalistically minded person that one Congress can not bind another Congress. Therefore, if the Seventieth Congress should adopt the Capper resolution, the Seventy-first Congress might repeal it. That is important if true, because logically that would affect every statute passed by any legislative body in the land. Why pass any law, or make any declaration, because the next session of the same body can repeal or amend it?

Gentlemen, the fact of the matter is this: The Congress of the United States is supposed to represent the American public opinion. If American public opinion, as I believe it does, supports and demands this declaration of policy by this Government, then it holds until American public opinion changes. When American public opinion changes, we shall go to war with somebody, and then any of our brethren who are historically minded may rise in their places and ask what we said on the platform and in the press on August 4, 1914, when the German Government said that the treaty to preserve the neutrality of Belgium was "a scrap of paper." What is sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander; we too can treat a treaty as "a scrap of paper," if we will.

But my faith in the American people leads me to a different conclusion. My faith in the American people leads me to believe that if conscientiously and carefully, with their eyes open, they take this very practical step with respect to nations on the same plane with ourselves which are responsible and mean to keep their word, that our word will be kept, and that it will be a long, long time before any war breaks out between the nations that join in making this declaration of renunciation in 1927. [Applause.]

Then the Capper resolution defines an aggressor nation, and that, Mr. Chairman, is one of the most important steps to be taken in walking the path to peace. Up to this time there has never been an aggressor nation. Any nation which began war always did it in self-defense; it took the initiative because somebody else was going to attack it; and it is a military maxim that the best defense is offense—so all wars have been defensive wars. They are arguing now in the magazines and the press, and it is perfectly safe prediction they will still be arguing a hundred years from now, as to who was responsible for the war of 1914. I do not think they have mentioned the United States yet, but we may be drawn into the controversy as the years pass. But here is a definition of an aggressor nation which is so simple, so easy to understand, and so practical that it tells its own story. No more formal declaration is needed than to accept the definition of an aggressor nation as one which having agreed to submit international differences to conciliation, arbitration or judicial settlement begins hostilities without having done so. If the nation has agreed to submit its differences, or any of them, and does not keep its word, but begins an attack on its neighbor without having submitted these differences to those agencies, it automatically becomes an aggressor. Somebody quickly tells us that foreign offices are so clever that they can state their case in such a way as to make it almost impossible to determine whether they had agreed to submit an issue to conciliation, arbitration, or judicial settlement or not. But if a nation has made an all-inclusive committal, well and good. If it has made a committal such as we used to make, excluding certain things, well and good. It is only a question of keeping its word, whatever the terms. Having promised, you keep your word, or become an aggressor nation. That has been put in the Locarno conventions, and you must remember that it is now the law of Europe for all nations west of the Vistula. They have accepted that definition, and we remain, together with Japan, the important powers that are still to declare ourselves satisfied with it.

What harm does it do to be an aggressor nation? In the first place, and most important, it would bring down upon such nation the moral opprobrium of the civilized world. Some practical gentlemen think that moral opprobrium does not matter. Mr. Chairman, it is more powerful in this world of ours than any other single force. There is no nation—I care not what—that could break its word and stand up in the face of the public opinion of these advanced nations without being broken with shame and self-contempt and self-humiliation.

It is a long generation since Bismarck used his famous phrase of which we heard so much during the late war. He said, speaking to the Reichstag in about 1878, "In the next war, it will be the imponderables that count," not the things you see and weigh and measure, but the imponderables, the judgments of men, the feelings of men, the approval and disapproval of men. And, Mr. Chairman, if there is any thing more certain than another, it is that the prediction of Bismarck was fulfilled and that the last war was won by the weight of imponderables. And they will win every time in a world like ours! It is the imponderables that count! Let us see the nation—that is, of the nations that are advanced, civilized, cultivated, and with grand traditions—that will stand up even before its own public opinion and break its word to the world and so become an aggressor nation.

Then the Capper resolution contains another paragraph: "By treaty with France and other like-minded nations to declare that the nationals of the contracting governments should not be protected by their governments in giving aid and comfort to an aggressor nation." That is also covered by Congressman BURTON'S proposed resolution, which is in the form of a statute, which would be an appropriate statute to be adopted following the adoption of the Capper resolution declaring public policy.

What that means is this, that if there is an aggressive war we are not going to be drawn into a position of protecting our nationals who through greed for gain want to help the aggressor.

A gentleman recently said to me in Washington: "Do you know that if that had been our policy in 1914, we should have lost $700,000,000 worth of business?" Then I replied, "Do I understand that $700,000,000 is your price?" How much do you lose or gain before you do an aggressive thing, and engage in war, or whatever you have agreed to refrain from doing?

Mr. Chairman, that is all there is to the Capper joint resolution. Senator CAPPER said when he gave it to the public that he proposed to test the sincerity of the American people in their talk about peace. You can not get a word in favor of war out of any public man; but you can get very few acts in favor of peace. Talk, rhetoric, ponderous declarations of intentions and belief and faith and high purpose and all the rest of it, but acts—not if they can help it!

M. Briand is a man who has borne the burden and the heat of the day, who has taken his political life in his hands, but who when the curtain falls will be seen to have been the chief factor in the promotion of peace in our generation. He holds out his hand to America and says, "Can not you who away back in 1778 made this fine declaration with us—can you not now in 1927 under these circumstances make it again?"

Do that and let us see a great war break out! When all those nations, the United States, France, Germany, Italy, Japan, Great Britain, accept this principle—and most of the others have accepted it at Locarno—how is an aggressor going to carry on a war? Where is it going to get its munitions? Where is it going to get its food supplies? Where is it going to get its raw material? And war would have to be something very different from that through which we have just come, if these nations make this declaration and keep their word.

Here, Mr. Chairman, is the first chance that has come to us since the war to do, without partisanship, without personal conflict, an act by way of a declaration of policy which is in accord with all our professions, which is sustained by all our precedents, and which if done puts us back where we belong, without any political complications whatever, as leaders in the great procession along the path of peace.

Read, if you will, John Hay's instructions to our delegation to the First Hague Conference, in 1899, the chairman of our delegation being Andrew D. White, of New York. Read, if you will, the still more important instructions written by Elihu Root to our delegation to the Second Hague Conference, in 1907, of which the chairman was Joseph H. Choate, of New York. Read the statute of the United States passed by the Congress in August, 1916, making it a law of this country that we shall settle our disputes in this way; and then tell me what objection there can possibly be to this asked-for declaration, at this psychological moment, when the world is waiting to know where we stand in fact, and not merely in rhetoric. What objection can there be?

Every American, in my judgment, who cares for his country's fame and reputation and influence, should make his Senators and Representatives now understand that this Capper joint resolution is sustained by the overwhelming body of public opinion, and that if and when adopted American public opinion proposes to see that we keep our word.

THE OUTLOOK FOR PEACE

(A statement prepared by Nicholas Murray Butler for the annual meeting of the trustees of the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace at Washington, D. C., May 10, 1928)

Even the most cynical and skeptical observer of movements of public opinion must grant that there is a strong and steady tendency forward to the upbuilding of those institutions of international conference, international association, and international cooperation that will steadily lessen the danger of resort to international war, at least on any such world-wide scale as was the case in 1914–1918. It is becoming increasingly plain that almost everywhere, particularly among the more powerful nations, public opinion on this point is in advance of the action and formal commitments of their governments. This is strikingly true in the United States and it appears to be true in Great Britain, in France, and in Italy. Both in Germany and in Japan ruling public opinion and governmental policy are more closely in harmony, and each is marked by a strong, peace-loving and peace-building tendency.

It must not be forgotten that Germany is wholly disarmed both on land and on sea, that Great Britain has no army of any consequence, that the United States has none, and that France has greatly reduced both the period of compulsory military service and the number of men with the colors. Even in the newer countries of eastern and southeastern Europe, where armies of considerable size have appeared to be a sort of necessary inheritance, public opinion is beginning very strongly to question both the wisdom and the cost of these unnecessary luxuries. If a reasonable way were found to deal with the situation that exists in Russia, a major portion of the disquiet in eastern and southeastern Europe would quickly disappear. Such a way would be found, undoubtedly, and that speedily, if the present rulers of Russia would refrain from organizing and stimulating antigovernmental propaganda in other countries. In view of our established political practice, we could hardly question the right of Russia to govern itself as it will, provided it surrenders its notion of a world-wide economic and political revolution, to be conducted from Moscow.

Of course, the Scandinavian countries are committed to the most advanced forms of peaceful cooperation. The Latin American countries, particularly those on the South American Continent, are steadily moving in the same direction. Japan has since the Great War completely changed its point of view in looking out over the rest of the world and can be counted upon to cooperate to the full in any movement to advance international peace.

It is a paradox but a truth that, despite the overwhelming sentiment of the people of the United States, the Government of the United States has for some years past been a chief obstacle to every movement to make war unlikely and to advance the cause of international peace. Our public officials, and particularly our Senators, are greatly in love with formulas, declarations, and rhetorical flourishes, but when they come to close quarters with practical action they are so concerned with exceptions, reservations, and provisos that their nominally good intentions disappear in the smoke of unreality.

But literally enormous progress has just now been made through the recent action of the Department of State, taken after informal conferences with members of the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate. What has happened in this respect since April 6, 1927, when M. Briand first made his public appeal to the people of the United States to join France in the renunciation of war as an instrument of public policy is one more illustration of the power of public opinion. For months there was no governmental recognition of any kind of M. Briand's epoch-making appeal. It soon became evident, however, that American public opinion was deeply concerned over this matter and would hold to strict accountability any administration which failed to move quickly and practically in the direction of such policies as would diminish the likelihood of international war. The correspondence which followed is now a matter of public knowledge, and it is justifiable to hope that before many months have passed there may be formal agreement on the part of the United States, France, Great Britain, Germany, Italy, and Japan to renounce war as an instrument of public policy in their dealings with each other. When this action shall have been taken the liberal conviction and sentiment of the world may well cry Hallelujah!

It is most unfortunate that the phrase "outlawry of war" has been applied to the proposals now pending. Renunciation of war as a public policy by governments which have it in their power to declare war is one thing, and a very practicable thing. On the other hand, to outlaw war—meaning to pass a resolution declaring it a crime and not to be countenanced—is a mere empty gesture and can have no real significance whatever. What is now proposed is, fortunately, the renunciation of war as an instrument of public policy.

There are several other things which the Government of the United States may do and should do in order to resume our traditional national policy and to satisfy enlightened and progressive public opinion:

In the first place, we should bring to an end the preposterous agitation that has existed heretofore, both here and in Great Britain, for increased naval armaments, by leading the way in a revision of the laws of neutrality as these affect sea-borne commerce. The only possible excuse that is left for a huge naval expenditure is that of protecting a nation's commerce in time of war. It is no longer a difficult matter to protect this commerce by law, thereby making unnecessary battleships, submarines, destroyers, and all their ilk, and enabling us to confine our naval vessels to cruisers to be used for police purposes, and which may truly be described as a navy of peace. All the militaristic naval gentlemen and all the representatives of the big armament makers are, of course, violently opposed to this humane proposal; but, despite their outcries, public opinion is about ready to demand it.

A syndicated article has been going about through the press indicating that our Government shall enter into no agreements of any kind, but should retain complete "freedom of action" and "command the world's respect with flying machines, submarines, fast cruisers, and a mercantile fleet bigger and better than any other." This is the pestiferous barbarism of a bygone age and should have no place in the thinking or the conduct of the American people at this time in the world's history.

In the second place, the Congress should adopt the joint resolution introduced by Senator CAPPER in December last, which accepts a perfectly practicable definition of "aggressive war" and indicates our attitude toward such aggressive war. No constructive criticism has been offered by anybody of the Capper resolution. Should such a declaration be made by the Congress, then our legislative power would have given all possible support to our treaty-making power in affirming and announcing our national policy against war.

In the third place, since all the nations of the earth, except ourselves and Russia and Mexico, are banded together in the League of Nations, which is the most impressive development of international cooperation in all history, we should make it our steady policy to cooperate with the League of Nations in its humane and progressive acts. This we have recently begun to do, but we should cooperate, not tardily and grudgingly but willingly and helpfully. Were these things done, the perplexity which now hangs over Europe and South America because of the constant contradictions between our professions and our acts would be removed and the movement to renounce war as an instrument of national policy and to build those institutions of conference, conciliation, arbitration, and judicial action, that are are ready to take the place of war, would mark a long stride forward.

Finally, we might easily remove the only possible ground for unfriendly feeling toward us on the part of the people of Japan by a very slight change in the language of our existing immigration law, which, while not increasing the number of Japanese who may now be admitted each year, would touch the pride of the Japanese people by placing them on the same plane with other foreign countries in respect of immigration. If aliens of the Japanese race were admissible as quota immigrants, it would not increase the present quota for Japan. One hundred would still be the maximum number of natives of that country that could be charged to such quota during a single year, but the form of the action on our part would greatly please the Japanese people. They can be counted on to be our enthusiastic and generous associates in every constructive international movement.

RECESS

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate take a recess until to-morrow at 11 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Wednesday, May 16, 1928, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, May 15, 1928

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Infinite God, attend our prayer as we praise Thee for the divine light that falls upon our pathway. May this providence stir in us the virtue of gratitude. Let Thy presence consecrate our labors, give support to those who bear burdens, and sustain all when the light burns low. We thank Thee that Thou wilt never cause us a needless tear. O lead us to ever open our hearts to the great source of divine help. Be Thou with this generation of men. Shield all hearts from the arch prince of hate, whose vicious passions fall like daggers upon Thy innocent children. Keep the heart, the mind, and the very soul of our country from all things that profane God, and may purity, honor, and Christian chivalry be the blossoms that shall forever lie on her fair brow. In the name of the Son of Man. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its principal clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a joint resolution of the House of the following title:

H. J. Res. 184. Joint resolution designating May 1 as Child Health Day.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 4405. An act authorizing the Detroit River Canadian Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Detroit River at or near Stony Island, Wayne County, State of Michigan.

The message further announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to bills of the following titles:

S. 2084. An act for the purchase of land in the vicinity of Winnemucca, Nev., for an Indian colony, and for other purposes;

S. 3365. An act to authorize allotments to unallotted Indians on the Shoshone or Wind River Reservation, Wyo.; and

S. 4045. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Highway Department of the State of Tennessee to construct a bridge across the French Broad River on the Newport-Asheville (N. C.) road near the town of Del Rio, in Cocke County, Tenn.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12286) entitled "An act making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929, and for other purposes."

APPORTIONMENT OF REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. SNELL, from the Committee on Rules, reported the following resolution, which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered printed:

House Resolution 207

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 11725, for the apportionment of Representatives in Congress. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed three hours, to be equally divided and controlled by those favoring and opposing the bill, the bill shall be read for amendment under the five-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment the committee shall arise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and the amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

BOULDER DAM

Mr. SNELL, from the Committee on Rules, also reported the following resolution, which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered printed:

House Resolution 208

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 5773, to provide for the construction of works for the protection and development of the lower Colorado River Basin, for the approval of the Colorado River compact, and for other purposes. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed eight hours, to be equally divided and controlled by those favoring and opposing the bill, the bill shall be read for amendment under the five-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment the committee shall arise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and the amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that after the reading of the Journal to-morrow, and the disposition of business on the Speaker's table, I may have 10 minutes in which the address the House.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, to-morrow is Calendar Wednesday, and with the important business that is to be considered to-morrow, I shall have to object.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I want to address the House on the subject that is coming up, because debate is cut off, and I did not have a moment in which to discuss it in general debate.

Mr. CRAMTON. That can be taken care of to-morrow.

Mr. LINTHICUM. It can not, because the time is limited.

The SPEAKER. The Chair prefers not to recognize Members to ask unanimous consent to address the House on Calendar Wednesday.

EXTENDING PERIOD OF RESTRICTIONS IN THE FIVE CIVILIZED TRIBES IN OKLAHOMA

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing therein my own remarks made on bill H. R. 12000, extending the period of restrictions in the Five Civilized Tribes in Oklahoma, and also upon a report of the Department of the Interior on House Joint Resolution 255, providing for a loan of $2,500,000 to the Choctaw and Chickasaw Tribes of Indians, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Speaker, I call attention to the remarks I made on H. R. 12000, a bill by Mr. LEAVITT, extending the period of restrictions in the Five Civilized Tribes in Oklahoma, which passed the House under a parliamentary situation which precluded those opposed to the bill in its present form an opportunity to be heard. Also, I call attention to the report of the Secretary of the Interior on House Joint Resolution 255, which is adverse to the resolution.

The matter referred to is as follows:

STATEMENT OF HON. TOM D. M'KEOWN, A REPRESENTATIVE IN CONGRESS FROM THE STATE OF OKLAHOMA

Mr. McKEOWN. I will say at the outset that I have been always and am now in favor of the proper protection of the Indians. It was my thought that Congress has made mistakes already in this matter of the removal of restrictions in Oklahoma for this reason, as stated by my colleague Mr. SWANK, that there are incompetent Indians among the less than full bloods just the same as there are among white people. We talk about trying to protect the Indian. Some white people are just as incompetent to handle their estates and they squander their estates and you can not stop it. It is wrong, but it happens. If you look around you, you will find a lot of white children inheriting large fortunes who soon squander them and are improvident.

What I would like to see done, and I think ought to be done, in this legislation is to set aside in the Choctaw and Chickasaw country 80 or 100 acres that will be nontaxable and inalienable, not only for the present allottee but nontaxable and inalienable as long as it shall be occupied as a home by any one of that family. That seems to tie it up a great while, but the treaty with the Seminoles gave 40 acres to members of the Seminole Nation, that was nontaxable and inalienable in perpetuity, and the courts construed that to mean that whenever the allottee dies it then becomes taxable.

I am opposed to this bill in its present form because it does not protect and at the same time give a responsibility that the Indian ought to have. Now, to illustrate, you extend his restrictions on 160 acres of land. I think I know this Indian problem pretty well, because I at one time had a large Indian clientele.

When you extend these restrictions it is true you extend homestead restrictions. I would prefer that you make it 80 or 100 acres in the Choctaw and Chickasaw country and permit them to select it, and if I had my way about it I would make him live on that land, till it, and cultivate it, but I can not do that, and Congress can not do it because he will not stay on it.

Mr. SPROUL. It is not material if Congress does not have such power.

Mr. MCKEOWN. You can pass that law but you can not make him stay out there. Here is what the Indian complains about. He says this: "I have here 320 acres." That is the average allotment in the Choctaw and Chickasaw country. You take off the restrictions from 160 acres under the supervision of the Secretary of the Interior, through the Bureau of Indian Affairs, but in taking those restrictions off that 160 acres the department controls the funds and the Indian has no opportunity to exercise any business control over it, and to-day under the law in Oklahoma a full-blood Indian with 320 acres of land can not legally contract for burial expenses or physicians' fees for himself or any member of his family. If you extend these restrictions, which no doubt you will do and which you ought to do—I do not see the haste for it at this time, but that is a matter with Congress—the surplus land of these Indians you propose to restrict, you ought to permit the competent ones to have an opportunity to have their restrictions off without any supervision by this department. Here is what takes place.

Mr. HILL. Will not that happen under this bill?

Mr. MCKEOWN. No; it will not happen under this bill, because the department will continue to hold their funds.

Mr. HILL. You said competent Indians.

Mr. MCKEOWN. I mean the ones they remove restrictions from. There are very few cases where they remove restrictions and give the Indian a chance to sell his land himself or to have the funds when they sell it.

Another thing I will call your attention to is that we have an Indian agent who does not have very much authority, who goes out and looks at the land, and if he sells a piece of land for an Indian the funds are restricted. The Indian makes an application and he has to make two or three trips to the Indian agent's office to see if his check has come, when it is sold to make improvements on his homestead. The Indian if he gives him a chance will eat up or live up that money, and from time to time he comes to the Indian agent and wants money to pay grocery bills, and he prevails upon the Indian agent as he would on you or me or anybody else. There is no question but what the removal of the restrictions indiscriminately by act of Congress, as it was done in 1908, has not been to the benefit of the Indians and for the reason that you measured the removal by the degree of blood and said these Indians should have their restrictions removed because they did not have half Indian blood. The result is that a lot of them sold their lands and are now without land.

What I would like to insist upon here is to see this bill amended and continue the restriction on at least 80 acres in the Choctaw and Chickasaw country, and you can make it apply to the rest of it. A man ought to have at least 80 acres for each member of the family. Let them have the trust period, issue a competence certificate by the department up here as they do with those other Indians. They have all got their patents. Then put the extension of their restrictions upon the President.

Mr. HILL. You would like to see the bill amended so that each Indian would get not over 160 acres, or 80 acres?

Mr. MCKEOWN. Yes. When you talk about the taxes, we have all got that same question in all the Western States. I am not here to discuss that question of taxation, because Oklahoma came into the Union with full knowledge and with the full idea that Congress would always regulate the question as to taxes. I want you to make it 80 acres of land, so that the head of the family when he is dead and his children come in who have no land or allotment, they will have a home to live in. About the most touching thing to me is to see a bunch of landless Indians with no place to go and they have to live among their Indian friends. There is one characteristic of the Indian. Before we ever had any governmental restriction there was no such thing as an orphan child among the Indians. If an Indian died and left a dozen children, the Indians of that neighborhood took them into their homes and raised them to manhood and womanhood as if they were their own children, and that is the way they are to-day. A well-to-do Indian down there takes care of his kinsfolk. Go to a wealthy Indian out there and you will find a dozen or a half a dozen of his relatives around almost any time if they are unfortunate and have no money.

The citizens of Oklahoma as in other States carry a heavy burden in caring for these Indians. When a full-blood restricted Indian is in need of something where does he get it? From his neighbors, a merchant or some one that is a friend. He does not send to Muskogee.

Mr. HOWARD of Oklahoma. The gentleman's statement with reference to the taxation matter left the inference with me that the gentleman is not in favor of my amendment.

Mr. MCKEOWN. I did not mean to discuss that. I was discussing this other phase of the question.

Mr. HOWARD of Oklahoma. The inference is still left from your first remarks as to your position and I wanted that cleared up.

Mr. MCKEOWN. All right. I will give you my idea about this taxation. There is no provision in this bill that will require these oil companies to pay taxes, as I see it, on the oil that they are going to take out of these unrestricted lands. You have a provision here attempting to do it, but I do not think it does it. The oil companies have escaped their just taxes in Oklahoma by claiming that they were instruments of the National Government in taking out oil from under these lands and it has been sustained in the courts that they were instruments of the Government, and because they were instruments they have not had to pay their taxes.

Mr. SPROUL. That applies to what particular Indians?

Mr. MCKEOWN. Where it is a restricted Indian allotment.

Mr. SPROUL. It does not apply to the Osages?

Mr. MCKEOWN. I am talking about the Five Tribes, which this bill deals with.

Mr. HOWARD of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman tell me how we can read into this bill any provision that will make legal the collection of the oil tax on Seminole and Cherokee homesteads at the present time?

Mr. MCKEOWN. When you made it nontaxable, that is no reason why the oil company that takes out seven-eighths of the oil ought to escape paying taxes.

Mr. HOWARD of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. MCKEOWN. Yes.

Mr. HOWARD of Oklahoma. Does not the gentleman know that in the case of Large v. E. B. Howard, auditor of the State of Oklahoma, the United States Supreme Court decided that the State could not collect this tax from either the oil men or the Indians, with restrictions on the land such as the Seminoles and Cherokees had?

Mr. MCKEOWN. That is what I am trying to tell the committee, and the reason is they claim to be instruments of the United States Government to take out this seven-eighths of the oil that they take out. They are not instruments of the United States Government and ought not to be permitted to claim that to escape taxation.

Mr. HOWARD of Oklahoma. I fought that case through the United States Supreme Court on behalf of Oklahoma, and I would be pleased if the State could collect that.

Mr. LETTS. Why has not Congress legislated in regard to that matter?

Mr. MCKEOWN. I think it should.

Mr. LETTS. I see no difficulty.

Mr. HOWARD of Oklahoma. It is not put up to them.

Mr. MCKEOWN. They could. They have been held to be agents of the United States Government and ought not to be permitted to claim such exemption from taxation.

Mr. HILL. They are in the same position that the Government would be in taking out the oil.

Mr. MCKEOWN. Yes; but they should not be permitted to claim that.

Mr. LETTS. What would be a simple provision to take care of that whole situation?

Mr. PEAVEY. Suppose Congress would legislate to make it possible for the State to collect taxes on this oil that is being removed, to protect the Indians, would it exceed in benefit to the State the $10,000,000, provided in this amendment?

Mr. MCKEOWN. Mr. Howard has that figure.

Mr. HOWARD of Oklahoma. Every farmer in Oklahoma who has an oil well on his land pays a gross production tax and pays an ad valorem tax on his farm.

Mr. PEAVEY. That does not apply to restricted land.

Mr. HOWARD of Oklahoma. No; they do not have any gross production tax or ad valorem tax or anything else and will not if this bill passes, on their homesteads.

Mr. PEAVEY. My question is if they paid the tax—you are also claiming the State would get this sum of money.

Mr. HOWARD of Oklahoma. When I was State auditor this was tested out in the courts and we employed the best legal talent we could and the decision was against us, and I would be glad to see some provision in the statutes that would tax this oil.

Mr. MCKEOWN. I would suggest a simple sentence in this bill, in that connection, which says that the lessee under any oil lease approved by the department for oil, coal, or any other mineral, is not an agent and shall not be considered an agent of the Government or the department.

Mr. HOWARD of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. MCKEOWN. I have taken up a great deal of your time, but this is an important bill to Oklahoma.

Mr. ARENTZ. Would not this room be filled with representatives of oil companies if you suggested something of that kind?

Mr. MCKEOWN. I do not care how many of them come. This is a fair proposition. That is all we want.

Mr. HOWARD of Oklahoma. When we passed the Osage bill which put an oil tax on oil lands in 1921, up until 1931, the oil men agreed to it.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Are you or are you not in favor of this amendment that Mr. Howard has suggested?

Mr. MCKEOWN. Of course I am in favor of it, if we can get it through Congress; I will vote for it.

Mr. LETTS. As I understand your viewpoint, you recognize there are other matters that ought not to be jeopardized.

Mr. MCKEOWN. I favor cutting this amount of acreage down to 80 acres and then make it nontaxable and nonalienable until such time as the President of the United States by Executive order may take it off.

Mr. SPROUL. Will the gentleman read section 3 of the bill for the benefit of the members of the committee? It is apropos to that question.

Mr. MCKEOWN (reading):

"That all minerals, including oil and gas, produced on or after April 26, 1931, from restricted allotted lands of members of the Five Civilized Tribes in Oklahoma, or from inherited restricted lands of full-blood Indian heirs or devisees of such lands, shall be subject to all State and Federal taxes of every kind and character the same as those produced from lands owned by other citizens of the State of Oklahoma; and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to cause to be paid, from the individual Indian funds held under his supervision and control and belonging to the Indian owners of the lands, the tax or taxes assessed against the royalty interest of the respective Indian owners in such oil, gas, and other mineral production."

Mr. SPROUL. Does not that cover the general point?

Mr. HOWARD of Oklahoma. That has been fought out by these lessees of this land that have these leases. You can not make a statute retroactive like that.

Mr. ARENTZ. How long do these leases run?

Mr. HOWARD of Oklahoma. As long as oil and gas are found in paying quantities.

Mr. LETTS. The legislation does not provide for any reassessment of values or reconsideration of these matters?

Mr. HOWARD of Oklahoma. None at all. They lease that land under one-eighth or one-sixth royalty, and they produce the oil, and in the case which I referred to, which was carried to the United States Supreme Court, the court held that they were agents of the Government and could not be taxed, and there are hundreds of them in Oklahoma to-day that are operating.

Mr. LETTS. Under the laws under which the leases were drawn.

Mr. ARENTZ. And there will be a great many new ones in the future.

Mr. LETTS. Some of the men representing the State of Oklahoma ought to have been here fighting about that time.

Mr. HOWARD of Oklahoma. At that time we were being forced down there to do anything we could to get out from under the Washington carpetbag Government.

Mr. MCKEOWN. I will make another suggestion. The Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians, as far as I know, are the only Indians left in the Five Tribes that have not had their tribal affairs wound up. Of course, the failure to wind them up is because the Government has not been able to dispose of their coal lands. I am in favor of the amendment of my colleague Mr. CARTWRIGHT in that there is a moral obligation on the part of the Government in dealing with these coal lands, because those Indians at one time could sell those coal lands and had an offer to buy those coal lands at $30,000,000. The Congress refused to permit the department to sell them. Now the department is unable to sell them at any price or within their appraisal. If the Government would not let them sell them and now the Government can not sell them at the present time, it follows that the Government ought to take some steps along that line.

Mr. SPROUL. The coal land would not have been subject to taxation as long as the Indians owned it, neither would the proceeds of the sale.

Mr. MCKEOWN. I am not talking about the tax, but about the settlement which I think the Indian should receive on what he has coming to him on this tribal property that remains undisposed of. That is what I am driving at—undisposed-of tribal property. The Indians at one time had a chance to sell it and the Government would not let them, and now the Government can not sell it. It ought to do one of two things—lend to the Indians sufficient money to enable the Indians to live and hold this property until it can be disposed of, or the Government ought to take it over. That is my position about that.

I hope the committee will give us a bill that we can whole-heartedly support, and I think if you can fix this so that the Indians will have 80 acres of land nontaxable and nonalienable to keep for a homestead down there for the years to come that you will benefit these Indians more than extending it to 160 acres.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, May 12, 1928.

Hon. SCOTT LEAVITT,
Chairman Committee on Indian Affairs,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. LEAVITT: Reference is made herein to H. J. Res. 255, entitled "Joint resolution providing for loan of $2,500,000 to Choctaw and Chickasaw Tribes or Nations of Indians, and for other purposes," and to your request of April 16, 1928, for a report thereon.

The joint resolution authorizes to be appropriated, out of any funds in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2,500,000 and the making therefrom, by the Bureau of Indian Affairs, of a per capita payment to the members of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Tribes of Indians. The joint resolution provides that the said sum of $2,500,000, together with interest thereon at the rate of 4 per cent per annum, shall be reimbursable out of the property of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Tribes.

It is inferred from the joint resolution that the reason for the proposed loan is the financial distress of the members of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations in Oklahoma owing to the ravages of the boll weevil and the consequent failure of the cotton crop.

Reference is also made in the joint resolution to the great value of the undisposed tribal property of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations in the custody of the United States.

In the annual report for the fiscal year 1927, submitted by Charles L. Ellis, district superintendent in charge, Five Civilized Tribes Agency, the unsold tribal property of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations and the estimated value thereof were stated as follows:

Tribal school and improvements	$107,200.00
Four vacant and forfeited town lots	25.00
Unsold lands, including unallotted, timber, and surface of the segregated coal and asphalt lands, being approximately 1,200 acres of land heretofore forfeited, and 9,969.96 acres of the reserved surface of the segregated coal and asphalt lands, amounting to 11,724.65 acres	117,246.50
Unsold coal and asphalt minerals	9,403,699.36
Total estimated value of unsold tribal property of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations	9,628,170.86

The report further indicated that the amounts yet uncollected from the purchasers of tribal property on the deferred installments of the sales price aggregated as follows:

Amount uncollected from sale of tribal land	$391,357.80
From sale of coal and asphalt minerals	531,480.47
From sale of reserved surface of segregated coal and asphalt lands	75,996.19
From sale of town lots	656.28
From sale of reserved town lots	1,843.00
Total amount yet uncollected of the deferred installments of the sales price of tribal property sold	1,001,333.74

Steps looking to the sale, under existing law, of the coal and asphalt deposits and other tribal property of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations will be taken at the earliest practicable date consistent with the best interests of the tribes.

In H. R. 9858, Seventieth Congress, it was contemplated that the United States should purchase the segregated coal and asphalt deposits belonging to the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations. I was unable to recommend favorable consideration of the proposition. Relative thereto reference is herein made to my letter of March 19, 1928, to you in regard to H. R. 9858.

The records of the Indian Office show a per capita payment from the tribal funds was made to the Choctaws and Chickasaws of $40 in 1904, of $35 in 1906, and of $20 in 1908, and that the following payments were made since 1912:

Year	Choctaw per capita	Chickasaw per capita
1912	$50	$50
1914		100
1916	300	200
1917	100	100
1918	200	200
1919	140	200
1920	100	100

From the books of the Indian Office, it appears that there were in the United States Treasury, on March 26, 1928, to the credit of the Choctaw Nation, funds to the aggregate amount of $530,930.48; and to the credit of the Chickasaw Nation, funds to the aggregate amount of $106,928.85.

Deducting therefrom the sums necessary for the tribal government and schools for the next fiscal year and to meet outstanding obligations, there are not sufficient available tribal funds to warrant any new per capita distribution therefrom at this time to the enrolled members of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations. The department does not feel that it would be justified in recommending the loan of $2,500,000 by the United States to the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations for the purpose of a per capita distribution thereof to the members of said Indian nations. Therefore the enactment of H. J. Res. 255 is not recommended.

The Director of the Bureau of the Budget advises, by letter of May 7, 1928, that the proposed legislation is in conflict with the financial program of the President.

Very truly yours,

HUBERT WORK.

WILLIAM RODERICK DORSEY AND OTHERS

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 9112) for the relief of William Roderick Dorsey and other officers of the Foreign Service of the United States, who, while serving abroad, suffered by theft, robbery, fire, embezzlement, or bank failures losses of official funds, with a Senate amendment thereto, and agree to the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill, H. R. 9112, with a Senate amendment thereto, and agree to the Senate amendment. The Clerk will report the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether the gentleman keeps up with the proceedings in the House or not, but the Speaker the other day said that he did not like to recognize anyone to take up a House bill with Senate amendments thereto for the purpose of agreeing to the Senate amendments, unless the committee had ordered the chairman or the Member in charge of the matter to make such a request.

The SPEAKER. The Chair was so assured before recognizing the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. The gentleman did not make that statement, and I think it ought to be made at the time the request is made, because it would save time in each instance.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, for the information of the gentleman from Texas I would say that I have been instructed to do this by the committee.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the Senate amendment.

The Senate amendment was agreed to.

REREFERENCE OF A BILL—GILPIN CONSTRUCTION CO.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for a rereference of the bill S. 1530, for the relief of the Gilpin Construction Co., from the Committee on Claims to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is this with the consent of the chairmen of these committees?

Mr. HAWLEY. Of both chairmen.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

INFORMATION RESPECTING PROSPECTIVE JURORS IN PROHIBITION CASES

Mr. GRIEST. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD the following letter from the Postmaster General.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The letter referred to is as follows:

OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., May 9, 1928.

Hon. W. W. GRIEST,
Chairman Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. GRIEST: In reply to a telephone inquiry from the rooms of the House Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads concerning House Resolution 179, I beg to state that there has been no action taken by direction of the Postmaster General or anyone else officially connected with the headquarters of the Post Office Department directing postmasters or employees of the service to furnish information to the United States Prohibition Service with reference to the habits or qualifications of prospective jurors. It has been customary for other departments of the Government from time to time to ask the Post Office Department to cooperate with them in the collection of certain statistical information, and wherever it has been possible for the Post Office Department to accord such cooperation without undue expense and without overtaxing its own employees, it has been given.

The Treasury Department has never to my knowledge called on us for service in connection with prohibition enforcement, and I do not see how it would be possible for us in any way to aid in a service of that character. The only case of which I have any knowledge of anyone connected with the Postal Service being asked to do anything in this respect arose at Pittsburgh, where Postmaster Gosser received a letter over the signature of John D. Pennington, Federal prohibition administrator for that district, inclosing a questionnaire concerning the habits, associations, and characteristics of certain prospective jurors. I do not know that Postmaster Gosser did anything more in this case than to send the questionnaire to this department for instructions. After reading the list of questions included, it is perfectly apparent that they could not by any possibility be answered without long investigation, and it would appear equally obvious that the matter is one in which this department ought not be expected to take a part. Postmaster Gosser has been so informed.

As above stated, this is the only case of which I know in which a request of this character has been preferred. If the committee so desires, a representative of the department will attend the hearing on this resolution, but this letter really supplies all the information the department has or could impart.

Very truly yours,

HARRY S. NEW, Postmaster General.

WITHDRAWING CERTAIN MONTANA LAND FROM ENTRY

Mr. LEAVITT. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Public Lands, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 8110, withdrawing from entry the northwest quarter section 12, township 30 north, range 19 east, Montana meridian, with a Senate amendment thereto, and agree to the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Montana, by direction of the Committee on Public Lands, asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 8110, with a Senate amendment thereto, and agree to the Senate amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment.

The Senate amendment was agreed to.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE DETROIT RIVER

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, I call up from the Speaker's table the bill S. 4405 and ask for its immediate consideration, a similar bill being on the calendar.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois calls up from the Speaker's table the bill S. 4405, a similar House bill being on the calendar.

Mr. DENISON. The bill is in the usual form, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 4405) authorizing the Detroit River Canadian Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Detroit River at or near Stony Island, Wayne County, State of Michigan.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, is the recapture clause in this bill? Is there no recapture clause in it?

Mr. DENISON. No.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has the right to call it up.

Mr. DENISON. I will state to the gentleman from New York that this is identical with the Detroit River bill passed last year.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes; a novel and very constructive feature in international bridges was brought about in a bill introduced by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON], which will be a model for future bridge bills, so far as I am concerned, at the next session of Congress.

Mr. DENISON. That was done by agreement between the parties and is a very unusual thing.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. That was due to the foresight and skill of the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. DENISON. Our committee approved of it.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I am with the committee for that.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote whereby the Senate bill was passed was laid on the table.

The bill H. R. 13065 was laid on the table.

HOSPITAL RELIEF FOR UNITED STATES COAST GUARD

Mr. HOCH. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, I ask unanimous consent to call up from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 11022, with a Senate amendment, and move to agree to the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 11022, with a Senate amendment, and agree to the Senate amendment. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 11022) to extend medical and hospital relief to retired officers and retired enlisted men of the United States Coast Guard.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Senate amendment.

The Senate amendment was read.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the Senate amendment.

The Senate amendment was agreed to.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the House bill 12286, making appropriations for the Navy Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Idaho calls up the conference report on the bill H. R. 12286. The Clerk will report it.

The conference report was read.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. 12286) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and embodied in the accompanying conference report, as to each such amendments, namely:

On Nos. 1, 2, 3, and 4, relating to the appropriation, "Pay, miscellaneous": Provides for two delegates to attend the International Research Council and one delegate to attend the International Hydrographic Conference, as proposed by the Senate, instead of one and two delegates, respectively, as proposed by the House.

On Nos. 5 and 6, relating to the appropriation, "Pay, miscellaneous": Appropriates $495,000 for pay of classified employees, as proposed by the House, instead of $516,523.20, as proposed by the Senate.

On Nos. 7, 8, 9, and 10, relating to the West Indian Islands: Makes a direct appropriation of $260,000, instead of $240,000, as proposed by the House, and $280,000, as proposed by the Senate, and a conditional appropriation of $20,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $35,500, as proposed by the House.

On Nos. 11 and 12, relating to the Naval Research Laboratory: Appropriates $85,400 for pay of classified employees, instead of $85,000, as proposed by the House, and $86,893.40, as proposed by the Senate.

On Nos. 13 and 14, relating to recreation for enlisted men: Appropriates $35,000 for pay of classified employees, as proposed by the House, instead of $36,500, as proposed by the Senate.

On No. 15, relating to the appropriation "Instruments and supplies, Bureau of Navigation": Appropriates $580,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $580,300, as proposed by the Senate.

On No. 16: Appropriates $80,000 for ocean and lake surveys, as proposed by the House, instead of $80,860, as proposed by the Senate.

On Nos. 17 and 18, relating to the Naval Reserve: Appropriates $4,075,820, instead of $4,020,000, as proposed by the House, and $4,085,820, as proposed by the Senate, and fixes the amount for pay of classified employees at $73,531, as proposed by the House, instead of $76,431, as proposed by the Senate.

On Nos. 19, 20, and 21, relating to the Naval War College: Appropriates $68,518 for pay of classified employees, instead of $68,118, as proposed by the House, and $70,893, as proposed by the Senate.

On Nos. 22 and 23, relating to the Naval Home, Philadelphia, Pa.: Appropriates $73,425 for pay of employees, as proposed by the House, instead of $75,165, as proposed by the Senate.

On Nos. 24 and 25: Appropriates $1,596,700 for pay of classified employees, field service, Bureau of Engineering, instead of $1,575,000, as proposed by the House, and $1,623,450, as proposed by the Senate.

On Nos. 26, 27, and 28, relating to the Bureau of Construction and Repair: Makes specific provision for carrying on experimental and research work, as proposed by the Senate, and appropriates $1,828,000 for pay of classified employees in the field, instead of $1,800,000 as proposed by the House, and $1,902,000, as proposed by the Senate.

On Nos. 29 and 30: Appropriates $960,800 for pay of classified employees in the field under the Bureau of Ordnance, instead of $950,000, as proposed by the House, and $974,000, as proposed by the Senate.

On Nos. 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, and 36, relating to pay, transportation, and subsistence of naval personnel: Appropriates $150,896,957, instead of $149,213,752, as proposed by the House, and $151,948,777, as proposed by the Senate, being intended to provide for an average enlisted strength during the fiscal year 1929 of 84,000 men, instead of 83,250 men, as proposed by the House, and 86,000, as proposed by the Senate, and also to meet the anticipated added expense incident to a larger number of reenlistments than contemplated by the figures of both the House and Senate.

On Nos. 37 and 38: Appropriates $9,647,000 for "maintenance, Bureau of Supplies and Accounts," as proposed by the House, instead of $9,777,000, as proposed by the Senate, and fixes the sum available for pay of classified employees at $2,975,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $3,067,000, as proposed by the Senate.

On No. 39: Restores the provision proposed by the House with respect to the manufacture of clothing in piecework shops.

On No. 40: Appropriates $2,032,250 for Medical Department on account of the proposal to raise the average enlisted strength to 84,000 men, instead of $2,030,000, as proposed by the House, and $2,054,250, as proposed by the Senate.

On No. 41: Appropriates $60,000 for "Care of the dead," as proposed by the House in agreement with the Budget estimate, instead of $75,000, as proposed by the Senate.

On Nos. 42, 43, and 44, relating to the appropriation "Maintenance, Bureau of Yards and Docks": Fixes the sum available for pay of classified employees at $1,008,800, instead of $1,000,000, as proposed by the House, and $1,035,000, as proposed by the Senate, and clarifies the text with respect to acquisition of motor vehicles.

On No. 47: Makes $165,000 of the appropriation made in the first deficiency act, fiscal year 1927, on account of hurricane damage, Naval Air Station, Pensacola, Fla., available for the erection of a concrete bridge at such station, as proposed by the Senate.

On Nos. 48, 49, and 51, relating to aviation, Navy: Fixes the sum to be applied to maintenance, repair, and operation at $9,675,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $9,740,000, as proposed by the Senate; fixes the amount for pay of classified employees at $731,000, instead of $725,000, as proposed by the House, and $782,200, as proposed by the Senate, and amends, as proposed by the Senate, the provision with respect to the construction of rigid airships so as to remove any question that one of such airships need to be commenced prior to July 1, 1928.

On Nos. 53, 54, and 55, relating to the Marine Corps Reserve: Appropriates for other than transferred and assigned men $182,000, instead of $150,000, as proposed by the House, and $243,684, as proposed by the Senate, and appropriates for assigned men $65,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $87,500, as proposed by the Senate.

On No. 56: Appropriates $250,000 for printing and binding, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $510,000, as proposed by the House.

The committee of conference have not agreed to the following amendments:

On No. 45: Appropriating $157,000 for replacing boiler house, and so forth, Engineering Experiment Station, Annapolis, Md.

On No. 46: Appropriating $65,000 for replacement of boiler plant, Naval Fuel Depot, Melville, R. I.

On Nos. 50 and 52: Appropriating $635,000 for airplanes for use of Naval Reserve.

BURTON L. FRENCH,
GUY U. HARDY,
JOHN TABER,
W. A. AYRES,
W. B. OLIVER,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, I think a short statement will be sufficient to indicate to the House the result of the work of the conferees on the disagreeing votes between the Senate and the House of Representatives on the naval appropriation bill.

The bill as it passed the House carried $359,418,237. The Senate added $4,318,780.69. The report of the conference committee just read indicates that the amount added by the Senate embraces quite a number of amendments. Many of these amendments have to do with the classified personnel and are scattered throughout the bill.

The following objects, however, include the items added by the Senate:

Classified employees in the field—increase in numbers and pay	$406,501.69
West Indian Islands	40,000.00
Naval Reserve	65,820.00
Pay of the Navy and medical department	2,743,275.00
Care of the dead	15,000.00
Experiment station, Annapolis	157,000.00
Fuel depot, Melville, R. I	65,000.00
Aviation	700,000.00
Marine Corps Reserve	116,184.00
Printing and binding	10,000.00
Total	4,318,780.69

The principal item, as will be seen from the foregoing, relates to pay, and was added by the Senate to permit of an average enlisted strength of 86,000 men instead of 83,250, as proposed by the House.

After the bill had passed the Senate the Navy Department advised that more recent studies disclosed that reenlistments likely would exceed previous estimates and that longevity pay would be larger than we had been advised; and that if such proved to be the case, the Senate figures would provide for but 85,000 men and that the House figures would need to be increased by $821,685 to provide for 83,250 men, exclusive of certain overestimates totaling $728,042, which were revealed by the latest studies.

As a result of our conference we fixed the personnel at 84,000 instead of 83,250, as carried in the House bill, and 86,000 as provided by the Senate. To take care of longevity pay based upon the latest studies and to take care of 750 additional enlisted men, the bill carries for pay of naval personnel $1,683,205 more than when passed by the House and $1,051,820 less than as passed by the Senate. Since the conference was concluded a supplemental estimate of $785,437 has been received from the Budget Bureau to cover the latest figures submitted by the Navy Department touching longevity pay as applied to the enlisted personnel, which lessens just that much the disparity between the bill as agreed to in conference and the Budget estimates.

For pay of civil employees in the field, the figure agreed upon is $76,100 instead of $406,501.69, as proposed by the Senate, the additional sum being intended for additional pay for draftsmen only, and will be subject, of course, in its application to the provisions of the Welch bill, if that bill shall become law.

As finally approved by the conferees the bill carries, including the items brought back for disposition by the House, $362,145,812. This sum is $2,727,575 more than the House bill and $1,591,205.69 less than the bill carried as it passed the Senate.

If the House concurs in the action I shall propose on the amendments brought back, the bill will exceed the Budget estimates, including the supplemental estimates for pay to which I have referred, by $880,905.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Did the Senate reduce any of the items that were agreed upon in the House?

Mr. FRENCH. No items were reduced by the Senate.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Then the bill carries the two hundred and odd thousand dollars that was added by the House for a boathouse at Annapolis?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes.

Mr. McCLINTIC. How many more men does this bill take care of in the way of enlisted personnel?

Mr. FRENCH. Seven hundred and fifty more men, instead of 2,750 men as provided by the Senate.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I understood the gentleman to say that the bill, if we agree to the Senate amendments, will be $800,000 above the Budget estimates?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes; $880,905.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. How much above the bill as it left the House?

Mr. FRENCH. Two million seven hundred and twenty-seven thousand five hundred and seventy-five dollars.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. So the House bill was under the Budget estimates while the completed bill, if it is agreed to now, will be over the Budget estimates?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes. The House bill was more than $1,000,000 under the Budget estimates and nearly $2,000,000 under the estimate which includes the supplemental estimate that came in a few days ago.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The House bill was a well-balanced bill?

Mr. FRENCH. We thought so; but when two are negotiating it takes two to come to an agreement.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Apparently.

Mr. BLACK of New York. Will the gentleman yield me some time?

Mr. FRENCH. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. BLACK of New York. About three minutes.

Mr. FRENCH. I will be glad to yield the gentleman three minutes.

Mr. BLACK of New York. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, at the outset of this session we were led to believe that the administration had in mind making some substantial increase in the Navy. The Navy Department reported through the President to the House that we required a program of 71 new ships. The Naval Affairs Committee through its chairman originally presented a bill for the 71 new ships. Under the spur of the pacifists the Naval Affairs Committee forgot the President, forgot the administration, forgot the country, ran away from the 71-ship bill, and came in with the 15-cruiser bill. The 15-cruiser bill is now languishing some place in the Capitol. Nobody really expects that we will have the 15 new cruisers. The Naval Affairs Committee reported as a reason for not authorizing new submarines and destroyer leaders that already we had authority under the 1916 act to build new submarines and to build destroyer leaders. There are yet to be built under the 1916 authorization three submarines, and I had hoped that the other body would respond to the desires of the country that we increase our Navy, particularly in respect of submarines. We now have before us the conference report on the naval appropriation bill, which indicates that the other body has been as lax as we were in the building of submarines.

I am making this little talk to urge the Committee on Appropriations when they bring in the deficiency bill to bring in an appropriation which will enable us to start the construction of three submarines. If they do not do that, on this naval question the Republican Party and this administration is exactly 100 per cent bunk from the beginning of the session to the end of the session. [Applause.]

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. McCLINTIC].

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Speaker, I have before me an article and I ask permission to extend my remarks by inserting it in the RECORD at this point.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. What is it?

Mr. McCLINTIC. It is entitled "Sees United States as bar to world peace," and was published in the Washington Star.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks by printing the article referred to. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The article referred to follows:

SEES UNITED STATES AS BAR TO WORLD PEACE—NICHOLAS MURRAY BUTLER HOLDS GOVERNMENT CHIEF OBSTACLE TO INTERNATIONAL AMITY

The Government of the United States "for some time has been the chief obstacle to the advancing cause of international peace," Nicholas Murray Butler, president of Columbia University and of the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace, told the annual meeting of the endowment trustees here yesterday.

Crediting the State Department with enormous progress in line with the overwhelming sentiment of the people, he said: "Our public officials, and particularly our Senators, are greatly in love with formulas, declarations, and rhetorical flourishes; but when they come to close quarters with practical action they are so concerned with exceptions, reservations, and provisos that their nominally good intentions disappear in the smoke of unreality."

"We should bring an end," he continued, "to the preposterous agitation that has existed, both here and in Great Britain, for increased naval armaments, by leading the way in a revision of the laws of neutrality as these affect sea-borne commerce. The only possible excuse left for a huge naval expenditure is that of protecting a nation's commerce in time of war. It is no longer a difficult matter to protect this commerce by law. All the militaristic naval gentlemen and all the representatives of the big armament makers are, of course, violently opposed to this humane proposal, but despite their outcries public opinion is about ready to demand it.

"A syndicated article has been going about through the press indicating that our Government shall enter into no agreements of any kind, but shall retain complete 'freedom of action and command the world's respect with flying machines, submarines, fast cruisers, and a mercantile fleet bigger and better than any other.' This is the pestiferous barbarism of a bygone age and should have no place in the thinking or the conduct of the American people.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, the article I have here relates to a statement made by Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler, president of Columbia University. I think it is apropos of the present situation with respect to world peace, and I am very glad to have it printed in the RECORD after the speech made by the gentleman from New York, as it presents to a certain extent the other side from his views on naval armament.

I have but little patience with that type of citizen who tries to carry water on both shoulders by advocating the cancellation of a debt owed by a foreign nation amounting to billions of dollars, and at the same time advocating a military policy that would bring about an expenditure of several hundred million dollars. In other words, such a policy penalizes the taxpayers both going and coming, and in addition would allow the foreign country benefited just this much more increased credit which could be utilized as an asset to start another war. If some candidate for the Presidency wants to strike a note in the coming campaign that will ring true to the taxpayers, let him follow the steps of President Andrew Jackson and adopt a slogan, "Make every foreign nation settle in some manner or issue no more calling cards."

It is to be regretted that we have a class of citizens whose chief aim in life seems to be the spreading of propaganda for the purpose of popularizing war and war activities. A few days ago, out by the Washington Monument, I saw a great crowd of Washington people witnessing the maneuvering of troops and the operating of machine-guns as an advertised attraction of one of the branches of our Government. Nearly every week some of the news reels show either tanks in action, Coast Guard guns, dirigible and aircraft maneuvers, military drills, destroyer squadrons, and steaming battleships, thus leaving the impression with the representatives of every foreign country and our citizens that our Nation is silently preparing for war.

How much better it would be if our leaders would exert the same kind of energy in preparing for peace! Statistics show that very few of those who handle the propaganda and the war preparations ever actually participate in a conflict, yet they have no humane reserve thoughts in the interest of the mangled corpses that eventually make the sacrifices. War is the most terrible monster that ever ran rampant over any land, and I want to say to you that in the next war, the new inventions relating to death-dealing devices will be so dreadful as to stagger the minds of humanity. There will be death rays which man will operate from high, protected zones which will cause the destruction of life at great distances; liquid fire will be poured out of the clouds by planes and dirigibles and in exploding shells; smoke bombs will completely cover up areas that are desired to be destroyed; noiseless motors will enable machinery to creep up unexpectedly, and bring about a terrific toll of life; poison gas will be unloaded on the windward side of cities, thereby striking terror to the hearts of inhabitants; lightning-projecting machines will flash death and destruction over great distances; radio generated and propelled bombs will be cast back and forth through the elements like sky-rockets, and fuelless ships will travel inestimable distances in the taking of human life.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 45: On page 31, after line 13, insert "Engineering experiment station, Annapolis, Md.: Replacement of boiler house, boiler and auxiliaries, $157,000."

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 46: Page 33, after line 14, insert "Naval fuel depot, Melville, R. I.: Replacement of boiler plant, $65,000."

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur with an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. FRENCH moves to recede and concur in amendment No. 46, with an amendment: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "Naval fuel depot, Melville, R. I.: Toward replacement of boiler plant (limit of cost, $150,000), $65,000."

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, I now yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNELL] for a question.

Mr. O'CONNELL. I want to ask the chairman of the committee if it is the understanding that the civilian personnel are expected to receive their increases under the Welch bill? This is what the gentleman has stated. I am very greatly interested in this matter. In the event that the Welch bill fails to pass, are they to be out of luck, or will they receive consideration?

Mr. FRENCH. I will say to the gentleman we carried rather substantial increases in the bill for the increase of civilian employees but not to the extent that would be recognized, in all probability, by the Welch bill. We felt, however, that with the Welch bill under consideration at this time and having passed the House we ought not to attempt to deal with the personnel question in conference. Rather we prefer that the question be handled by the two Houses on the basis of a bill that is being considered for personnel in all departments.

Mr. O'CONNELL. I am fearful that in the event that the Welch bill should fail to pass, which would be not only unfair but deplorable, the civilian personnel would not be considered in any way at all. I am very much interested, I will say to my friend, that this class of our public servants be adequately provided for. I am for any bill that will give this class better consideration.

Mr. FRENCH. Of course, the civilian personnel, if the Welch bill should not pass, would be on the same footing as the civilian personnel of all the other departments of the Government.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. If the gentleman will permit, we could resist adjournment until something is done for these employees.

Mr. O'CONNELL. I am for that.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. All right, we will join hands on that.

Mr. KINDRED. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes.

Mr. KINDRED. Does the gentleman think that the increases provided for in the Welch bill would adequately cover this class of employees to the extent that the gentleman's bill would cover them?

Mr. FRENCH. I think that the provisions of the Welch bill, if that bill should become the law, would probably go beyond the provisions that were in disagreement between the two Houses on the Navy bill.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Idaho to recede and concur with an amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 50: Page 35, line 11, strike out "$15,865,000" and insert "$16,500,000, including not to exceed $635,000 for the Naval Reserve."

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman from Idaho yield there?

Mr. FRENCH. I shall be pleased to yield.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. This bill does not contemplate anything that was in mind or provided for in the so-called shipping bill passed the other day?

Mr. FRENCH. No; this item refers to 22 planes for the reserves that had been estimated for by the Budget, but were omitted from the bill as we reported it to the House.

First of all, we omitted the item because the House did not have authorization as we felt to consider the proposition. In the second place, we omitted the item because we felt that through administration within the department planes that might be necessary for the reserve could be detailed from the regular service.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. It is limited to planes?

Mr. FRENCH. To planes alone.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I call attention to the fact that the Senate struck out the planes in the shipping bill.

Mr. NEWTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENCH. I will.

Mr. NEWTON. Will the Naval Reserve planes be available for the Naval Reserve Militia?

Mr. FRENCH. The Naval Militia may be included as a part of the reserve under the law passed some two years ago.

Mr. NEWTON. That would give them the right to make use of the naval planes within the jurisdiction?

Mr. FRENCH. I so understand.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Idaho to concur with an amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 52: Page 36, line 11, strike out the sum "$31,315,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$32,072,200."

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, I move to concur in Senate amendment 52 with an amendment, as follows.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. FRENCH moves to recede and concur in Senate amendment 52 with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by Senate amendment insert "$31,956,000."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Idaho to recede and concur with the amendment just reported.

The motion was agreed to.

UNAUTHORIZED INTRODUCTION OF A BILL

Mr. UPDIKE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to address the House for one minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. UPDIKE. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, some one introduced the bill H. R. 13597 under my name while I was away on May 7. It is a bill to prohibit the making of photographs, sketches, or maps of vital military and naval defensive installations and equipment, and for other purposes. I had nothing to do with the introduction of this bill and did not authorize my name to be put to the bill, and I ask unanimous consent to withdraw it.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The gentleman has not the original bill and does not know what condition it was introduced under and has not ascertained how it happened that such a bill could be introduced without authorization?

Mr. UPDIKE. I have not been able to ascertain by whom it was introduced and referred to the Military Affairs Committee. I have not been able to ascertain who introduced it or attached my name to it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to withdraw the bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to address the House for one minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. UPDIKE] has just brought to the attention of the House an incident which I never heard of before, but which it occurs to me requires some investigation by somebody. The gentleman stated that while he was out of the city a bill was introduced in his name, without his authority, and without his knowledge. That is a situation that is likely to present very great embarrassment. Any repetition of it certainly should be prevented. I have no suggestion to make on the spur of the moment as to just how it should be investigated, but it is something that goes to the integrity of the proceedings of the House in a most vital way.

Mr. TILSON. Does not the gentleman think it would be better to wait until the Clerk looks up the facts? I think we should be able to discover very soon all the facts in connection with the case.

Mr. SNELL. Is not this similar to the situation that arose in the Naval Committee at this session, where they had several bills from the department that were distributed around in the name of different Members by the clerk of the committee?

Mr. CRAMTON. And without the authority of the persons whose names were written on the bills?

Mr. SNELL. Yes; that came up earlier in the session.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. It certainly is a practice that should be frowned upon and stopped.

Mr. SNELL. I agree with the gentleman that it ought not to be done. As far as the House is concerned, I think it should be understood that it is not to be tolerated.

Mr. TILSON. Let us first find the facts and circumstances surrounding the case.

Mr. LOZIER. Mr. Speaker, apropos of the remarks of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT], I call attention to the fact that a similar thing happened with reference to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MCCLINTIC], who brought it to the attention of the House. Some one introduced a bill in his name with which he had no connection and of which he had no knowledge. It is a practice that ought to be severely condemned.

LOCAL LABOR PREFERENCES ON UNITED STATES PUBLIC WORKS

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by inserting two letters, one from the Secretary of the Treasury, and one from the Bureau of the Budget in reference to a bill, H. R. 11141, introduced by the gentleman from New York [Mr. BACON]. I do this because those interested in the legislation would like to see the letters and hope that consideration of the letters may help to develop the situation as to this legislation in a practical way.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRAMTON. The letters are as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, April 27, 1928.

Hon. LOUIS C. CRAMTON,
House of Representatives, United States.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: I have your letter of April 20, 1928, addressed to Mr. Wetmore, asking an expression of views in regard to bill H. R. 11141 which has been favorably reported to the House by the Committee on Labor. This bill requires contractors and subcontractors engaged on public works of the United States to give certain preferences in the employment of labor, the main object being that under contracts for Federal construction work preference shall be given to local labor.

In this bill for local labor exclusively, apparently the fact is overlooked that Federal construction is carried on with Federal funds contributed by citizens from all States and not from local funds; therefore, labor from a particular city or State in which construction is undertaken has no inherent claim for preference.

However, as a matter of fact a contractor, everything else being equal, prefers local labor as he thus saves not only travel expense but in some cases board. This, of course, applies only to laborers and mechanics generally, and there should be differentiation between large and small contracts.

In small jobs and specialized jobs, such as painting, installation of boiler, installation of lighting fixtures, etc., it is customary for a contractor to have the work performed by two or three men constantly employed by him, and to require him to dispense with such men specially trained and employ local men might make it impossible to perform the work satisfactorily, and at the best greatly increase the cost of the work to himself and consequently to the Government.

In large construction work, for instance a $500,000 Federal building, the contractor of necessity would have to rely on a superintendent and a limited number of foremen or mechanics who have had experience with him and with his method of procedure, and require him to dispense with such men and to employ local untrained men would be exceedingly disadvantageous. Furthermore, while unskilled labor is usually abundant, skilled labor, for instance as is required for elevator installation, the setting of marble, laying of terrazzo, acoustical treatment, and similar specialized work, is scarce and the local market does not often supply mechanics skilled in these trades.

It is also foreseen that in the attempt to comply with the provisions of the bill there would be constant disagreement as to what constitutes competency. The bill says "men who are available or qualified to perform the work." Usually the least qualified are the loudest to proclaim their competency, and if the contractor refuses to employ a man whom he considers incompetent or after employment discharges such a man, the construction engineer in charge would become involved in the controversy and a decision by the construction engineer involves the Government. If under these circumstances unsatisfactory work is performed the contractor would not be slow in disclaiming responsibility. At best a heavy additional burden would be placed on the construction engineer and the administrative work of the office, as well as the cost of construction would be increased.

It is believed that the passage of this bill will work to the disadvantage of the Government.

Very truly yours,

A. W. MELLON,
Secretary of the Treasury.

BUREAU OF THE BUDGET,
Washington, May 2, 1928.

Hon. LOUIS C. CRAMTON,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. CRAMTON: On April 19 you wrote me with regard to H. R. 11141, a bill to require contractors and subcontractors engaged on public works of the United States to give certain preferences in the employment of labor, and stating that you would be glad to have an expression of views with regard to this proposed legislation.

I referred this matter to the Interdepartmental Board of Contracts and Adjustments, having in mind not only their views with regard to this proposed legislation but also to what extent it might operate as an amendment of the proposed new public contract law in the bill H. R. 5767, introduced by you.

I am sending you herewith a copy of the minutes of the meeting of the Interdepartmental Board of Contracts and Adjustments of April 27, 1928, which gives the views reached by that board on the legislation proposed in H. R. 11141.

The board has also advised me that the legislation proposed in this bill would necessitate an amendment or deletion of section 14 of bill H. R. 5767, which section deals with "hours of labor."

Sincerely yours,

H. M. LORD, Director.

REVIEW OF PROCEEDINGS OF THE THREE HUNDRED AND THIRTY-FIFTH MEETING OF THE INTERDEPARTMENTAL BOARD OF CONTRACTS AND ADJUSTMENTS, APRIL 27, 1928

The meeting convened at 10.30 a. m., in room 369, Treasury Building, with Mr. Carr as acting chairman and representatives of the following departments and establishments present:

Treasury, War, Navy, Agriculture, Interior, Commerce, Panama Canal, Federal Power Commission, office of Public Buildings and Public Parks, and office of the Chief Coordinator.

Major Cushing suggested for consideration H. R. 11141, being a bill to require contractors and subcontractors engaged on public works of the United States to give certain preferences in the employment of labor. This bill was read and also the report of the Committee on Labor, which unanimously recommended its adoption (Rept. No. 1140). Briefly summarized, this bill, which is an amendment to the eight hour law, would require that every Government contract involving the employment of laborers or mechanics shall contain a provision that in the employment of such laborers and mechanics by any contractor or subcontractor preference shall be given in the following order:

"(1) To citizens of the United States and of the State, Territory, or District in which the work is to be performed who have been honorably discharged from the military or naval forces of the United States, and who are available and qualified to perform the work to which the employment relates.

"(2) To citizens of the United States who are bona fide residents of the State, Territory, or District in which the work is to be performed and who are available and qualified to perform the work to which the employment relates.

"(3) To citizens of the United States.

"(4) To aliens.

"(c) That the contractor or subcontractor shall, by advertisement and through employment agencies, give effect to the preferences under paragraphs (1) and (2) of this section before employing any person under paragraphs (3) and (4) of this section."

The bill also requires the contractor or subcontractor to keep a list of the names of the laborers and mechanics employed upon such work, setting forth their citizenship and place of residence, to be available for examination by any officer or employee of the United States and provides a penalty of $5 for each laborer or mechanic for every calendar day in which he shall be required or permitted to labor upon such work in violation of the foregoing provisions.

Mr. George O. Von Nerta was present at the meeting and submitted the following views of the office of the Supervising Architect, upon this proposed legislation:

"This bill requires contractors and subcontractors engaged on public works of the United States to give certain preferences in the employment of labor, the main object being that under contracts for Federal construction work preference shall be given to local labor.

"In this bill for local labor exclusively, apparently the fact is overlooked that Federal construction is carried on with Federal funds contributed by citizens from all States and not from local funds; therefore, labor from a particular city or State in which construction is undertaken has no inherent claim for preference.

"However, as a matter of fact, a contractor—everything else being equal—prefers local labor, as he thus saves not only travel expense but in some cases board. This, of course, applies only to laborers and mechanics generally, and there should be differentiation between large and small contracts.

"In small jobs and specialized jobs, such as painting, installation of boiler, installation of lighting fixtures, etc., it is customary for a contractor to have the work performed by two or three men constantly employed by him, and to require him to dispense with such men especially trained and employ local men might make it impossible to perform the work satisfactorily and at the best greatly increase the cost of the work to himself and consequently to the Government.

"In large construction work—for instance, a $500,000 Federal building—the contractor of necessity would have to rely on a superintendent and a limited number of foremen or mechanics who have had experience with him and with his method of procedure, and to require him to dispense with such men and to employ local untrained men would be exceedingly disadvantageous. Furthermore, while unskilled labor is usually abundant, skilled labor—for instance, as is required for elevator installation, the setting of marble, laying of terrazzo, acoustical treatment, and similar specialized work—is scarce, and the local market does not often supply mechanics skilled in these trades.

"It is also foreseen that in the attempt to comply with the provisions of the bill there would be constant disagreement as to what constitutes competency. The bill says 'men who are available or qualified to perform the work'; usually the least qualified are the loudest to proclaim their competency, and if the contractor refuses to employ a man whom he considers incompetent or after employment discharges such a man, the construction engineer in charge would become involved in the controversy, and a decision by the construction engineer involves the Government. If, under these circumstances, unsatisfactory work is performed, the contractor would not be slow in disclaiming responsibility. At best a heavy additional burden would be placed on the construction engineer, and the administrative work of the office as well as the cost of construction would be increased.

"It is believed that the passage of this bill will work to the disadvantage of the Government."

A general discussion ensued. Major Call suggested the possibility of local laborers and mechanics greatly increasing their price without competition from the outside.

Captain Montgomery asked how the provisions of the bill could be administered in the construction of a bridge across a river boundary between two States or construction such as the contemplated Boulder Dam project.

A number of the members believed that disputes would constantly arise between the contractor and the Government representative as to whether a local man was qualified properly to perform their work, and that many contractors who had skillful mechanics constantly in their employ would refuse to bid upon Government work if they knew that they might be compelled to accept local mechanics concerning whose ability and integrity they had no information.

It was also suggested that the contractor might be involved in labor disputes and strikes if he were compelled to take on local men not affiliated with labor unions.

Doctor Snoddy suggested that the bill would not be so objectionable if a proviso were inserted that would not require the employment of local men except at a reasonable price and also a proviso that would permit outside contractors to bring in skilled mechanics regularly in their employ.

At the conclusion of the discussion the board voted to indorse the views of the Office of the Supervising Architect and go on record in opposition to the bill in its present form.

MEMORIAL ADDRESS

Mr. LOZIER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by publishing a memorial address delivered by me at Higginsville, Mo., June 5, 1927.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. LOZIER. Mr. Speaker, under unanimous consent given to extend my remarks, I desire to print the following:

Those who followed the fortunes of the Confederacy are accustomed to observe June 3 as Memorial Day, on which they pay loving tribute to the valiant men, living and dead, who fought, suffered, and sacrificed for the Southland, its beloved traditions, and its rights under the Federal Constitution. This date was selected because it was the birthday of Jefferson Davis, President of the Confederate States of America. It has become a custom at the Confederate Home of Missouri to observe the Sunday following June 3 as Memorial Day in order that larger numbers may attend and participate in these ceremonies.

The four men who probably exerted the greatest influence in the Civil War period were Jefferson Davis, Robert E. Lee, Abraham Lincoln, and William Lloyd Garrison. These colossal characters, two of the South and two of the North, were all cast in heroic molds and all born within a span of three years; Garrison, December 10, 1805; Lee, January 19, 1807; Davis, June 3, 1808; and Lincoln, February 12, 1809. These and other outstanding leaders in the War between the States have crossed over the great divide into the silent land where their disagreements have been composed and where, I am persuaded, each now concedes and honors the sincerity, patriotism, and courage of the others. If the souls of these dauntless heroes meet and hold friendly converse in the sunlit regions beyond the tomb, as the shades of Æneas and Dido met and talked in the somber realms of the departed, should not we who still linger behind forget our animosities, bury our hatreds, curb our passions, and joyfully strike friendly hands over the bloody chasm that divided our people in that dark period of our Nation's history?

And while we are assembled to pay a deserved tribute to the heroes of the South whose sacred ashes sleep beneath the pines, willows, and magnolias, I would not knowingly speak one word that would offend the sensibilities of those who espoused the northern cause and battled bravely to preserve the Union. On the contrary, I would honor those who wore the blue, as I honor those who wore the gray. They were brethren, divided by bloody war but reunited when peace brought her healing balm to a stricken Nation. There is honor enough for both sides, and to the soldiers of the North and the soldiers of the South a grateful and unified Nation gives unstinted praise and an overflowing measure of imperishable glory.

Since the historic muse began to keep a record of all the dark hand of destiny weaves, few events have exerted a more far-reaching influence than the War between the States from 1861 to 1865. From the time the curtain went up on human history, we find in every age innumerable acts of heroism and deeds of daring that justify honest praise and are worthy of our profound respect. But the archives of no other nation register more superb courage, more unselfish devotion to principle, more intrepid adventures, more dauntless resolution, more chivalrous deeds, more lofty patriotism to Nation and States, more sublime sacrifices, more magnanimity in victory, more fortitude in adversity, more dignified and self-respecting submission in defeat, and more honorable and sincere acquiescence in the fortunes of war, than are disclosed by the chronicles of that epoch-marking struggle between the North and the South, known in history as the great Civil War.

Our complex and composite civilization is largely the result of struggles between tribes, nations, and races for supremacy. By military combat have been determined many of the great issues and momentous problems that have mightily influenced the course of human history. Many of our priceless liberties were born, not on downy beds of peace, but on the cold and cruel iron couch of war. Many of our most cherished institutions were made possible by sanguinary conflicts, tempered by human blood and sacrifices, and beaten into shape on the accursed anvil of war.

Our civil and religious liberties are largely the fruitage of bloody battles, fought not only by our forefathers but by heroic men in past ages, of whose struggles, sacrifices, and sufferings we are the chief beneficiaries.

Nevertheless war has scourged mankind mercilessly. For death war prepares a rich feast, and for the devil it supplies an abundant harvest. It makes wounds and scars that peace and time can not entirely efface. It capriciously throws the iron dice of destiny which spell the destruction of one nation and the exaltation of another.

War is facinating only to those who have never come face to face with its desolation; who have never stumbled, shell shocked, bleeding, faint, and half blinded, over barbed-wire entanglements and sweltering fields of tombless dead; who have never heard the clash of sabers, the roar of artillery, or the rattle of musketry; never witnessed brazen-throated cannon vomiting iron indignation and molten death from their bowels of wrath; never viewed once smiling and attractive landscapes, now scourged by the withering breath of war; never gazed on cultivated fields furrowed and laid waste, and lofty hills leveled by high explosives and death-dealing shrapnel; never seen cities, villages, churches, and factories transformed into shambles and slaughterhouses, and never seen crêpe on every door, mourning at every fireside, and the death watch in every home.

When war begins, hell opens her greedy jaws and spews her withering vomit of death over an ill-fated and helpless people. The whirligig of war generates poverty, pestilence, famine, unspeakable misery, unutterable anguish, and a plague of indescribable calamities that mangle and destroy the bodies and blister and burn the conscience and souls of men. No poet can portray, no orator describe, no artist paint the orphans' tears, the lamentations of innumerable hosts, the barbarism, the smoking ruins, the despoiled cathedrals, the desecrated temples, the crumbling walls, the feast of vultures, the dance of death, and the waste of life that inevitably follow in the wake of war. Wars are won by iron and gold, by the mangling of human bodies, and the sacrifice of human lives, and obviously military victories have always been purchased at a staggering cost of blood and treasure.

While at best war is ghastly, inhuman, hideous, and always to be deplored, nevertheless many wars were fought to establish a just cause, to resist aggression, for the betterment of mankind, for the improvement of social, civic, and economic conditions, and for the protection or advancement of civilization; and in such cases the prosecution of war was amply justified. If the sword is drawn in a righteous cause, "sweet is the smell of gunpowder." By war men have broken the power of tyrants, freed themselves from unbearable oppression, successfully resisted invasion, and won the priceless boon of self-government. By wars peoples have, little by little, struggled up from serfdom to citizenship; from the miry clay of despotism into the sunlight of liberty, equality, and fraternity. By wars nations have escaped exploitation, misrule, and times without number stayed the ruthless march of conquerors.

By revolutionary wars inefficient and oppressive governments have been overturned and the blessings of civil and religious liberty secured for a progressive, forward-looking people. By some wars the path of progress has been opened, honorable and lasting peace secured, stable governments established, civic order and social justice insured, and the civilization of the world tremendously advanced. By wars self-governing republics have sprung up on the ruins of autocracies and unspeakable despotisms. By wars society is often purged of vicious forces that threaten the public welfare. By wars inferior civilizations have been supplanted by superior civilizations.

By wars shackles have been stricken from the ankles of untold millions, loads lifted from backs that were breaking under an unbearable burden of oppression; and following the smoke, carnage, miasma, gall, and wormwood of battle men were permitted to breathe the air of freedom and enjoy the sunshine and blessings of just governments.

I do not want to be understood as advocating or justifying war as a means by which international disputes shall be settled. On the contrary, I abhor war and implore a benign providence that conditions may never again require our beloved land to unsheathe the sword or determine its domestic or international controversies by the gage of battle. I believe henceforth it will not be difficult to compose our international disagreements by diplomacy and arbitration, without in the least impairing our vital interests or sacrificing our national dignity.

I do not want to be understood as saying that all wars in the past have been unrighteous, but many have been prosecuted for causes that were just, and many of these wars have contributed materially to the progress of the world and the stabilization of society, notwithstanding the tremendous woe and wastage which are the inevitable incidents of military operations.

May I cite a few incidents in which wars have done much to promote worthy ends, stabilize governmental institutions, and in other ways advance civilization? In numerous decisive battles the free democracies of Greece beat back the tide of oriental despotism, thereby determining for all time that the dominant civilization of the world for centuries should be European, not Asiatic.

Issuing forth from their almost impenetrable forests, the ancient Germans under Arminius met the well-trained Roman legions commanded by Varus, defeated them in battle, arrested the hitherto resistless advance of the Cæsars, and laid the foundation for the modern European States, thereby definitely determining that Teutonic, Frank, and Saxon institutions, and not Roman policies and ideals, should ultimately dominate medieval and modern Europe.

By military operations, as much as by diplomacy, tact, and intrigue, the turbulent vassals, warring factions, and rival provinces of France were united into a cohesive nation.

The unity and stability of the English people were largely promoted by the intestine conflicts culminating in the struggle between the rival Houses of York and Lancaster, known in history as the War of the Roses, which for 30 years desolated England, sacrificed 80 princes of the blood and a large proportion of the ancient nobility, but on the accession of the Earl of Richmond under the title of Henry VII, England emerged from this fratricidal struggle into an era of civility, science, culture, and racial solidarity purged and chastened, but with stable institutions and a united, homogeneous, progressive, and forward-looking people.

The German states, occupying the heart of Europe, for centuries the seat of culture and the patrons of art, science, literature, and philosophy, were kept apart by mutual jealousies, and because her 300 petty dynasties were not welded into a great State for 500 years they did not exert the power and influence to which their numbers, resources, genius, and accomplishments entitled them. But under the master hand of Bismarck, and following devastating provincial wars, the North German Confederation came into being, at the head of which was the progressive Kingdom of Prussia; and later, out of the womb of the Franco-Prussian War, came forth the German Empire, strong and stalwart from its birth, as Minerva sprang full grown and full armed from the brain of Jupiter.

By the fortunes of war the Italian states, divided and distracted for centuries, suffering economic and political vassalage, crushed and helpless beneath the despotism of an alien race, were freed from the yoke of Austria, thereby making possible the unification of the Italian people and the merging of the rival provinces into the stable Kingdom of Italy.

For causes as holy as any that ever moved men to action, our forefathers initiated and carried to a successful conclusion the Revolutionary War, by which the American colonists became a free and independent people, after sacrifices unexcelled in the annals of time. As a result of this epoch-marking, history-making conflict, our Federal Union was established and entered upon a career of unrivaled growth and development, as the first successful experiment by a great people in self-government. From a feeble, struggling confederation it rapidly grew to a great Republic whose present and potential power and matchless accomplishments amazed mankind. Our flag was soon carried from the Mississippi to the Pacific. The far-flung region from the Canadian plains to the Rio Grande River was added to our public domain. Within the boundaries of our Nation was found and prudently developed a wealth of natural resources, so vast as to stagger human comprehension. Ours was a rapidly growing, prosperous, and progressive nation, expanding by leaps and bounds in every department of human activity. Our agricultural, industrial, commercial, and financial progress was phenomenal.

But destiny did not ordain that this Republic should escape the scourge of war that has afflicted every other great nation since the beginning of time. The sails on our ship of state that were spread for peace and heaven were to be filled with winds of war and blasts from hell.

The activities of the American people were so diversified and their interests so conflicting that disagreement on economic problems and legislative policies were inevitable. This resulted in a division of the population into opposing sectional groups, each advocating the policies that would best promote the welfare of their particular section and often opposing vehemently the policies that were advantageous to rival sections. Self-interest became the yardstick by which economic policies were measured. The legislation helpful to those engaged in one occupation was frequently detrimental to other vocational groups. The rapid and intensive development of our agricultural, industrial, and commercial resources accentuated this conflict of interests and intensified rivalries between the classes for economic supremacy. The industrial, financial, and commercial classes became each year more active and demanded more and more class legislation and greater and greater special privileges. Party spirit was militant and party lines tightly drawn. Political action was largely influenced by partisan passions. Powers reserved to the States and the people were being rapidly centralized in and exercised by the Federal Government. Sectional and political lines were drawn on practically every revenue measure and governmental favoritism for certain vocational groups supplied material for never-ending disagreement and acrimonious disputation.

But all of these differences, grave and acute as they were, could, and no doubt would, have been composed, ironed out, and compromised. In these issues was no germ for war or dissolution of the Union. These and similar problems would have admitted of deliberate discussion and sane treatment, and would no doubt have been settled at the ballot box.

The great bones of contention were the slavery question and the right of States to withdraw from the Union. Like Banquo's ghost, these issues would not down. They could not be settled by an appeal to reason. The ordinary methods of adjusting political controversies were ineffective when used in an effort to settle these perplexing questions.

The institution of African slaves had flourished so long in the United States, and was so deep rooted, so closely interwoven in our national fabric, and so intimately related to our social and economic life that it would not yield to ordinary or even extraordinary legislative treatment. It was not only a moral, humanitarian, and social issue, but an economic issue as well. The southern people depended largely on slave labor for the production of their staple commodities, cotton and sugar, and believed the abolition of slavery would reduce the South to a condition of economic impotence. Slavery was essentially a sectional issue, and its treatment and solution involved sectional rivalries and sectional hatreds. The South was agricultural and had many slaves. The North was commercial and industrial and had no slaves. Slave labor in the North was not profitable, while it was a source of great wealth and profit to the southern people. At the time of the adoption of our Federal Constitution, and for a long time thereafter, there was a strong sentiment in the South in opposition to slavery, and the great southern leaders like Jefferson, Madison, and Patrick Henry, considered slavery an evil, and inconsistent with the spirit of our free institutions, and looked to its gradual extinction. But the invention of the cotton gin by Eli Whitney tremendously increased the demand for and consumption of cotton and stimulated its production which led to an increased demand for slave labor and helped to change the attitude of the southern people toward this institution. While the South was at first indifferent toward slavery, the New England shipowners were carrying on an extensive and exceedingly profitable trade in slaves, seizing helpless negroes in Africa, bringing them to the United States, and selling them to southern planters.

Some of the Southern States abolished the slave trade with Africa before the enactment of any Federal legislation on the subject. But many of the New England States engaged in the slave traffic until Congress enacted laws prohibiting the importation of slaves. Indeed many Northern shipowners continued clandestinely to import slaves from Africa, even after Congress, in 1820, passed a law declaring the slave traffic an act of piracy and a capital offense, although no conviction was had under that act until November, 1861, when Nathaniel Gorden, master of a vessel called the Eric, was convicted in New York and executed. After selling thousands of slaves to the southern planters, when the business became extremely hazardous, these New England reformers had a spasm of virtue and instituted a nation-wide campaign to free the slaves they had sold to the South and to destroy an institution they had, in part at least, been instrumental in building up to gigantic proportions.

But back of the slavery question and overshadowing it were some acute controversies that threatened our national peace and could not be easily compromised, among which I mention:

First. The deep-seated antagonism between the Puritan and the Cavalier;

Second. The struggle between the manufacturing and agricultural interests;

Third. Sectional rivalry;

Fourth. State sovereignty and the rapid encroachment by the Federal Government on the powers of the States and divergent views as to the relationship of the States to the General Government under the Federal Constitution, as to whether our Government is a compact or confederation of sovereign States, which any State may terminate at will, or an amalgamation or consolidation of the people of the several States into a "hard and fast" national unit with practically unlimited Federal power and from which no State can withdraw.

These theories of Government had been a constant source of controversy and irritation from the beginning of our national life. Seemingly they could not be settled by discussion or in the arena of reason. Without these other controversies, the slavery question might have been adjusted by the application of reason and common sense.

In the last analysis, the immediate and underlying cause of the Civil War was not slavery, but the doctrine of secession—that is, the right claimed by the Southern States to withdraw from the Union and be no longer subject to the Federal Government. This had long been the contention of the Southern statesmen, chief of whom was John C. Calhoun, who was probably the greatest logician and most profound statesman America ever produced. But until the slavery question became acute, the doctrine of secession was largely an academic question. Slavery was the acute issue that brought to the forefront the alleged right of a State to withdraw from the Federal compact. Without the slavery dispute, it is not probable that the Southern States would have ever gone so far on the doctrine of secession, and this question would probably have continued to be debated as a theoretical proposition by many, but its application and exercise not attempted.

Conservative leaders in both the North and South labored to find a formula by which slavery could be abolished gradually and by compensating the owners for the reasonable property value of their slaves. I am not convinced that the masses either in the North or South wanted war. I believe that a majority of the people in both sections wanted peace and ardently hoped some method might be found by which the problem could be solved satisfactorily to each section and without recourse to arms. Many influential men in the North were not willing to fight to destroy slavery, but they were willing to fight to preserve the Union. Irresponsible agitators in the North and South opposed reasonable concessions that would have postponed and probably averted recourse to arms. Passion and prejudice were fanned into a white hot flame. Anger blinded reason on both sides, and the North and South, unable to compose their differences at the ballot box or by legislative formulas, drifted farther and farther apart. The radical element in the North opposed every suggested compromise, and the Southern States, believing that the North intended to confiscate their property and overpower them, steadfastly held to their purpose to secede from the Union of States, go their own way, and work out their own destiny.

In the momentous events leading up to this fratricidal struggle we have a concrete illustration of the adage that there are some questions in the experience of every nation that can not be settled peaceably. History records many incidents where States have earnestly and honestly endeavored to adjust certain controversies by peaceful methods, but failed, and were compelled ultimately to submit these issues to the fortunes of war. Of course, these were problems involving fundamental differences, generally so revolutionary in their character that their solution tremendously influenced the course of future events.

England had her numerous intestine struggles, sanguinary beyond description, over issues that could not be solved by discussion and peaceful methods. In the bloody crucible of war English civilization was purged of many of its vices and weaknesses, a distinct type of citizenship developed and national unity insured. In like manner the unification of Germany, France, Italy, and every other great nation was attained and their national ideals molded in the hot furnace of civil war and tempered by human blood.

There are certain major theories of government that are so fundamentally repugnant and irreconcilably antagonistic to each other that in their practical application they can not be harmonized and in relation to which no permanent compromise is possible. Some governmental policies, like some colors, and like some chemicals and metals, are so essentially refractory and adverse to each other that they will not mix and can not be combined, blended, or amalgamated. Where each of these governmental policies are so hostile to each other that neither will be neutralized nor modified by the other, compromise is impossible, and sooner or later the opposing theories must resort to force to determine which policy shall survive.

Such conditions prevailed in the United States in 1861. The American people were divided into two hostile camps on questions that had been the subject of bitter disputation for many years; questions that involved a fundamental difference as to the nature of our Federal Union; questions that affected not only the political but the social, industrial, and economic life of our people.

In the ocean of our national life two mighty currents of civilization met, each seemingly irresistible, each hostile to the other, each sustained by a militant public sentiment, sectional interests, and sectional hatreds so strong that these currents could not be turned back or diverted from their course by peaceable methods.

For a half century the American people had diligently sought a peaceable solution of the slavery issue and the question as to whether or not our Federal Government was a national unit or a compact of sovereign States from which any State might at will withdraw. These questions had been debated from every possible angle, and for decades patriotic efforts were made to compose the radical differences between the North and South on these perplexing problems. These well-intended efforts came to naught because these were questions involving such fundamental and antagonistic conceptions of government and were so vital to the social and economic life of the people that no compromise was possible, and it became quite evident that destiny had decreed that these issues could only be permanently settled by the arbitrament of war and by deluging this fair land with a flood of unutterable woe and indescribable miseries incident to a great civil war.

Many compromises had been attempted, but they only salved over the festering ulcers and did not remove the diseased tissue or sterilize the germ that produced the cancerous sores that threatened our national existence. But, according to Emerson, the sword cut the "Gordian knot in twain which all the wit of the East and West, of northern and border statesmen could not untie."

Civil wars are more desperate and destructive than conflicts between nations and races, because in domestic struggles the opposing forces are more evenly matched in courage, training, strategy, initiative, and all the arts of war. In intestine strife the soldiers in each army have a better understanding and appreciation of the resources, courage, and fighting capacity of those who make up the opposing army.

The southern soldiers well knew in advance that their northern foes were brave men who were determined to preserve the Union and who were not afraid to go against the cold steel and gamble with death on the fields of battle. On the other hand, every Union soldier who got close enough to the battle lines to smell powder, realized from the beginning the temper, courage, pluck, intrepidity, and resourcefulness of the soldiers of the South, and their resolution to strike and spare not, make every possible sacrifice, shed their rich red blood, and die uncomplainingly in the cause of the Confederacy. Neither "the Yank" or "the Johnny Reb" was deficient in courage. Each was a foeman worthy of the steel of the other. Each displayed unfaltering devotion to his convictions and to the cause he believed to be just. Each respected the courage of the other. Those who wore the gray and those who wore the blue were alike inspired by the heroism of their fathers, who suffered together at Valley Forge and fought side by side at Saratoga, Monmouth, Germantown, and Yorktown. No brave man who fought under either flag speaks contemptuously of the courage of those he met in battle. The glory and heroism of either army is not dimmed by conceding similar heroism and glory to the other army. It was not a disgrace for either army to be beaten back or defeated by the other. Those who won and those who lost alike displayed dauntless valor and unexampled fortitude.

Into this epoch-marking struggle the people of the North and South entered with undisguised reluctance and profound regrets. Though fierce passions swept over the souls of men as a majestic tempest scourges the mighty deep, all, on sober second thought, realized that the forces of hell were soon to be loosed, and that the impending blood letting, skull cleaving, brain spattering, windpipe slitting, manslaughtering, death dealing encounter would divide households, estrange lovers, disrupt lifelong friendships, rend asunder a hitherto happy and homogeneous people, enkindle age-lasting hatreds, and perhaps destroy the Republic. All knew that war, at best, was a terrible trade, a frightful thing, even in a righteous cause; and that civil wars are momentous evils and leave the deepest wounds. It is therefore not strange that thoughtful men in the North and South with assiduity labored to harness sectional passions and settle these controversies by pacific methods.

But these belated efforts to avert the disaster of war were unavailing, and at the touch of the slowly moving yet relentless hand of destiny, long sleeping, long sheathed swords sprung from their rusty scabbards, strains of martial music floated over our hills and valleys, tent cities arose, as if by magic, on dotted landscapes but lately tessellated with checkered squares of golden grain and wild flowers of surpassing beauty; men untrained in the arts of war heard the distant drum beat and call to arms, and inspired by invincible heroism, left the plow in the furrow, dropped the axe, laid down the hammer, closed their offices, counting houses, shops, mills, and factories, fondly embraced their pale-faced but dry-eyed wives, kissed the pink cheeks of babes unswept by passion and untouched by sin, serenely sleeping in white-canopied cradles; yes, these stout-hearted men shouldered their rusty muskets, cast a last loving, lingering glance at the scenes of their domestic felicity, and with firm lips from which laughter had departed, they, with stately tread, marched forth to battle for a cause they sincerely believed to be just and righteous.

Conceding the valor and devotion to duty and country of those who wore the blue, we come together to-day for the specific and commendable purpose of paying a sincere tribute to those dauntless souls who wore the gray, and with unfaltering devotion followed the glorious but failing fortunes of the Confederacy.

Who will question the honesty or challenge the sincerity of these men who sacrificed everything and unflinchingly defied their mightiest hereditary enemy—death—in the performance of their duty as they understood it, and in defense of their altars and firesides from what they considered unwarranted aggression? Where in all the ages of the world's history can be found a people who made greater sacrifices for their convictions, or exhibited more spiritual grandeur than those who fought for "the lost cause"? The men of the South were as true to their ideals as the needle of the magnetic pole. They would not sacrifice principle for expediency. They declined to purchase peace and tranquility by a surrender of their traditional attitude on political and economic problems, or by a sacrifice of what they conceived to be their rights under the Federal Constitution.

In this memorable contest the South was in a state of unreadiness, at a disadvantage from the beginning, outclassed as to resources, ill organized, ill-equipped, and fighting against overwhelming numbers. The North had the men; the North had the money and industrial and commercial assets so essential in military conflicts. But in every southern heart there was a fixed resolution to resist aggression. When the bloody, inexorable, unpitying scourge of war swept her destructive, devastating, desolating way through the sunny Southland, those who followed "the Bonnie Blue Flag" wore the rich livery of victory with a dignity and modesty that become brave men, and in the deep and troubled waters of adversity they were sustained by a courage and fortitude akin to that of the ancient Stoics and eminently worthy of emulation.

In all the stormy strife, in all that frightful wilderness of death they felt no pangs of fear, and their stalwart iron frames stood the racking waste of war, famine, and blood like giant oaks, unbending before the savage fury of a mountain tempest.

The issues that culminated in the Civil War were not one-sided. There was much to be said on each side of the question. From a purely legalistic standpoint the South had the better of the argument. By this I mean that the circumstances surrounding the adoption of our Federal Constitution and its construction and application for three-quarters of a century sustained many of the contentions advanced by the South. The institution of slavery was specifically recognized and sanctioned by the Constitution. The agitation in the North was for a change in existing law that would prohibit slavery. So on this question the South was standing by the Constitution and the North seeking to change it. The relation of the several States to the General Government and the constitutional right of a State to withdraw or secede from the Federal Union were not specifically settled by the Constitution and were matters of dispute, in relation to which there was room for honest difference of opinion. It was the contention of the northern statesmen that where the several States ratified the Constitution, they were bound not only by the provisions embodied in the instrument but by all amendments or changes thereafter made, while the southern school of political thought insisted that the States had accepted the Constitution as written and submitted, and that any radical departure from the scheme of government therein set forth which militated against the rights of any State justified such State in recalling its approval and withdrawing from the voluntary Federal compact.

While the doctrine of nullification had its chief strength in the South, the policy did not originate in the slave-holding States, but was incubated in the New England States and was adroitly asserted in the Hartford convention in its 20-day session, between December 15, 1814, and January 5, 1815. This body was composed of 22 representatives appointed by the Legislatures of Massachusetts, Connecticut, Rhode Island, and three representatives from counties in New Hampshire and Vermont. While the resolutions calling this convention stated that its purpose was not repugnant to the Federal Union, the proceedings and resolutions of the convention urged organized opposition to Federal laws. Northern historians have endeavored to justify the good faith and patriotism of the members of this convention, but they were undoubtedly actuated by secret treasonable designs against the United States Government.

Preceding the Civil War there was a rapidly growing sentiment in the North in favor of nullifying the acts of Congress relating to slavery. Wendell Phillips, William Lloyd Garrison, and other active northern leaders urged the repudiation of the Constitution of the United States and borrowing the words of the prophet Isaiah characterized it as "a covenant with death and an agreement with hell." Prior to the election of Mr. Lincoln, practically all of the nullification sentiment was in the North, the South, being satisfied with the Constitution, was its chief defender.

The war between the States is frequently mentioned as the "Great Rebellion." Many thoughtful students of history are convinced that only in a technical sense can this war be designated by the dishonoring title, rebellion. It was essentially a revolution, a revolution that failed, but nevertheless a revolutionary movement, the underlying purpose of which was to arrest the progress and to ultimately destroy another revoluntionary movement within our Government, the object of which was to destroy some important existing constitutional rights and institutions.

Rebellion is an odious term; revolution an honorable title. If a military movement against an organized state or against duly constituted authorities fails, it is dubbed a rebellion, but if it succeeds, it is broadcasted as a revolution. If Washington had failed he would have gone down in history as a great rebel, but as he succeeded, he is proclaimed and honored as a revolutionist, liberator, and patriot. If Simon Bolivar had failed in his struggle to free South America from Spanish despotism, he would have been scornfully alluded to as a pestiferous rebel, and no monuments would have been reared to perpetuate his memory as a revolutionist, liberator, and patriot. If Lee and Jackson and their heroic associates and followers had succeeded in establishing the Confederacy as an independent republic, they would have gone down in history as revolutionists, liberators, and patriots, but as they failed, an uncharitable world labels them as rebels. Victory and defeat determine whether a leader who heads a revolt is a revolutionist or rebel. Many men who consecrated their efforts and sacrificed their fortunes and lives in the cause of human liberty and the betterment of mankind, have been branded as rebels, because, forsooth, they failed; while, if they had succeeded, they would have been given an honorable place in the Pantheon of the immortals. There is only a twilight zone between a rebel and a revolutionist. If a rebel is victorious, he is hailed as a revolutionist. If a revolutionist fails, he is acclaimed a rebel. Thomas Moore, the sweet singer of the Emerald Isle, thus graphically illustrates this thought:

"Rebellion! foul, dishonoring word,
Whose wrongful blight so oft has stain'd
The holiest cause that tongue or sword
Of mortal ever lost or gain'd.
How many a spirit, born to bless,
Hath sunk beneath that withering name,
Whom but a day's, an hour's success
Had wafted to eternal fame?"

Jefferson Davis and Abraham Lincoln, Robert E. Lee and Ulysses S. Grant, Alexander H. Stephens and William Lloyd Garrison—dauntless souls, great in life, sublime in death; champions of two antagonistic theories of government; advocates of policies so fundamentally conflicting as to be utterly irreconcilable; two contending groups in the greatest intestine struggle in the annals of time; an overwhelming majority of each group was sincere, patriotic, and dominated by high ideals and lofty principles; the members of each group loyal to their convictions; all battling for right as they understood it; all devoted to duty as they saw it. There is honor enough for both sides. A reunited country and a pacified and unified people charitably overlook the faults and mistakes of those who led and those who followed in that fratricidal conflict. And having played a conspicuous part in the great drama of the Civil War, these heroic men have earned enduring fame. And with charity to all and malice toward none let us exalt their virtues and lovingly concede to each an honored place among the world's immortals.

WHAT AM I BID?

The SPEAKER. Under special order of the House, the Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER] for 10 minutes. [Applause.]

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I call the attention of the House to an anomalous situation which has arisen in the War Department and in other departments as well with reference to the purchase of supplies. We in this Congress have the sole right to levy taxes to raise moneys, and likewise we have the sole and only right to appropriate the money raised by those taxes. The right to supervise and control the expenditure of money is purely a legislative function, and in all parliamentary systems that function has always been deemed legislative. When we set up a comptroller, that comptroller of necessity is under our control, because he performs in a sense a legislative function.

Comptroller General McCarl in the foreword of his report for the fiscal year of 1927 says as follows:

The Congress learned during the early days of its existence, as the Parliament of England theretofore had learned, that it was necessary to prescribe with more or less particularity the method by which taxes or customs should be collected and the purpose for which appropriated money might be used by officers of the executive branch of the Government. However, investigations into the actual conduct of executive officers in the discharge of the activities which they were charged by law disclosed that the directions in the statutes, prepared with infinite pains and after far-reaching examination and most careful consideration, were not always observed. Albert Gallatin, a member of the early House of Representatives and the fourth Secretary of the Treasury, succeeded in having enacted into law a provision which is now section 3678, Revised Statutes, as follows:

"All sums appropriated for the various branches of expenditure in the public service shall be applied solely to the objects for which they are respectively made, and for no others."

When the Congress has appropriated money for a specific purpose, it can not be admitted under existing law that the moneys appropriated for one purpose may be diverted to some other purpose, excepting by the Congress collectively assembled itself first so authorizing. It is exclusively a legislative right, and if sought to be elsewhere exercised would be legislating by other than the constitutional body and strike at the root of representative government.

What has occurred in the War Department? All of the safeguards that we have been attempting to throw around the purchase of supplies, automobiles, and all other items entering into military affairs have been sought to be whittled away by the actions of the Secretary of War. I call attention particularly to the fact that on November 22, 1927, there was advertised a bid for 124 automobiles to be used by the Army at Camp Holabird in Maryland, 49 touring cars and 75 sedans. They were to be used for ordinary transportation purposes during peace time. A number of automobile manufacturers offered their bids. I will read some of them:

Name of car	Price
	Touring	Sedan
Pontiac	[1]	$761.00
Nash	$742.47	851.80
Dodge	[2] 855.00	[2] 902.50
Chrysler	854.32	970.08
Oakland	912.00	970.00
Studebaker:
Dictator	960.00	990.00
Erskine	720.00	760.00
Buick	995.00	995.00
Willys-Knight	943.13	[3] 969.03
Do	943.13	1,070.44
Durant	577.95	773.55

[1] No bid.
[2] Plus Government tax.
[3] Coach.

Strange to relate, despite the provisions of the Revised Statutes, which should govern the Secretary of War in the purchase of supplies, and despite the fact that the Durant company offered the lowest bid of $577.95 for the touring car, the successful bidder was the Chrysler at $854.34 for the same car, and whereas the Durant people offered the sedan for $773.55, the Chrysler was favored at $970. There was a difference there in the case of a touring car of $276.37 on each car, and in the case of the sedan of $196.53 on each car, a mighty big difference when you have to buy 124 cars.

Army Regulations No. 5–100, dated September 12, 1927, contain general provisions governing the procurement of supplies. Section 20, subdivisions 1 and 2 thereof, is as follows:

20. Purchases, how made: (a) competitive bidding: The basic laws requiring all supplies to be procured as a result of competitive bidding are as follows:

(1) All purchases and contracts for supplies or services, in any of the departments of the Government, except for personal services, shall be made by advertising a sufficient time previously for proposals respecting the same, when the public exigencies do not require the immediate delivery of the articles or performance of the service. When immediate delivery or performance is required by the public exigency, the articles or services required may be procured by open purchase or contract at the places and in the manner in which such articles are usually bought and sold, or such services engaged, between individuals. R. S. 3709 (secs. 733 and 751, Mil. Laws, 1921).

(2) Hereafter, except in cases of emergency or where it is impracticable to secure competition, the purchase of all supplies for the use of the various departments and posts of the Army and of the branches of the Army service shall only be made after advertisement. * * * but every open market emergency purchase made in the manner common among business men which exceeds in amount $200 shall be reported for approval to the Secretary of War under such regulations as he may prescribe. Act of March 2, 1901 (31 Stat. 905).

Section 21, subdivision (a), is as follows:

21. Purchases, where made.—a. Where cheapest: Hereafter, * * * all supplies for the use of the various departments and posts of the Army and of the branches of the Army service * * * shall be purchased where the same can be purchased the cheapest, quality and cost of transportation and the interests of the Government considered. * * * Act June 30, 1902 (32 Stat. 514; sec. 736, Mil. Laws, 1921).

The Secretary of War in jumping over the lower bids of Durant, Pontiac, Nash, and Studebaker gave no heed to these provisions, and particularly that provision of the Revised Statutes which provides that the successful bidder shall be the one who offers the cheapest product, with due consideration of quality, cost of transportation, and the interests of the Government. A controversy has ensued between the Comptroller General and the Secretary of War. The former has refused to approve the payment for these cars. The Comptroller General is correct in his interpretation of section 3709, Revised Statutes, which is the same as section 20, subdivision (a), of Army Regulations 5–100, mentioned before.

The Supreme Court has passed upon this section in the case of United States v. Purcell Envelope Co. (249 U. S. 318, 319). Justice McKenna, delivering the opinion of the court, said:

> * * * There must be a point of time at which discretion is exhausted. The procedure for the advertising for bids for supplies or services to the Government would also be a mockery—a procedure, we may say—that is not permissive but required. (Sec. 309, Rev. Stat.) By it the Government is given the benefit of the competition of the market and each bidder is given the chance for a bargain. It is a provision, therefore, in the interest of both Government and bidder, necessarily giving rights to both and placing obligations on both. And it is not out of place to say that the Government should be animated by a justice as anxious to consider the rights of the bidder as to insist upon its own. * * *

I commend this decision to the Secretary of War.

From what I can gather, despite the rejection of the claim for payment, the Chrysler Co. are going to deliver these cars. I was informed at the office of the Secretary of War that the Chrysler people are going to take their chances and take their case to the Court of Claims. Unfortunately, the comptroller can not represent the Government in such a proceeding before the Court of Claims. The Attorney General represents the Government. One Cabinet officer does not like to go against another. Political blood is thicker than water. The Government side under such circumstances can not be adequately presented nor forcibly presented.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield.

Mr. CELLER. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Were the specifications made so as to fit the Chrysler car?

Mr. CELLER. I am coming to that. As usual in these cases, they considered the mechanical equipment and engineering qualities of the car they want; then they offer their proposals and specifications squarely to meet the car picked in advance, so as to eliminate practically all consideration and bid by any other competitive manufacturer.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I wonder if the War Department has been taking lessons from the sewer department of Queens County, New York City?

Mr. CELLER. Apparently the matter is all underground, and I am trying to bring a little bit of it up to the surface.

The history of the purchase of cars in the War Department is interesting. It has always maintained it knows its military needs best. Let us see.

In a letter of August 26, 1926, addressed by the Secretary of War to the Comptroller General it was said:

> Of the cars upon which bids were received in this particular instance, the Dodge was the only five-passenger car which was considered suitable for the military service; that is, which met the above-cited requirements for military use. This has been proven by the car's performance with the punitive expedition in Mexico and during the World War. The personnel of the Army is trained in Dodge maintenance, operation, and supply. There is some interchangeability, although this is slight, between the older and newer models of cars. From the standpoint of military necessity, the value of the Dodge to the service warrants accepting the bid on the Dodge in this particular instance at a higher price, since the increased military advantages possessed by the Dodge car were of more value to the Government than the increased cost. Furthermore, it is not considered that the initial cost is the sole test in accepting bids. There must be taken into consideration the cost of upkeep as well as the military factors heretofore mentioned. In the instant case the specifications accompanying the proposals were drawn for the purpose of inviting competition. The bill which was most advantageous to the Government and which it was to the interests of the Government to accept was that on the Dodge cars.
> The Dodge bid was accepted because of the fact that the Dodge car does meet the peculiar conditions required and because of the military necessity, as set out herein.

The Quartermaster General of the Army, who is charged by law with making purchases on behalf of the Government, had recommended in letter of June 10, 1925, against the acceptance of Dodge cars in response to a bid and said:

> It is recommended that the bid of Willys-Overland (Inc.), Philadelphia, Pa., for Willys-Knight cars be approved and that restrictions imposed by Circular No. 74, War Department, 1923, which limit the approved type of five-passenger cars to the Dodge car, be waived.

Under date of June 7, 1926, the Quartermaster General of the Army made the following recommendation to The Adjutant General of the Army that a bid of the Chevrolet dealer be accepted for furnishing motor vehicles. The Quartermaster General there stated:

> The report of the engineering section at Camp Holabird indicates that the Chevrolet car is suitable for military service. The Dodge touring car and the Dodge sedan are at present the only standard five-passenger vehicles authorized for purchase by the War Department. From the test made and from the information at hand it is believed that the Chevrolet car is entirely suitable for military service and can be obtained at a material reduction in first cost and subsequent maintenance over the Dodge.

The Adjutant General of the Army approved, in letter dated June 21, 1926, this recommendation, and Chevrolet cars were purchased.

We thus have the War Department either purchasing or recommending the purchase of Dodge cars, Chevrolet cars, and Willys-Knight cars. To add to the confusion, under date of December 15, 1927, the Secretary of War reported to the Comptroller General that he was desirous of purchasing Chrysler cars and stated that said cars were suitable for military use and that it was believed the cost of upkeep, and so forth, made their purchase most advantageous to the Government. The argument that the military service best knows the type of car required for military use finds little support in view of its own recommendations and its own actions. It first concludes that the Dodge car is the only car that will meet the needs of the service. It then concludes that the Willys-Knight is suitable, later that the Chevrolet car is better than the Dodge car, and most recently it has argued that the Chrysler car is superior to them all. The enactment of this measure would merely add to the confusion.

Constant changes and improvements are being made in the different types of motor vehicles and it is impossible in the nature of the case to standardize on any particular type of commercial car.

The various motor vehicle manufacturers and their stockholders have an interest in doing business with the Government. They have a right to stand or fall on such business by the superiority of their product rather than by favoritism of a purchasing officer or predilection of that purchasing officer for some make of car. The American people, through Congress, have an interest in keeping expenditures to the minimum and in preventing favoritism, waste, and extravagance in the expenditure of public funds. The enactment of this bill is directly contrary to all of these things. It is merely another attempt to break down any congressional supervision over expenditures of public money for the purchase of motor vehicles.

I think it is fair for us to ask the question: Why was the one company, the Chrysler Co., favored in the case of 124 cars? The War Department is not alone in this kind of favoritism. I can show you instance after instance of favortism, not only with reference to automobiles, but in the case of purchase of supplies in many other bureaus. The whole business is rampant throughout the different executive departments. It is time to call a halt.

Mr. WYANT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. Certainly.

Mr. WYANT. For instance, specifications for coal for the departments can be made only by certain sections of the country.

Mr. CELLER. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. The gentleman made a statement with respect to the declaration of the War Department that they were going to the Court of Claims. Is the gentleman going to insert the correspondence he has had with the War Department that will corroborate that statement?

Mr. CELLER. Yes. I will give the exact situation as I had it from the War Department.

I feel keenly on this subject, and it is the duty of every man and woman here to feel keenly on the subject. I intend to appear before the Court of Claims as an amicus curiæ, a friend of the court, and resist the proposition of paying certain claims of the companies that were thus unlawfully alleged successful bidders.

Mr. CHALMERS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. Yes.

Mr. CHALMERS. I want to say that the condition referred to, about which the gentleman is complaining—and I sympathize with him in his complaint—has not obtained in the last five years. The Comptroller General, Mr. McCarl, has insisted on the standardization of these specifications. He has insisted that the specifications be so general as to give complete and fair competition.

Mr. CELLER. The War Department was told to mend its ways, and promised to, but it has not done so. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. CELLER. Under leave to extend my remarks, I herewith set forth a communication from the Comptroller General to the Secretary of War under date of December 11, 1926, concerning the purchase of 51 Dodge touring cars. This letter clearly indicates the unassailable position of the Comptroller that the bidding must be squarely within the provisions of law:

COMPTROLLER GENERAL OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, December 11, 1926.

The honorable the SECRETARY OF WAR.

SIR: Consideration has been given your letter of October 11, 1926, replying to the several letters of this office with reference to the purchase of 51 Dodge touring cars, voucher No. 193, September, 1925, account of Maj. E. Dworak.

It appears that the purchasing and contracting officer, Holabird, quartermaster, intermediate depot, Camp Holabird, Md., requested under date of May 12, 1925, bids on 51 automobiles, five-passenger, latest model, touring, complete, with standard equipment as furnished by the manufacturer and in accordance with specifications attached to and made a part of the advertisement for bids, delivery to be within 30 days after receipt of contract f. o. b. certain designated points.

The abstract of proposals shows that five bids were received and that three bidders, namely, Warrington Motor Car Co. (Cleveland Six), Chrysler Motor Corporation, and Willys Overland (Inc.) (Overland model 93, two-door Sedan) submitted lower bids than Dodge Bros. (Inc.). However, the lower bids were disregarded and the higher bid was accepted (Dodge Bros. (Inc.)) and a formal contract entered into under date of June 29, 1925, and payment made therefor in the sum of $49,065 on voucher No. 193, September, 1925, accounts of Maj. E. Dworak, which amount represented the purchase price of the 51 automobiles in question less credit for 50 old touring cars and 1 roadster.

From the examination of the specifications accompanying the request for bids, which were later incorporated and made a part of the formal contract, it is apparent that they were drawn with reference to the mechanical construction, etc., rather than with reference to the actual requirements of the service. It also appears that the award was made in accordance with War Department Circular No. 74, 1923, covering standard and approved types of motor vehicles for the United States Army, which specifically named the Dodge car as the standard five-passenger touring car.

In reply to a request from this office for information as to the authority of law for the procedure directed in the said Circular No. 74, 1923, you submitted, by letter of August 26, 1926, the following:

"You request that you be furnished information respecting the authority for Circular No. 74, W. D., 1923. It is desired to advise you that Circular No. 74, W. D., 1923, lists the standard and approved types of motor vehicles, United States Army, as approved by the Secretary of War, and should be considered as such a list and not as authority in itself for the purchase of the particular makes of vehicles named therein. The said circular was not issued pursuant to any express and specific provision of law. The War Department has heretofore refrained from seeking such express statutory authorization for fear the flexibility of same if and when secured would not be sufficient to meet the ever-changing conditions of modern warfare. It is believed that this matter can best be handled administratively.

"The reasons which make necessary the adoption of an approved list of motor vehicles for use in the military service are as follows: The requirements which motor transportation must meet to satisfy military needs are decidedly different from what nonmilitary operation may demand. Military vehicles play a tactical rôle; they must operate over all kinds of roads under all kinds of conditions; similar vehicles must be available to replace those worn out; similar vehicles must be available so as not to complicate supply and operation; and these vehicles must be maintained in the combat area by military maintenance units considerable distances from sources of supplies. The personnel of the Army must be trained in the use and repair of motor vehicles and long experience has demonstrated that the average enlisted personnel of the Army can not be satisfactorily trained in the use of a large number of different makes of vehicles. Every officer in the field having to do with the movement of troops or supplies must be able to know at once just how many trucks he needs to transport men, supplies, ammunition, etc., to the required place; how much road space he will need, and in congested combat areas this is a most essential problem; how much gasoline and oil he will need for such motor-truck train; the speed of the train so that it may be started in order to get to its destination at the time required; and many other like questions. He must be trained in these operations in peace time. His problem will be rendered exceedingly difficult if he is compelled to increase the number of different makes of trucks, with their different road spaces, different speeds, different capacities, different fuel consumption, different standards of efficiency, etc. A heterogeneous mass of different makes of cars would so complicate these problems as to make it impossible for such an officer to operate efficiently. This difference between a standardized and unstandardized motor-truck train might very possibly result in the difference between winning and losing a battle.

"Furthermore, spare parts for a heterogeneous lot of motor vehicles can not be carried by maintenance units. In military operation it is not possible to go to the corner garage for spare parts and maintenance nor select a particular garage which may maintain an exclusive make of car. The base of supplies of both spare parts and machines is frequently long distances from the place of operation, as, for instance, during the World War and during the punitive expedition in Mexico. The cars being used by the military forces must rely on only a few military maintenance organizations and, since these must be mobile, they may carry only a limited supply of spare parts. All transportation purchased in peace must be purchased with the object of being available for immediate use in war. It would be most unfortunate in the event of an emergency involving the use of the Army if a large part of the peace-time military equipment on hand should have to be scrapped.

"Because of these requirements a procedure has been set up to determine whether a car is suitable for military service. This consists of tests of an engineering nature to determine if a car is sufficiently satisfactory to warrant a tactical test. A car that is found satisfactory in this initial test is then subjected to service tests. Service tests consist of extended practical tests by combat and other using organizations to determine if the car is suitable from a tactical point of view. A car which withstands this test is considered suitable for the service. From the standpoint of military necessity no car should be purchased for the military service which has not been found suitable by these tests. However, it happened during the recent World War, particularly during the early part thereof, that the tremendous requirements of war operations made it necessary to purchase and use all available makes of motor vehicles, but this resulted in great pecuniary losses to the Government which it is most desirable to avoid.

"Of the cars upon which bids were received in this particular instance the Dodge was the only five-passenger car which was considered suitable for the military service; that is, which met the above-recited requirements for military use. This has been proven by the car's performance with the punitive expedition in Mexico and during the World War. The personnel of the Army is trained in Dodge maintenance, operation, and supply. There is some interchangeability, although this is slight, between the older and newer models of cars. From the standpoint of military necessity the value of the Dodge to the service warrants accepting the bid on the Dodge in this particular instance at a higher price, since the increased military advantages possessed by the Dodge car were of more value to the Government than the increased cost. Furthermore, it is not considered that the initial cost is the sole test in accepting bids. There must be taken into consideration the cost of upkeep as well as the military factors heretofore mentioned. In the instant case the specifications accompanying the proposals were drawn for the purpose of inviting competition. The bid, which was most advantageous to the Government and which it was to the interests of the Government to accept, was that on the Dodge cars.

"The Dodge bid was accepted because of the fact that the Dodge car does meet the peculiar conditions required and because of the military necessity as set out herein. All motor vehicles listed in Circular No. 74, War Department, 1923, were listed therein for the same reason as was the Dodge in the present instance. Hence Circular No. 74, War Department, 1923, sets out what, as the result of the tests made, the Secretary of War has determined as being the makes of motor vehicles which it is to the interest of and most advantageous to the Government to purchase over other makes because of the peculiar conditions required of the particular type and because of military necessity. Such a list is binding only on the subordinates of the War Department and is for the purpose of centralizing in the Secretary of War consideration of changes in such equipment. He can and does make changes therein. In fact, tests are being carried on all the time to ascertain whether other makes of cars do not better meet the military requirements. For example, 38 Chevrolet sedans and 25 Chevrolet touring cars were recently purchased for service tests. Should a bid be received on a make of car not listed in Circular No. 74, War Department, 1923, which is so much lower than a bid received on a car so listed as to more than overcome the increased value to the Government of the military advantages of the listed car over the unlisted car, then the bid on the unlisted car would be submitted for the determination of the Secretary of War."

With reference to the bids received under circular advertisement, the Quartermaster General of the Army made the following recommendation to the Assistant Secretary of War under date of June 10, 1925:

"1. In compliance with memorandum from your office on above subject under date of May 23, 1925, there is transmitted herewith abstract of bids received at the Holabird quartermaster intermediate depot, June 2, 1925, under Circular Proposal 25–28 for the purchase of automobiles.

"2. Accompanying the above abstract is an analysis of bids, prepared by the commanding officer Holabird quartermaster intermediate depot.

"3. It is recommended that the bid of Willys-Overland (Inc.), Philadelphia, Pa., for Willys-Knight cars be approved and that restrictions imposed by Circular No. 74, War Department, 1923, which limit the approved type of five-passenger cars to the Dodge car be waived."

The Quartermaster General was advised in first indorsement, dated June 20, 1925, from the Secretary of War, as follows:

"1. Reference the basis letter of the Quartermaster General, dated June 10, 1925, it is directed that the Dodge car be purchased under Circular Proposal No. 25–22, Holabird Q. M. Depot."

Section 3709, Revised Statutes, provides that all purchases and contracts for supplies in any of the departments of the Government, except for personal services and except in cases of emergency, shall be made after advertising a sufficient time previously respecting same. It has been frequently held by the courts and by the accounting officers of the United States that the provisions of the statute are designed to give all manufacturers, etc., equal rights to compete for Government business; to secure for the Government the benefits which flow from competition; to prevent unjust favoritism by representatives of the Government in making purchases on public account; and to prevent collusion and fraud in procuring supplies and letting contracts. (22 Comp. Dec. 302; 5 Comp. Gen. 712.) The Congress has seen fit to make no exception thereto with relation to purchases for the military—and seldom has granted exception for any cause—and until and unless the Congress in its wisdom enacts that there shall be no free competition among citizens in supplying the needs of the military, or any other branch of the Government, it is, of course, beyond the authority of this office to allow credit for payments on purchases made in contravention of the statute.

There has often been urged upon this office the claimed economies possible through what is termed standardization of equipment—the avoidance of stocks of spare parts for more than one make of machine or other equipment, the necessity of training employees in the matters of repairing and maintaining more than one make of equipment, etc.—but the conclusion of the accounting officers has been and must be, in view of the mandatory provisions of the law, that, if permitted, such course would practically nullify the law and defeat the clear purpose of the Congress in its enactment. It would permit of the selection, purchase, and use by an agency of the Government, of one make of machine, equipment, or what not, without opportunity for other, possibly equally as good and serviceable, if not better, having a fair opportunity for consideration. Surely it is not seriously contended that this office could properly sanction use of public funds so in violation of the clear purpose of the statute. But if in some instances there could be effected economies through standardization of equipment and purchases accordingly without full opportunity through competition for others perhaps equally good and serviceable, or perchance better, there is still for consideration the legislative purpose that all citizens wishing to serve the Government in such matters should have equal opportunity to do so. Mayhap such purpose, rather than possible economies, was the impelling motive in the legislation.

Under existing law governing purchases of equipment for the Government, the controlling element is the job to be done, the work necessary to be accomplished. The request for bids must fairly reflect the actual need, through specifications or otherwise, and the equipment to be had, at the lowest price, that will serve to do the job is that authorized to be purchased at public expense. If the need be of an extraordinary nature as distinguished from the usual so as to require unusual equipment, the true nature of the need should be fully disclosed so that all who wish to bid may be informed, but the specifying of minor details having nothing material to do with the need may only be viewed as an attempt to limit competition and circumvent the law. The fact that manufacturers put out certain makes does not necessarily mean that they would not bid upon specifications open to all and not descriptive of a particular make or manufacture.

It is to be noted in connection with the recommendation of the Quartermaster General of the Army in his letter of June 10, 1925, quoted, supra, that the bid of the Willys-Overland (Inc.), be accepted; that while the bid of the said Willys-Overland Co. on the Willys-Knight car was the highest of the bids received, it negatives the statements and contentions as to the military necessity and avoidance of stocks of spare parts urged in your several letters as the reasons for the purchase of the Dodge cars. In other words, the effect of the recommendation as to the purchase of the Willys-Knight car by the Quartermaster General of the Army, who, under the authority of the Secretary of War, is charged with the transportation of the Army by land and water, including the transportation of troops and supplies by mechanical or animal means, is that other automobiles besides the Dodge cars could have and would have answered the needs of the service.

It is hoped that what has been said herein will result in strict observance of the law in purchases of whatsoever class. The purchases here under consideration will not be further objected to by this office and credit in the disbursing account involved will be allowed.

Respectfully,

J. R. McCARL,
Comptroller General of the United States.

The Assistant Secretary of War, Hanford MacNider, in part, replied as follows:

In connection with your letter to the Secretary of War of December 11, 1926, A–13489, I may state that the War Department will make every endeavor to comply with the principles which you have laid down therein.

The War Department thus indicated that it would mend its ways.

The Comptroller General replied under date of January 10, 1927, in part, as follows:

It is gratifying to note from your letter of January 3, 1927, that the War Department will in the future endeavor to comply with the principles laid down in the said decision of December 11, 1926, A–13489.

But the War Department failed to keep its pledge. It has again suffered a relapse, as witness its arbitrary and unlawful attitude heretofore indicated in the case of the 124 cars for Camp Holabird.

But the War Department apparently has its fighting clothes on. It is carrying its fight to Congress. It has induced Chairman MORIN, of the Military Affairs Committee, to introduce H. R. 11413, which is as follows:

H. R. 11413, Seventieth Congress, first session

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
February 24, 1928.

A bill to regulate the procurement of motor transportation in the Army

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter, in procuring motor vehicles for the public service, the Secretary of War is hereby authorized, within any price limitations fixed by Congress, to award the contract to the bidder that the said Secretary finds to be the lowest responsible bidder offering to furnish the motor vehicles that will, in the judgment of the said Secretary, most advantageously meet the requirements of the Government.

In a letter dated February 23, 1928, to Representative MORIN, the Secretary of War said of this bill as follows:

It will remove from review and restriction, by the Comptroller General of the United States, those parts of specifications and contracts dealing with the types and standards of motor transportation to be procured and which the War Department has determined are the best for the needs of the service.

The purpose of this bill is to create an exception to section 3709, Revised Statutes, which I again quote:

All purchases and contracts for supplies or services, in any of the departments of the Government, except for personal services, shall be made by advertising a sufficient time previously for proposals respecting the same, when the exigencies do not require the immediate delivery of the articles, or performance of the service. * * *

This section of the Revised Statutes has been interpreted by the courts, the Attorney General, and the Comptroller General as requiring, except in emergencies, advertising for supplies required for the Government and the acceptance of the lowest responsible bid. The question as to which bid is the lowest responsible bid can not be finally determined by the administrative officer making the purchase. His action is subject to review, in the first instance, by the General Accounting Office and in event of suit, by the courts. This bill, H. R. 11413, would have the effect of making the determination of the purchasing officer of the most advantageous bid final and conclusive.

It is contrary to the genius of our Government to, in ordinary cases, make the determination of any administrative officer final and conclusive on the United States. Congress is a great board of directors of the business activities of the United States. The people, through Congress, provide the money for the conduct of the Government and the responsibility is that of Congress to see that there is wise, honest, and efficient expenditure of that money. This is no new theory of government. For many years the Post Office Department audited its own accounts, that is, the action of the Postmaster General was final and conclusive in postal matters. Conditions became such in 1834 that the Postmaster General urged the establishment of an independent audit and settlement of the claims arising in his department. He said in this report of December 5, 1834, that—

It seems required, by a due regard to system, uniformity and proper accountability that neither those empowered by law to decide on the necessity of certain services or purchases nor those who make the purchases and contract should also adjust the accounts rendered for them; but that the auditors themselves, whether the claims originated under the authority of heads of bureaus or of departments, should have the exclusive power, in the first instance, to judge of the reasonableness and just amount due, looking to all evidence in the case and to the laws and prospective regulations that apply to it.

The military services have never willingly submitted to the review of their decisions by an independent agency. Congress unmistakably provided for such review in the act of March 30, 1868 (15 Stat. 54), and in considering a recommendation by the Secretary of War that this statute be repealed, the House Committee on Revision of the Laws reported adversely on the recommendation and stated, among other things, that:

In the judgment of the committee the present system of public accounting (which has worked so satisfactorily with few interruptions for more than half a century) is not to be disturbed, and that the act of March 30, 1868, which was designed to prevent such interruptions in the future is just and wise, and that no necessity exists for its repeal or modification.

This report is reprinted in CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, No. 26, pages 4341 to 4342, and the independent audit and settlement of all claims was consolidated and strengthened in the Dockery Act of 1894 and the Budget and accounting act of June 10, 1921. Unable to secure a general exemption, these services are now seeking exemptions in special cases. They argue in this case that it is necessary to standardize motor vehicles; that they are the best judge of the proper vehicle for their services; and that their determination in the matter should not be reviewed by the General Accounting Office or the courts.

Let us see what the War Department has done. It is clear that the officers of that department are at sea as to the make of car best suited for their needs.

The War Department is not the only offender in this regard. I submit herewith three letters each from the Comptroller General. The first addressed to the Governor of the Panama Canal concerning protest in the purchase of motor trucks by the governor. The second from the Comptroller General to the Secretary of the Navy concerning the purchase of a fire truck. The third to the Secretary of the Treasury concerning the purchase of an armored truck for the Treasury.

COMPTROLLER GENERAL OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, March 9, 1926.

The GOVERNOR PANAMA CANAL,
Washington Office, Washington, D. C.

SIR: I have a letter dated February 27, 1926, from the general purchasing agent, Panama Canal, presumably at your direction, with further reference to the protest made by the Autocar Sales & Service Co., Washington, D. C., that the Panama Canal in purchasing motor trucks draw their specifications so as to prevent competition. You state in part that—

"Referring to the second paragraph of the Autocar Sales & Service Co.'s letter to you of October 30, 1925, criticizing the general practice of the Panama Canal in purchasing motor trucks, and calling attention especially to Circular Invitation No. 1705, dated October 23, 1925, as a representative instance of specifications that eliminate competition in making such purchases, the facts of the instant case are as follows:

"In connection with the purchase of motor trucks under W-130280, hereinbefore referred to, the Panama Canal had made an investigation and study of its motor-truck service with a view to improvement in its efficiency and economy of maintenance and operation. In canvassing bids received under that order the specifications of the Federal Motor Truck Co. were considered as being well adapted to the Panama Canal service and the price offered was relatively low. It was thought that it might be desirable to make a trial and comparison between these trucks and the Dodge trucks then in general use at the Isthmus. Accordingly, bids were invited by Circular 1705 for three truck chassis upon the specification of the Federal Motor Truck Co., including the sleeve valve in engine, which is a distinctive feature of that truck.

"This circular also contained the standard provision hereinbefore quoted on page 2 of this letter, and bids were in fact received from three companies other than the Federal Motor Truck Co., to whom award was made. The specifications of the lower-priced trucks offered varied from the specifications in essential points, and, therefore, were not satisfactory for the service required.

"The disinterested effort of the Autocar Sales & Service Co. to improve Government procedure for purchasing motor trucks is duly appreciated, but this office is unable to see wherein the present procedure of the Panama Canal for such purchases is unsound in business principle or in any way prejudicial to the best interests of the Government."

It has been held in numerous decisions by this office and the courts that the provisions of section 3709, Revised Statutes, are designed to give all manufacturers, etc., equal right to compete for Government business, secure to the Government the benefits which flow from competition, to prevent unjust favoritism by an officer of the Government in making purchases on public account, and to raise a bar against collusion and fraud in procuring supplies and letting contracts. The provisions of the statute are mandatory and its requirements are to be strictly enforced, and no procedure amounting to noncompliance with its terms is authorized.

It is to be noted that you state that the specifications accompanying Circular Invitation No. 1705, dated October 23, 1925, are the specifications of the Federal Motor Truck Co. It has been consistently held that the naming of a particular make of truck, etc., in the advertisement for proposals to the exclusion of others of equal quality is not a compliance with section 3709, Revised Statutes (1 Comp. Gen. 59, id. 134, id. 698; 11 Comp. Dec. 36; 27 id. 896). The same rule would apply in the matter here presented for the reason that the attaching to and making a part of the advertisement for bids the specifications of a particular make of truck practically excludes other makes and prevents competition.

Specifying minor details has nothing to do with the need for a truck and apparently the only purpose resulting thereby is to limit competition. If such a procedure is permitted, it would practically nullify the law requiring advertising as a condition precedent. Not only is such a procedure unauthorized as being in direct conflict with section 3709, Revised Statutes, but it leads to dissatisfaction among bidders and should be discontinued.

I would therefore suggest that the methods of purchase by the Panama Canal must be corrected so that bids be not asked under specifications so worded as to limit to a particular make, as in the instant matter.

Respectfully,

J. R. MCCARL,
Comptroller General of the United States.

COMPTROLLER GENERAL OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, March 19, 1927.

The honorable the SECRETARY OF THE NAVY.

SIR: There has been received your letter of February 15, 1927, file L4-2(8)/QM (270201), replying to letter from this office dated February 1, 1927, relative to the award of contract for furnishing a motor-driven fire truck, ladder, and hose cart, for the use of the Mare Island Navy Yard, to the International Motor Co., New York, for the sum of $10,500 as evidenced by contract No. 1890, dated October 19, 1926, instead of to the lowest bidder, Peter Pirsch & Sons Co., Kenosha, Wis., for the sum of $9,470.

It appears that bids were requested for the furnishing of one motor-driven combination fire truck, ladder, and hose cart with pump completely equipped, the specifications therefor being as follows:

"Except as otherwise specified, the apparatus shall conform, as far as applicable, including painting and cushion tires, to the requirements of 'Specifications 58-F-1a and addendum,' issued by the Navy Department January 2, 1925, copies of which may be obtained upon application to the supply officer of any navy yard, the Navy Purchasing Offices, New York, N. Y., and San Francisco, Calif., or to the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts. Bids will only be considered on apparatus which is composed of working parts designed primarily for fire-fighting purposes, and on a make which has been in use long enough to have established its reliability to a sufficient extent to secure a service rating from the National Board of Fire Underwriters. Bids will be considered on four or six cylinder engines and on a centrifugal or rotary pump.

"A four-cylinder engine and a rotary pump is preferred and, other things being equal, will be given preference. Likewise, preference will be given to the apparatus which is composed of important working parts of the same manufacture."

Bidders were also advised that alternate bids would be considered on similar equipment, provided such bids were accompanied by full detailed information in duplicate as to all details of apparatus offered. Eight bids were received in response to this request of which only two are here material.

Peter Pirsch & Sons Co. proposed to furnish the required truck, etc., for the sum of $9,470, and the International Motor Co. submitted a bid of $10,500. The lowest bid was rejected, and, as hereinbefore stated, the contract was awarded to the International Motor Co. Protest of the award was filed in this office by the lowest bidder, the substance of which was communicated to you by letter addressed you on February 1, 1927, and your letter of February 15, 1927, is in answer to said protest.

The acceptance of the higher bid appears to have been due to the fact that more of the various working parts of the apparatus offered by the International Motor Co. were of the same manufacture than were those of the machine offered by Pirsch & Sons Co., and because it was concluded that service would be more readily obtainable for the International Motor Co.'s machine than for that offered by Pirsch Bros. Co., and as an additional reason for the award it is suggested that no bidder is in a position to guarantee adequate service for 15 years or more of a truck composed of assembled motive parts. The possibility that the manufacture of some of the parts used by Pirsch & Sons Co. in the manufacture or assembling of their truck may be discontinued in the future is also urged as a reason for the rejection of its bid.

The question, therefore, resolves itself into whether the clause in the specifications stated by you to have been "placed in the schedule for the purpose of excluding assembled apparatus from consideration" to the effect that "preference will be given to the apparatus which is composed of important working parts of the same manufacture" is such a limitation and restriction upon bidding as to violate the spirit of section 3718, Revised Statutes, reading as follows:

"All provisions, clothing, hemp, and other materials of every name and nature for the use of the Navy, and the transportation thereof, when time will permit, shall be furnished by contract, by the lowest bidder, * * *. The person offering to furnish any class of such articles, and giving satisfactory security for the performance thereof, under a forfeiture not exceeding twice the contract price in case of failure, shall receive a contract for furnishing the same."

The object of the statute referred to is to give the Government the advantage of the lowest price obtainable for the furnishing of an article through the widest possible competition and to allow all manufacturers and dealers an equal opportunity to furnish goods for the requirements of the Government. The fact that one bidder proposes to furnish goods manufactured by it in its own plant is not in itself sufficient reason to warrant the exclusion of other dealers who propose to furnish goods of equal or better quality. A similar risk is run that replacements may be difficult to obtain several years hence in the one case as in the other. All or many parts are unlikely to require replacement or renewal at the same time—but if so, it might be argued that there is safety in numbers and many parts requiring replacement or renewal would more certainly be obtainable without the possibility of delays if all were only obtainable of one manufacturer. But be this as it may, it is common knowledge that with few exceptions manufacturing to-day in the United States has reached such a state of mass production and specialization that the dealer engaged in placing a completed article on the market frequently finds it more satisfactory to rely either on its subsidiary corporations or other manufacturers for furnishing the component parts of its product than to attempt construction of the article from raw material in its own plant. Indeed, it appears that the company to whom the contract here in question was awarded relies on other manufacturers to furnish essential parts of its completed article.

Upon the facts appearing, I am constrained to hold that the contract with the International Motor Co. was improperly awarded and payment thereunder may not be made from public funds.

It is not clear whether delivery of the fire equipment has been made under the contract. The bid called for delivery within 120 days after date of contract or bureau order. The contract is dated December 16, 1926, and 120 days thereafter would make the delivery date about April 15, 1927. Such a period of time has elapsed since the contract date; it may be assumed that work thereunder has materially progressed. This is referred to because usually questions concerning acceptance of other than low bid present a situation in which the thing has been delivered and apparently present an equity in the contracting party to receive payment. Even if delivery has been made, however, it can have no bearing upon the legality of the procedure in making the award. At most, equity may be involved, but as in all such situations that is a question almost wholly whether the Congress should choose to consider the matter and give relief. Where other than a low bidder receives an award it must be with the knowledge in that accepted bidder that his bid was not the low bid and it was thus peculiarly brought to the attention of such a one that the award may be questioned and particularly so where a Government contract is involved. The limits of authority of Government officials must be strikingly assumed as in the knowledge of an accepted bidder other than the low bid. I am constrained, therefore, to say that whether in the present matter the apparatus has been delivered or work thereon has materially progressed, it presents no reason for other than now denying legality of the award to that bidder.

Respectfully,

J. R. McCARL,
Comptroller General of the United States.

COMPTROLLER GENERAL OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, July 9, 1927.

The honorable the SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

SIR: I have your letter of June 29, 1927, as follows:

"Under date of April 11, 1927, the Bureau of Engraving and Printing advertised for proposals on two armored delivery trucks of 2½ tons capacity, conforming to certain specifications. Sealed proposals were received and opened on April 29, 1927, pursuant thereto. These armored cars are intended for use in delivering currency and other securities to various points in the city of Washington. Four bids were received, as follows:

Gustav Schaefer Wagon Co., offering General Motors truck, Model K–52–S, chassis	$12,500.00
Gustav Schaefer Wagon Co., offering Pierce Arrow Model X–A chassis	13,450.00
American Coach & Body Co., offering White Model 51 chassis, $13,564, less one-half of 1 per cent for payment within 15 days, or	13,496.18
Gustav Schaefer Wagon Co., offering White Model 51 chassis	13,500.00

"The proposals for the first two of the foregoing bids did not conform to the bureau's specifications. The variations are mentioned below:

"G. M. C. Model K–52–S: While the General Motors Truck Co. in its letter of May 31, 1927, attached, states that the G. M. C., Model K–52–S, chassis is a standardized current stock model, the Washington representative of the company was unable to give any information concerning this model chassis. The Director of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing advises that the General Motors Co. does not advertise this model, and it appears that the company plans to change its 2½-ton truck in order to meet the bureau's specifications. In these circumstances the bureau would not be receiving a stock model 2½-ton chassis, as required by the specifications, but instead would be receiving a special truck devised to meet the specifications. The director of the bureau regards it as essential that he receive a standard truck, so that there will be no difficulty with respect to the securing of replacement parts at some future date.

"Paragraph 13 of the specifications calls for the frame on the chassis to be not less than 6-inch channel. The frame of Model K–52–A is made of 5⅞-inch channel. In a letter dated May 31, 1927, the General Motors Truck Co. states that the Model K–52–S on which the Schaefer Co. failed to submit any data is the same as Model K–52–A, except that the 5⅞-inch channel frame has an insert section 5¾ inches by $\frac{3}{16}$ inch fastened to it, and that it has a larger engine with cylinders of 4½-inch bore by 6½-inch stroke, developing a minimum of 40 brake horsepower. The Model K–52–A is rated at 37 (actual) brake horsepower. These changes which the General Motors Co. offer to make convert their Model K–52–A into a special model, or one that is not standard.

"Paragraph 18 of the specifications provides that the cylinders have water passages cast integrally with the cylinder walls. The engine offered by the General Motors Co. has removable liners in the cylinders.

"Paragraph 28 of the specifications calls for a geared centrifugal pump in connection with the cooling system. The General Motors Co. engine uses a belt-driven pump.

"With the exception of the changes noted in the foregoing paragraphs, the chassis offered in this bid meets the bureau's specifications.

"Pierce-Arrow Model X–A: The next lowest proposal is that of the Gustav Schaefer Wagon Co., based on a Pierce-Arrow Model X–A chassis.

"Paragraph 3 of the specifications requires that the chassis be a standardized, current stock model, and also that it shall be rated by its manufacturer for a load, exclusive of body weight and accessories, of not less than 2½ tons. Pierce-Arrow Model X–A is rated by its manufacturer as a 2-ton truck chassis. Since the opening of the bids, the Washington representative of the Pierce-Arrow Motor Car Co. and the Gustav Schaefer Wagon Co. have submitted letters to the effect that the X–A 2-ton chassis offered would be built up to their X–B 3-ton chassis standard, with the exception of the difference of material in the frame. The difference in material referred to is that the S–A 2-ton chassis is of 30–35 carbon steel, heat treated, and the X–B 3-ton is of chrome nicket steel, heat treated. This change would require the addition of one leaf to each of the rear springs, and making these changes, therefore, would convert this chassis into a model that is not a standard stock model with the Pierce-Arrow Co.

"The third and fourth bids meet the specifications of the bureau in every respect.

"In order that the award of the contract may be made in conformity with the findings of your office, the Director of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing wants to know whether, in view of the specifications, he should award the contract to a bidder who offers a current stock model on which certain mechanical changes have been made in order to meet the specifications; whether or not the mechanical changes are objectionable; or whether the award must be made to the bidder whose current stock model meets the specifications in every respect without alterations."

Under existing laws governing purchase of equipment for the Government, the controlling element is—the job to be done—the work necessary to be accomplished. The request for bids should fairly reflect the actual need, through specifications or otherwise, and the equipment to be had at the lowest price that will serve the purpose is that authorized to be purchased at public expense.

The matter of the purchase of automobiles and the drawing of specifications to accompany the advertisement for bids has been the subject of numerous decisions by this office, and it has uniformly been held that for all ordinary uses all makes and grades of automobiles are for consideration in determining which will best meet the needs of the service, and that bids should be requested on specifications drawn not by designation of a particular make or to cover the mechanical construction of a particular make, but should show only such details as to construction and performance requirements as can satisfactorily be shown necessary to meet the needs of the service. (5 Comp. Gen. 771; id. 963.) An examination of the specifications in the instant matter discloses that they were drawn with greater detail than necessary or proper in that they cover mechanical construction of the engine and other nonessential details.

It appears that what the Government requires in this case is two armored automobile trucks of sufficient power, durability, etc., for use in delivering currency and other securities from the Bureau of Engraving and Printing to various places in the city of Washington, D. C. The make or model of an automobile such as "stock model" is not the controlling element as to the acceptance or rejection of a bid. In other words, if the automobile offered at a lower price conforms to the essential requirements of the specifications and will satisfactorily meet the needs of the service, the fact that it is not a "stock model" or that it has a belt-driven pump instead of a centrifugal pump in connection with the cooling system, as specified, and other minor mechanical differences, is not sufficient justification for the rejection of the lower bid and acceptance of the higher.

The bid of the Gustav Schaefer Wagon Co. offering General Motors truck, model K–52–S chasis, at a price of $12,500 is the lowest of the bids received, and it appears that the machine offered meets in every respect the needs of the service, and also conforms to the essential requirements of the specifications, differing only in minor mechanical details.

Accordingly, the said bid should be accepted.

Respectfully,

J. R. McCARL,
Comptroller General of the United States.

CLAIMS OF SETTLERS IN LAKE COUNTY, FLA.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Public Lands, I call from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 5695, with a Senate amendment, and move to agree to the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 5695) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to equitably adjust disputes and claims of settlers and others against the United States and between each other arising from incomplete or faulty surveys in township 19 south, range 26 east, and in sections 7, 8, 17, 18, 19, 30, and 31, township 19 south, range 27 east, Tallahassee meridian, Lake County in the State of Florida.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Senate amendment.

The Senate amendment was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the Senate amendment.

The Senate amendment was agreed to.

CONVICT-MADE GOODS

Mr. KOPP. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 7729.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 7729. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. BEEDY] will please take the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 7729, with Mr. BEEDY in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 7729, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7729) to divest goods, wares, and merchandise manufactured, produced, or mined by convicts or prisoners of their interstate character in certain cases.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all goods, wares, and merchandise manufactured, produced, or mined, wholly or in part, by convicts or prisoners, except paroled convicts or prisoners, or in any penal and/or reformatory institutions, transported into any State or Territory of the United States and remaining therein for use, consumption, sale, or storage, shall upon arrival and delivery in such State or Territory be subject to the operation and effect of the laws of such State or Territory to the same extent and in the same manner as though such goods, wares, and merchandise had been manufactured, produced, or mined in such State or Territory, and shall not be exempt therefrom by reason of being introduced in the original package or otherwise.

Mr. NEWTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. NEWTON: Page 1, line 4, after the word "part," insert "under leasing or contract labor system."

Mr. NEWTON. Mr. Chairman, I am in sympathy with the general purpose sought to be accomplished by this legislation. There can be no question but what abuses have existed. I have not had an opportunity to go over the evidence in the rather exhaustive hearings in as minute detail as I would like, but I judge from such examination as I have been able to make that substantial abuses still exist which ought to be corrected by legislation. Undoubtedly much of this can and should be corrected through legislative action in the States. The fact that we in Congress are considering approaching it from a national viewpoint, should not deter those outside of Congress sponsoring this legislation from urging the various States where abuses exist to take appropriate action to correct them.

We abolished the contract-labor system in the State prison at Minnesota 18 years ago. We have a prison there where the prisoners are employed in industrial activities. It stands without a rival in the country to-day. Yesterday I am sure you gentlemen heard the remarks of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. CARSS] and the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. CLAGUE] in that connection. I shall not repeat. In our State prison we manufacture farm machinery and twine. We do an annual business in these lines of $3,000,000. It is generally accepted as a fact that it was the Minnesota State prison embarkation in the manufacture of binder twine that broke up the trust many years ago. The neighboring States buy our twine. They are glad to get it. In 1927 we sold twine as follows:

Wisconsin, 820,500 pounds	$102,562.50
North Dakota, 2,230,700 pounds	292,211.70
South Dakota, 759,750 pounds	89,270.62
Iowa, 662,260 pounds	78,815.55
Nebraska, 854,200 pounds	100,368.50
Montana, 251,150 pounds	32,649.61

There was sold in the State of Minnesota during the same year nearly 17,000 pounds of binder twine for which the State received over $2,000,000.

We manufacture farm machinery. We sold binders, mowers, rakes, and trucks in Wisconsin, North Dakota, South Dakota, Iowa, Nebraska, and several States. The total business amounted to about $500,000. Our business in our own State, along the farm-machinery line, amounted to nearly $500,000. These goods are known to have been made in a prison and are marked as prison made. There is no question but what it is prison labor. There is no question but what it comes in competition with free labor. We pay our prisoners from 25 cents to $1.30 per day. The dependents of these prisoners receive a substantial portion of the amount of the wage, and where that is insufficient the State helps out these dependents from its own treasury. We are doing a very wonderful work there and a work which should be encouraged.

Mr. Chairman, this bill as it is drawn permits any one of these adjoining States to pass legislation which would prevent the sale of the products of this prison within the borders of the State. This restriction applies not only to the product of contract labor within a prison but to the products of all prison labor. I believe that prisoners should be employed whether they are employed on a farm, upon the public highways, in the manufacture of binder twine, farm machinery, or anything else. The products of their labor come into competition, directly or indirectly, with the products of free labor. That is unfortunate, but it is true from the standpoint of the prisoner, from the standpoint of society, and from the standpoint of economy, these men ought to be kept busy while they are in prison. Care should be taken in selling the products of prison labor so as not to unduly interfere with the products of free labor. Our State is doing this. The production should be done, however, under suitable conditions. Generally speaking, it is not done where the contract labor system prevails. That is the reason that we abolished the contract system. It is the contract system and its abuses that have led to the demand for some sort of legislation of this character.

This bill goes beyond the abuse. It proceeds further than it should. If enacted into law, some of these States might take action to prevent the sale of convict-labor goods even when they were made under the unusual conditions prevailing in the Minnesota State Prison. Therefore, I think the bill should be amended so that it will apply only to goods manufactured or produced under a so-called leasing or contract labor system. That is the purpose and intent of my amendment.

Mr. Chairman, there is another reason why we should approach the consideration of this question carefully and not extend the provisions more than to the products of the contract labor system. There can be no question but what this measure is of doubtful constitutionality. I say doubtful because in my judgment the question is very close.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NEWTON. I will be glad to yield to my friend from Ohio.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. I doubt the statement the gentleman has made when he says this bill will prohibit the sale of convict-made goods in other States of the Union.

Mr. NEWTON. The gentleman misunderstood. I did not say that. I said this bill will permit any State legislature to prohibit the sale within its borders of anything that may be manufactured in a State penitentiary.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NEWTON. Yes.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. That is only provided the State itself does the same thing?

Mr. NEWTON. Certainly; but it permits it to be done.

Mr. CASEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NEWTON. Yes.

Mr. CASEY. Does the gentleman contend the State has not the right to do that now?

Mr. NEWTON. I doubt very much whether the State has that right. I am not certain whether it ought to be permitted to have that right.

Mr. CASEY. But the gentleman is not ready to say whether it has or not.

Mr. NEWTON. No; I have a doubt.

Here is the constitutional question as I see it and I have not had the time to go into it thoroughly. In the forming of our Government certain powers were granted to the Federal Government, including the right to regulate interstate commerce. Those not granted were reserved to the States or the people. Among the powers reserved was the police power. The States reserved the right to protect its people in matters affecting morals, public health, and so forth. Certain States prohibited the sale of alcoholic liquors, as they had a right to do. Liquor dealers outside of the State shipped liquor into the State, thereby circumventing the States in their legitimate functions. Congress felt that the commerce clause of the Constitution should not be used for that purpose and in 1890 passed the Wilson Act. This was upheld in the case of Rohrer (140 U. S. 545). It divested these goods of their interstate character upon arrival in the State of destination, permitting them upon arrival to be subject to the police power of the State. It was a police power proposition. There is a grave question in my mind whether under the police power the States themselves have the right to forbid the sale of prison-made goods within their borders where there is not involved a question of morals or public health.

Mr. CASEY. Would they have the right under the police power to prohibit anything from coming into the States from the outside?

Mr. NEWTON. Clearly not. As I understand it the police power covers intoxicating liquor, deleterious food, or other public health propositions, or those going to the question of morals.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. NEWTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CASEY. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. NEWTON. Yes.

Mr. CASEY. The gentleman says that probably the States have the right, in the exercise of their police powers, to prohibit anything from coming into the States that deals with health or morals. Suppose we raise that question here, as to goods manufactured by prisoners who have tuberculosis or venereal diseases, and in that way raise the health question. Would that then be within the police powers of the States?

Mr. NEWTON. That would be the case if the prohibition as to sale applied to goods manufactured by tuberculars, where it would be rather clear that there was a question of public health. It would not be the case if that were done merely under the guise of a public health regulation. This is of course assuming Congress has passed legislation like the Wilson Act.

Mr. CASEY. Suppose we said it was done for that purpose?

Mr. NEWTON. A mere arbitrary statement of that kind would not suffice.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. NEWTON. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. I do not know whether this is a fair question or not but I would like to ask the gentleman if he will support the bill if his amendment is adopted.

Mr. NEWTON. I think I will; yes.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Well, would that change the constitutionality of the proposition?

Mr. NEWTON. I do not think so. However, I said it was of doubtful constitutionality. I do not believe in the contract labor system. I am in doubt about the constitutionality of this measure. But it is a doubt and unless I am convinced that it is unconstitutional I shall vote for it. However, the bill is drawn so as to take in far more than the evils of the contract labor system. Under the circumstances it seems to me it ought to be amended so as to be confined to that rather than to go beyond it.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. I do not think that is the fundamental thing in this bill. I think the fundamental thing in this bill is whether or not each State of the Union has the right to regulate the sale of prison-made goods. It does not say anything about the contract system in this bill.

Mr. NEWTON. No; and that is the reason the gentleman and I differ. I claim the bill goes too far.

Mr. CARSS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NEWTON. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. CARSS. The gentleman states that unless his amendment is adopted the States might pass laws prohibiting the sale of convict-made goods in their States provided they were made under the contract system?

Mr. NEWTON. Yes.

Mr. CARSS. How would you remedy it? They could also, under that same line of logic, prohibit the importation and sale of goods made in such prisons as we have in Minnesota, so I can not see where the gentleman's proposed amendment would remedy the situation at all.

Mr. NEWTON. Possibly I did not understand the gentleman. The proposed amendment restricts the bill to goods, wares, and merchandise manufactured, produced, or mined under the "leasing or contract labor system." It is only as to goods manufactured by virtue of that kind of leasing or contract system that the law would then apply. It would not extend to goods manufactured in any prison where the leasing or contract system did not exist.

Mr. CARSS. Does the gentleman claim that would prevent subsequent action on the part of legislatures?

Mr. NEWTON. Certainly; it would very clearly restrict this bill. The goods that are not included in this bill, the goods that are manufactured in a State penitentiary not under a contract, would not be divested of their interstate character.

Mr. LOWREY. Will the gentleman yield to me a moment now?

Mr. NEWTON. Yes.

Mr. LOWREY. I have sent to the clerk's desk an amendment in line with the amendment of the gentleman, and yet I believe it goes a little further and I believe it is a little better. After the word "institution" in line 6, I propose to insert the words, "which allows prisoners to work under a contract or lease system." This forbids any prison that practices the contracting or leasing system to sell its goods. I mean by that statement that it puts the goods under the same ban that the bill does.

Mr. NEWTON. I have no special pride of authorship. What I am trying to get at is to make this bill apply to those goods that are made under a contract labor system.

Mr. LOWREY. While we are all condemning the contract labor system, would not the gentleman be willing to make it apply to the goods of any prison that practices the contract system?

Mr. NEWTON. No; I am inclined to think we are on more solid ground if we confine it to the goods that are manufactured under that system.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I trust the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota is not adopted. If this amendment is adopted, it kills the very purpose of the bill.

This bill does not say anything about the contract system. There is not a word about prison-contract labor in this bill. The whole purpose of the bill is to give each State of the Union the right to regulate the sale of convict-made goods. There are several States in the Union that have laws regulating the sale of convict-made goods. If the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota is adopted, it means that Minnesota can still ship its prison-made goods, its farm machinery, and its binder twine, or anything else that it may make in the prisons of Minnesota, into these States. I hope the amendment will not be adopted, because it will kill the very purpose and object of the bill.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, may we have the amendment again reported?

The Clerk read the Newton amendment.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NEWTON] who introduces this amendment misses the entire point of this proposed legislation. We do not seek in this bill to say what shall be made or what shall not be made in prisons, or the method of producing these convict-made goods. Anyone who thinks that Congress is trying to usurp authority which properly belongs to the States, does not understand this pending legislation.

As a member of the committee I have followed it for several years. The purpose of this legislation is to give to the States more authority to control the marketing of prison-made goods.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Let me first complete my statement, and then I will be pleased to yield.

Under this bill the States will have more power and more authority to deal with goods manufactured in prisons and shipped in interstate commerce, whether they are made by contract system or by the State itself, and therefore the point of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota is aside from the mark.

This legislation is permissive legislation. There is nothing mandatory about it. No State need pass any legislation. A State that does not want to do anything need do nothing under this bill. The State, however, under this bill that desires to protect itself against the sale of articles manufactured in Minnesota or any other State whether it be contract labor or by the State government itself, will be free to protect itself. Furthermore, as the law will not go into operation for two years the States will have ample opportunity to readjust themselves to changed conditions.

The purpose of this legislation, gentlemen, is simply to enable each State to protect the free labor of that State against unfair competition in the sale of goods made by prison labor shipped in from other States.

I now yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. The gentleman says the legislation proposes to give more rights or more powers to the States.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Yes; I honestly believe it does.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Does the gentleman admit that in the giving of added rights or added powers, which this bill seeks to do, it takes away certain powers and certain rights of other States?

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. I think it does, but since all States are given new power no one State is discriminated against. It gives my State the right to say that goods coming into New York State shall stand on the same bottom as prison-made goods manufactured within New York State, and if the goods from Mississippi manufactured in a prison come into New York State they must subject themselves to the same laws that apply to the same class of goods manufactured in prisons within New York State, and that is all.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. But under the present law the State may ship in interstate commerce such commodities into New York.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. That is right, but I fail to see how that has any bearing on the merits of this bill.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. If New York, under this law, prevents the shipment of those commodities and this law gives New York State an added right, does it not take away rights from the sister States?

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Of course, if you increase the rights of one State to-day under this bill you necessarily restrict the rights of the other States. But, of course, it is not true that under this bill any State can prevent the shipment into it goods made by prison labor. It does no such thing, and no State can exercise such power. It merely enables the States to impose conditions on convict-made goods shipped into these States similar to restrictions imposed on goods made in prisons within the State.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. And to that extent taking away certain rights of other States.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Yes; that is the whole purpose of this legislation—giving authority and taking away authority—but without discrimination as between the States, to correct a great evil.

It is giving every State in the Union the right to impose conditions on the sale of goods manufactured in prisons in other States and planned to ship into your State. That is a sound proposition. I hope the Cooper bill will pass, because it is in the interest of free labor. It will help destroy a vicious system known as the contract labor system, which exploits prison labor at the expense of free labor.

Mr. BUSBY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. I will.

Mr. BUSBY. This bill would seek to nullify the clause in the Constitution without repealing that clause.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. What clause is that?

Mr. BUSBY. The clause that provides that Congress shall have the power to regulate commerce among the several States.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. It is under that very power that Congress seeks to divest the interstate-commerce character from this particular class of commodities. If Congress did not have that right it could not be considering such legislation as before us to-day.

The passage of this bill will not deprive convicts of the opportunity of employment. I hate to think it will do that and believe it will not. Idleness in prisons is a terrible thing. Many States, including my own, New York, have developed the "State-use" system, which keeps the prisons busy but does not put the convict-made commodities on the open market in competition with free labor.

I believe the bill is constitutional, following the precedent established in the Wilson bill of 1890 and the Webb-Kenyon Act. The slight doubt of its constitutionality should not deter us from voting for this bill. This measure has the approval of organized labor. A large group of manufacturers and welfare organizations too. I am a member of the Labor Committee, which has had this measure under consideration for nearly four years. I have listened with an open mind to both sides of the question. I am convinced this is a good, a sound, and a just proposal, and I hope and believe the House will pass it by an overwhelming vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota has been fully answered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. COOPER]. I am surprised that the gentleman from Minnesota, who is a very good parliamentarian, did not take the direct way and move to strike out the enacting clause because that would be the effect of his amendment.

Now, I want to call the attention of the House to the fact that the question of constitutionality is generally invoked by the opponents of a bill when they have no argument on the merits. The constitutionality of this measure has been suggested by the gentleman from Iowa, the gentleman from Connecticut, the gentleman from Minnesota, and I am surprised we have not heard it set up by some one from West Virginia, because those States are the principal States that feature convict-manufactured goods.

While I am not an authority on the Constitution and do not claim to be, I leave that to some other Member of the House—I believe I can make as many mistakes on the constitutionality of any law as any expert in the House. [Laughter.]

That being so, I want to call the attention of my colleagues to the leading case on the subject which you will find in 135 United States, page 100. It is the case of Leisy v. Hardin.

That is the case that definitely held the limit of the power of the States to prohibit interstate commerce in certain commodities.

It has been suggested on the floor that the States have that power in reference to liquor and other articles under the police power of a State. That is not so, because in the Leisy case it was definitely stated that the statute of the State of Ohio prohibiting the sale, storage, and possession of liquor was invalid as to goods shipped in interstate commerce.

The matter of the power of the State in prohibiting the sale, traffic, or even entry into the State of any article or commodity the proper subject of interstate commerce first came up when several of the States commenced enacting prohibition laws.

That is, laws forbidding the traffic and possession of liquor within the boundary of the State. I do not believe that before that time there was occasion to question the power of the Federal Government in the regulation of interstate commerce. At least the conflict between the regulation of commerce within the State and the application of such regulation to any article or commodity that came from another State did not arise until that time. The question naturally arose after the enactment of State laws prohibiting the sale of alcoholic beverages within the State while such sale was lawful in other States and such beverages were shipped into the State having State prohibition. The law was definitely laid down in the so-called original package cases. In the case which I have just cited, Leisy v. Hardin (135 U. S. 100) the law was so clearly defined that there can be no question since that decision as to the power of the Federal Government in the regulation of interstate commerce and the limitation of the State in interfering in any way, and I want to emphasize "in any way" because of some of the statements that were made on the floor, to which I will refer in a minute. This case declared void and unconstitutional a statute enacted and approved by the State of Iowa. It was there held, to quote the law briefly, that a statute of a State prohibiting the sale of any intoxicating liquors is, as applied to a sale by the importer and in the original packages or kegs, unbroken and unopened, of such liquors manufactured in and brought from another State, unconstitutional and void, as repugnant to the clause of the Constitution granting to Congress the power to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States. This is the law in reference to the power of the Federal Government to regulate interstate commerce whether the commerce be liquor, convict-labor products, or whatever the subject of the commerce may be. It is the law to-day. I believe that examining the law in reference to the bill under consideration that we must determine what the rights of the Federal Government are and those of the State in the subject of interstate commerce. I note that many of my colleagues have cited both the Wilson Act and the Webb-Kenyon Act as the law on the question. It must be remembered, however, established in the so-called original package cases in the case which I have just cited that made necessary the enactment of both the Wilson Act and the Webb-Kenyon Act. Therefore we are confronted with the law that holds that a State can in no way interfere regardless of its own local laws and the purpose of these laws in the traffic of any article that is the subject of interstate commerce. After the law was so established and so definitely, Congress was asked and it did enact a law in which it waived, so to speak, its power and control over liquor and permitted the State to enforce its law over liquor, but only by virtue of the express permission of Congress to do so. For instance, the case clearly held that—

> The power vested in Congress "to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States, and with the Indian tribes," is the power to prescribe the rule by which that commerce is to be governed and is a power complete in itself, acknowledging no limitations other than those prescribed in the Constitution. It is coextensive with the subject on which it acts and can not be stopped at the external boundary of a State, but must enter its interior and must be capable of authorizing the disposition of those articles which it introduces, so that they may become mingled with the common mass of property within the territory entered.

Here the court cites Gibbons v. Ogden (9 Wheat. 1), Brown v. Maryland (12 Wheat. 419). Now, in reply to my colleagues who have suggested that the State has exclusive power within its boundaries over any matter affecting health, morals, and safety, permit me to state that such is not the law. Even as to those matters permitting the exercise of the extreme police power of the State, that extreme power is limited if it runs in conflict with the power of the Federal Government over interstate and foreign commerce. Here is the law:

> And while, by virtue of its jurisdiction over persons and property within its limits, a State may provide for the security of the lives, limbs, health, and comfort of persons and the protection of property so situated, yet a subject matter which has been confided exclusively to Congress by the Constitution is not within the jurisdiction of the police power of the State unless placed there by congressional action. (Henderson v. Mayor of New York, 92 U. S. 259; Railroad Co. v. Husen, 95 U. S. 465; Walling v. Michigan, 116 U. S. 466; Robbins v. Shelby Taxing District, 120 U. S. 489.)

All cited in the Leisy case. Now, that answers fully the argument made by some of the gentlemen and also the doubt that was expressed by some as to the real power of the State to act regardless of congressional action. In other words, even a liquor law the enforcement of which is carried on under the police power of the State was limited and ineffective as to liquor coming from another State, and therefore the necessity of the Wilson Act, which was enacted by Congress three months after the decision in the Leisy case, which I have cited and from which I have been quoting. So it is with any article manufactured in whole or in part from convict labor. The law of the State may prohibit it. In fact, my State, for instance, and many other States, specifically prohibits the sale of convict-made goods in our own State, yet the State of New York is helpless and can not prevent the sale of convict-made goods, such as the shirts from Wethersfield Prison, Connecticut, or the brooms from Iowa prisons, the twine from the Minnesota penitentiary, and so on. Now, all that this bill does is this: It waives the rights and the power of the Federal Government in the regulation of interstate traffic in so far as it affects and concerns prison-made goods. In keeping with the law as laid down by the Supreme Court, which held that any matter which has been confided exclusively to Congress by the Constitution is not within the jurisdiction of the police power of the State "unless placed there by congressional action," we are now placing it within the power of the State by action of Congress, as expressed in this bill.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Does not the gentleman think that New York State ought to have the right to make prison-made goods subject to the laws of New York State, even though not manufactured under the contract system? The purpose of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota——

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Oh, the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota is destructive. We may as well vote to strike out the enacting clause.

Mr. CONNERY. Then the gentleman does not believe, as I do not, that Congress is limited in its regulation of interstate commerce merely to the police power?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Oh, no; it was so held in the Iowa case.

Mr. CONNERY. That is what I wanted to bring out.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. It was the Leisy case that brought out the enactment of the Wilson law.

Mr. CONNERY. Gentlemen yesterday were claiming it was merely under the police power that Congress had the right to regulate interstate commerce.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. What I could not understand is State rights champions objecting to this bill, which surrenders certain rights of the Federal Government to the States.

Mr. BUSBY. I can explain that. You surrender the rights of all the other States to trade in New York when you say that New York can keep the other States out, and yet New York will proceed to trade in the other States. It is the mutual right that one State has to commerce in the other States. That is the explanation.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. And let me say to the gentleman that under the law of the gentleman's State, and under the law of my State, and under the Federal law, a convict is divested of all civil rights. He can not go out and contract for his own labor; he can not make a contract if he has been convicted of a felony. Therefore we ought to take from the State the right to constitute itself an agent of these convicts, in competition with free labor. [Applause.]

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. KVALE. The gentleman is somewhat familiar with the conditions in our State and with our wonderful penitentiaries?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Oh, no penitentiary can be wonderful. I am sure the gentleman will join me in the hope to see the time when the economic conditions of this country will be such that our penitentiaries will be almost entirely empty.

Mr. KVALE. I will go as far as the gentleman any time along those lines, but as a penitentiary it is wonderful. If this bill is enacted into law, what part of the bill, what sentence, phrase, or word will in any way so injure the farmers of my State directly or indirectly, now or at any time in the future, as claimed by some people?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Oh, the gentleman knows that the poor overworked farmer is brought in on almost every bill, very often by both those for and against a measure. I hope to see the time that the poor farmer will not be blamed for everything that is wanted or not wanted in Congress.

There can be no doubt, as I read the law, of the constitutionality of this bill. It is in keeping with the decisions of the Supreme Court and follows the general principles contained in previous acts of Congress enacted after the decisions of the Supreme Court. This bill will permit, by reason of the express assent of Congress, States from treating convict-made goods in accordance with their own State statutes whether such goods are made within its own boundary or comes from another State.

I agree that the amount of convict-made goods is not so great and that perhaps it has been exaggerated, but the principle and the purpose of the bill are sound and wholesome in keeping with progressive legislation, and as the bill is drawn, meeting the law on the subject and following precedent, there is no reason why it should not pass this House with an overwhelming majority.

Mr. CROWTHER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do not desire and I am not qualified to discuss the constitutionality of this measure. I am going to talk along another line for just a few minutes. I notice that in the House we frequently quote the Supreme Court, but I do not ever remember a Supreme Court decision that quoted the opinion of Members of the House of Representatives on the question of constitutionality. I say that with all deference to my colleagues of the legal profession.

Mr. BUSBY. I will cite——

Mr. CROWTHER. I do not yield.

Mr. BUSBY. No wonder the gentleman does not learn anything.

Mr. CROWTHER. I do not yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BUSBY. Will the gentleman yield now?

Mr. CROWTHER. Yes.

Mr. BUSBY. The recent Myers case, decided by Chief Justice Taft, quoted the doings and the sayings of the Congress, and on those doings and sayings that court based the opinion of the court. [Applause.]

Mr. CROWTHER. The gentleman will admit that that is rather unusual and very exceptional. That really was a reference to the Congress and not an individual Member who gave his opinion on constitutionality.

Mr. BUSBY. It surely was, yes, and I invite the gentleman's examination of that opinion.

Mr. CROWTHER. I do not believe the opinion was given by the distinguished gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. BUSBY. No; nor by the equally distinguished gentleman from New York.

Mr. CROWTHER. I do not pretend to be able to render such an opinion, and I pay all deference to my colleagues who are members of the legal profession and wish I had half their ability. The gentleman from Mississippi is taking the matter entirely too seriously, however. This bill has been before Congress for a great many years, and the question of its constitutionality has been discussed not only in this session but in many others. It is of vital interest to the people who work in this country. I believe as some gentleman said the other day that I am vitally more concerned regarding the hardship and suffering of the men and women who are put out of employment by the keen competition of prison products than I am about prisoners who are incarcerated as a penalty for their crimes. [Applause.] The proponents of this bill have never denied the absolute necessity of men and women who are in jail being kept in active employment. That has been used as an argument against the enactment of any law on this subject, but we never have denied that, and I think every man and woman possessing good common sense realizes the absolute necessity of keeping these men and women in active employment while they are confined in jails.

I have in my immediate territory seven or eight broom factories that are vitally affected by this bill. There has not been very much said about the broom industry. There is used in this country about 50,000 tons of broomcorn, which is cut up annually for brooms and whisk brooms. At one time the factories in my immediate territory raised all their own broomcorn alongside the Mohawk River, on the banks, where there was a rich overflow of silt every spring when the ice broke up and banks overflowed. We used to import some broomcorn into this country, and in the importation of that broomcorn we brought the corn borer to this country, which has caused from $10,000,000 to $17,000,000 of appropriations to be made for its extermination. Out of the 50,000 tons of broomcorn that is cut up, nearly 40 per cent is made up into brooms in the jails.

Members have asked what percentage of shoes were made in the prisons. Those figures were given in the hearings and they were very misleading. It was said that only one-fourth of 1 per cent, or perhaps 1 per cent of the shoes made, were made in the prisons. The only fair comparison is to consider the kind of shoes that are made in jails. It is not fair to say that the kind of work shoe that is made in the prisons should be compared with the shoes made in outside industry for other purposes. You must compare the quantity with the quantity of the same type of shoes made in private industry.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. CROWTHER. May I have five minutes more?

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. CONNERY. The only argument brought before the committee was, What will we do with the men who are working? I think that was the only argument.

Mr. CROWTHER. Yes. These eight broom factories, all in my district, employed three years ago a total of over 1,000 people, and 5,000 people, counting five to a family, were dependent on that industry. We can not raise broomcorn along that strip of land now, as the land has become too valuable for market gardening and general farm purposes. In Nebraska and Kansas and Missouri most of it is now raised. The central shipping point, I understand, is Wichita, Kans.

Mr. HOWARD of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CROWTHER. Yes.

Mr. HOWARD of Oklahoma. You did not mention Oklahoma as producing three-fourths of the total crop.

Mr. AYRES. The gentleman from Oklahoma is mistaken. Wichita, Kans., is the central producing point.

Mr. CROWTHER. Yes. I referred to Wichita, Kans., as the central shipping point, but Oklahoma does produce a tremendous crop. Our brooms are made and sold as the best in the world. They sell for about $8 a dozen to the wholesaler. Prison-made brooms are put into the department and chain stores at about $4 a dozen. The result is that instead of 1,000 or 1,100 people being employed, as was the case three years ago, now there are a little over 500 employed. For the past two years they have had a pay envelope representing only three days' work a week, due very largely to this unfair competition of prison-made brooms.

Mr. CONNERY. Is the gentleman going to speak of the blind?

Mr. CROWTHER. Yes. There are thousands of blind, not only in my State but in various States of the Union, to whom this industry is a great benefit, giving them a fair weekly wage as a reward for the skill they have developed as broom makers. It reduces the earning capacity of these unfortunates, just as it does all others engaged in this industry. You know that the industrial competition to-day is exceedingly keen between legitimate concerns doing business and striving to pay good wages and still leave a margin of profit for the stockholders. If you shut down the mills, they can not pay dividends; and if the factory is running at only half time the pay envelope of the worker will scarcely provide his family with necessities.

This bill is eminently just and fair in its purpose. I hope that exact justice will be done to the men and women in all occupations and branches of business in this country in fair and legitimate labor by doing away with this competition, which is so eminently unfair in the case of these products made in prisons and thrown on the market. [Applause.]

Mr. LOZIER. Admitting that there is a duty that we owe to the prisoners, is it not also true that we have a greater duty to the outside labor with which the convict labor comes into competition?

Mr. CROWTHER. Yes. I agree with the conclusions of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. LOZIER], and I trust the membership of this House will by an overwhelming vote pass the bill and that it may finally become the law of the land.

Mr. RAGON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas is recognized.

Mr. RAGON. I shall give this bill my support, although I do not accord to it the great importance that is given to it by some. There is one feature of it that I want to call to the attention of the House. I expected the committee to offer an amendment to eliminate that objectionable feature. I do not know whether they have it yet in their mind to do so or not, but the amendment has particularly to do with agricultural products.

Mr. BUSBY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAGON. Yes.

Mr. BUSBY. If I may be permitted to say——

Mr. RAGON. I do not want the gentleman to take up my time.

Mr. BUSBY. It has been agreed that an amendment will be offered by the author of the bill, striking out the word "produce," which would naturally have the effect that the gentleman refers to.

Mr. RAGON. I understood there was to be an amendment offered, but it has not been offered.

Mr. BUSBY. Yes; we want to keep faith.

Mr. RAGON. I will emphasize the importance of that amendment by illustrating what will happen in my State. Our convicts do nothing to sustain themselves except to grow cotton.

Sixty-five per cent of the cotton crop is exported and it comes in competition with no one. Now, to cause the State of Arkansas to do away with a $1,000,000 investment and to turn the 1,300 to 1,500 men we have there loose as an expense upon the State would be an injustice to the taxpayers of that State, which I do not think the Congress or anyone else should impose upon them.

Mr. BROWNING. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAGON. Yes.

Mr. BROWNING. Will the gentleman tell us why the elimination of competition with labor should be any more in one branch than it is in another, and why agricultural products should not be protected from prison labor like everything else?

Mr. RAGON. That is not what is troubling my mind now. There is no competition with labor in the cotton feature.

Mr. BROWNING. It affects the gentleman and that is the reason he is troubled about it?

Mr. RAGON. But 65 per cent of your cotton is exported.

Mr. BROWNING. But the world market can take only so much.

Mr. RAGON. If the gentleman wants me to answer a question let me have it and then give me the chance to answer.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAGON. I would prefer to answer one gentleman at a time, but I yield.

Mr. RAMSEYER. What is the difference between excepting the cotton grown on your prison plantations in Arkansas and excepting binder twine made in Michigan or Minnesota? If we are going to protect your prison farm why not protect the manufacture of binder twine in Michigan?

Mr. RAGON. I am not going into those things because they involve a rather complicated question about which it was not my purpose to speak.

Mr. RAMSEYER. No; it is a simple question.

Mr. RAGON. No; it is not simple from my standpoint. I am looking at the thing through to the end. I am interested in this thing because of my people. I do not want to bring up sob stories about the flood every time a question comes up, but the flood we had last spring almost ruined the State and it will not recover from it for 10 years, and my point is that if you take a $1,000,000 institution and render it impotent in the support of those convicts then you impose a burden upon the taxpayers of that State that will aggregate better than a half million dollars a year, which our people can not pay. That does not apply to your twine business and it does not apply, perhaps, to what the gentleman from Tennessee is interested in. I am talking about the people who are going to have to pay taxes in order to support these convicts and I say it is an injustice to impose that burden upon those taxpayers.

Mr. SCHAFER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAGON. Yes.

Mr. SCHAFER. If a majority of the cotton crop is exported, I do not see why the gentleman should be alarmed about this bill, because no State in the Union will regulate or prohibit the shipment of export cotton.

Mr. RAGON. But some of our cotton is sold in the States. I think Massachusetts, for instance, is a rather liberal purchaser of our cotton.

Mr. SCHAFER. But would the gentleman want the cotton farmer in his State, who has to pay $2, $3, $4, or $5 a day and board to his employees, to have his products come in competition with cheap labor at 50 cents a day?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has expired.

Mr. RAGON. Mr. Chairman, I believe I am justified in asking for three additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from Arkansas will be recognized for three additional minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. RAGON. The gentleman from Michigan has just suggested to me that the amount of cotton that would be purchased by these prisons is only a small drop in the bucket compared to the manufacture of twine and other manufactured products. That might affect the price of your twine, but it would not happen in the case of cotton at all, because I think you will find that the hardship that is worked on the cotton that is produced by the State prisons would be in the injustice it would work upon the taxpayers of the individual States, so for that reason I hope the amendment to be offered by the gentleman from Ohio will be adopted.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAGON. Yes.

Mr. KINCHELOE. If I understand the theory of this bill it is to prevent the products of convict labor from coming into competition with the products of free labor in the various States. If an amendment to exempt agricultural products is adopted then the farmer will be the only one who is going to come in competition with the products of convict labor.

Mr. RAGON. The farmer?

Mr. KINCHELOE. Yes; the man who raises cotton.

Mr. RAGON. I think Arkansas raises over 1,500,000 bales of cotton and only 2,000 bales of it is raised on the convict farms. There is no use in making the argument that this would affect the farmer.

Mr. KINCHELOE. I am stating that to that extent it affects the cotton farmers of the United States if the theory of the bill is correct.

Mr. RAGON. Yes; as 2,000 bales would compare with over 1,500,000.

Mr. LOWREY. Will the gentleman yield for a suggestion?

Mr. RAGON. Yes.

Mr. LOWREY. In regard to cotton and in regard to grain and in regard to flax and some of these other things, they are raw materials that go into other States for processing and manufacturing. They go to the flour mills and to the factories and therefore furnish raw material for the labor for which these gentlemen are pleading.

Mr. RAGON. Sure.

Mr. LOWREY. And therefore they might be excepted on the ground that they will help the labor in the various factories.

Mr. RAGON. Yes.

Mr. CONNERY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAGON. Yes.

Mr. CONNERY. The gentleman spoke of Massachusetts being a market, for instance, for the cotton of Arkansas, what reason would Massachusetts have for enacting a law forbidding your cotton to come into Massachusetts? We have not any cotton growers in the State.

Mr. RAGON. I think that is perhaps true, but what is the use of having the possibility. There may be some other States with a different view. There might be some cotton-producing States in the South which might enact laws that would have a different view.

Mr. CONNERY. When you speak of your cotton raised by convicts are you not discriminating against your free labor down there?

Mr. RAGON. Not a bit in the world. The comparison is too small. The only thing I rose to do was to give you an illustration of what would happen in my own State with reference to the revenues of the State and with reference to the burden put on the taxpayers of the State. This bill carried to its fullest purport would cost the State of Arkansas $300,000 each year and you can not afford to further burden an overburdened people.

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

Mr. KOPP. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the pending amendment and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Reserving the right to object, does this close debate on the section and all amendments thereto?

Mr. KOPP. No; on the pending amendment and any amendment to the pending amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that all debate on the pending amendment and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, may I have your attention for a few moments? I spoke on this bill yesterday and I really did not intend to speak again. Yesterday, before I spoke, there was a suggestion made to exempt agricultural products. The mere suggestion of that, I thought, would cause every Representative from an agricultural section to revolt; in fact, I do not see how any person in the House who has any regard or respect for the business of farming can be in favor of a proposition like this.

I wish we had no prisoners. I am against prisoners, and I am against prison labor, but we have got prisoners and we have got them in increasing numbers from year to year. We have them on our hands, and everybody agrees we must keep these prisoners at work on something. The suggestion is made that in a few moments, after this amendment is disposed of, somebody will offer an amendment to the bill to strike out the word "produced."

The way the bill reads now is "that all goods, wares, and merchandise manufactured, produced, or mined," and so forth. Striking out the word "produced" leaves the words "manufactured or mined," which means that by indirection you prohibit in commerce all products except those produced on farms. You may say you are not prohibiting the transportation of these goods in interstate commerce, but you are enacting a law here which by subsequent enactments or with present enactments of the States will accomplish exactly the same thing as though you actually prohibited prison-made goods from interstate commerce.

Now, what are you doing? You are undertaking to prohibit from interstate commerce things that are manufactured or mined where you have organized labor, and you are going to exempt farm products in order that the States that now keep their prisoners employed in manufacturing things will have no choice except to shift them and push them on into producing agricultural products, cattle, hogs, cotton, dairy products, such as milk, butter, and cheese, sending them all over the country in competition with the already existing overproduction that we have on the farms. There can be no question but what if you strike out the word "produced" you are striking at nothing except agriculture.

Some one has suggested that you are striking out the word "produced" because it has an indefinite meaning. The word "produced" has a very definite meaning. It means, according to Webster's Dictionary, "to bring forth, as young, or as a natural product or growth; to give birth to; to bear; generate; yield; furnish; as, the earth produces grass, trees produce fruit."

Strike out "produced" and then you protect or undertake to protect the labor in the factory, while you shift the burden on agriculture where the farmers are unorganized. I am sure the bill in this form would not have the approval of the Federation of Labor.

You have them back of this bill now. I know their interest in agricultural legislation, and they wish to cooperate with the farmers and do not want the farmer to bear any greater burden than they have to. But here you intend to push an added burden on the farmer. I am sure this bill if amended in that way would not have the support of the most selfish manufacturer in New England. I am sure the bill would not have the support of the general Federation of Women's Clubs or representatives of the prison reform organizations. Ladies and gentlemen of the House, I hope that when this amendment is offered you will for once at least show some respect to agriculture and the men who have to toil on the farms to keep the people supplied with food and vote down such amendment. [Applause.]

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, every Member of the House whose State is in the business of producing anything in the shape of salable products by prison labor can make the same plea that is made by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. RAGON]. I want to protest that it is just as proper for the State of Tennessee to ask that we exempt the manufacturer of work shirts which are made in our penitentiary as is the gentleman from Arkansas to exempt the production of cotton. And really more so, because the only way that the farmers can have protection is to have their products protected from prison labor. There is no other protection for them. If you are going to except cotton I know of many cotton farmers that will be anxious to go to jail to work for the State government in order to get their bread and clothes rather than to compete with prison labor in the production of cotton. It is insisted that only a small amount of cotton is involved. But, gentlemen, the smallness of the amount does not affect the principle in any way whatever. I insist that if there is any class of people in need of protection from unfair discriminations it is the farmer, and if you are going to protect anybody from prison labor why not give him the benefit of it, however small.

Mr. LOZIER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWNING. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. LOZIER. If this amendment be adopted what assurance have the agricultural classes that these growers of cotton will not diversify and produce potatoes, corn, and dairy products and hundreds of other things which will go into actual competition with the products of the farmer.

Mr. BROWNING. Yes; and not only diversify, but they might multiply it a thousand times.

Mr. LOZIER. Is not this an affront to the agricultural classes of America? [Applause.]

Mr. BROWNING. Well, it affronts me.

Mr. CASEY. Is the gentleman speaking on the amendment, or a suggested amendment?

Mr. BROWNING. It is the suggested amendment to strike out the word "produce."

Mr. CASEY. That is not before the committee.

Mr. BROWNING. It is not?

Mr. CASEY. Well, I am opposed to it.

Mr. BROWNING. I thank the gentleman, and I think the majority of the House will be opposed to it.

Mr. CONNERY. If the gentleman will yield, I want to say that I am heartily with him, and I also concur in what the gentleman from Iowa has said. The word "produce" should be left in because we in New England are as much interested in the farmer as in any class of people.

Mr. BROWNING. The farmer has an interest in this bill. The farmers of America are having difficulty enough now. Some of us are hard pressed to oppose this bill because of the destruction of the great manufacturing plants of our States that have been built up under the system and which will be rendered partially useless. If we exempt cotton we might as well abandon the whole principle of the bill. If the principle is right apply it to everybody, and that is the only way we can do justice in passing a measure under these circumstances. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired, the pro forma amendments are withdrawn, and the question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. COOPER of Ohio: Page 1, beginning in line 3, after the word "manufactured," strike out the word "produced."

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, I offer this amendment at the request of the proponents of the bill.

I had a conference with the proponents of the bill, manufacturers who are interested in it, who stated that if we had any amendments at all adopted we should strike out the word "produced." I submit it to the committee, and it is for the committee to accept or reject it.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Certainly.

Mr. McKEOWN. Would not the taking of this word out of the bill tend to put the States into the agricultural business?

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Nothing is said about agricultural products in this bill at all. I merely am striking out the word "produced."

Mr. BRIGHAM. Has the gentleman submitted this amendment to the farm organizations to get their opinion?

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. No; I have not had the time to do that.

Mr. BRIGHAM. Does not the gentleman think that would have been the proper procedure?

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. The farm organizations, as far as I know, have never been interested in this bill in any shape or form. No representative of farm organizations appeared before the committee.

Mr. BRIGHAM. If the gentleman's bill is going to discriminate against agriculture, does not he think the farm organizations would be interested?

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. I am not so sure that the striking out of this word "produced" would discriminate against agriculture, which I do not want to do.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Yes.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Some of us would like to support this legislation from the standpoint of principle. How can we do so when we make such exceptions as this that the gentleman proposes?

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. As I said before, the proponents of the bill are very anxious to have it considered and passed here at this session of Congress. Unless this amendment is adopted, I am told that the bill will have a very poor chance of passing the Senate during this session.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, I dislike very much to rise in opposition to the amendment of my distinguished colleague Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Early this morning I talked with the gentleman from Ohio and with the chairman of the committee on the matter of the elimination of the word "produced." I understood at that time that one of the reasons for its elimination is because Members from the agricultural sections of the country felt that it should be eliminated, and that the word is misleading. I wish to say now that that is the reason why at that time I told the Members I had no objection to the word being taken out. Since that time, after listening to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. RAMSEYER] and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BROWNING], and other Members who come from sections of the country interested in agriculture, I say that I believe the word "produced" should be left in the bill. [Applause.]

I do not see any reason why we should discriminate against any class of the people or any section of the country. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. RAMSEYER], in his talk, looked over at me and referred to the "most selfish manufacturer in New England," stating that he did not believe the word "produced" should be taken out. I would like to say to the gentleman from Iowa that I am not a manufacturer from New England, although sometimes I wish I were.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Oh, there was nothing personal in my remark. If I was looking at the gentleman at the time, it was because my eyes had wandered over and were glancing at the Democrats.

Mr. CONNERY. I know that there was nothing personal in the remark, but I want the gentleman to know that the people of New England—manufacturers and workers alike, and especially the members of the American Federation of Labor there, and all union labor—are interested in the welfare of the farmer.

The workers in the cities of Lawrence and Lynn and Peabody and Haverhill and Fall River and New Bedford and other industrial cities in New England are interested in the farmer and his welfare. I will say no more, as I have explained my position with reference to members of my committee, and say I believe the amendment should not pass, and I believe the word "produced" should be left in the bill.

Mr. CASEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. Yes.

Mr. CASEY. I want to call the gentleman's attention to the language I used in my remarks yesterday on this question. It is as follows:

> It is not the amount of goods produced that concerns us so much as it is the principle involved, which we are all opposed to.

Mr. CONNERY. I agree with the gentleman. It is the principle that is involved, and that is what we are opposed to. We do not want convict-made goods of any kind put in competition with goods made by free labor. I dislike to vote against the amendment of my distinguished colleague from Ohio [Mr. COOPER], who has worked so hard and conscientiously over a long period of time to obtain action on this bill, but I feel that I must do so.

Mr. KOPP. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the debate on the pending amendment close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Reserving the right to object, I want two minutes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Reserving the right to object, I want to ask the chairman of the committee a question. I want to ask the chairman of the committee if it is the intention and purpose of the committee in agreeing to the elimination of this word "produced" to except agricultural products from the provisions of this bill?

Mr. KOPP. The committee has not had a meeting on this question.

Mr. BANKHEAD. What was the conclusion of the chairman?

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. I was not present.

Mr. BANKHEAD. What would be the effect of the adoption of the amendment? I will ask the gentleman from Ohio this direct question, because I think it is important: Does the gentleman understand that the adoption of his amendment means the elimination of agricultural products from the terms of this bill?

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. I do not.

Mr. BANKHEAD. What does the gentleman understand?

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. I said a moment ago that the manufacturers interested in the bill and the American Federation of Labor suggested to me that the word be stricken out. I said I would introduce the amendment. What they have in the back of their heads I do not know.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Is it the gentleman's opinion that it exempts agricultural produce?

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. I do not know.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is what I want to find out.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the debate on the pending amendment close in five minutes.

Mr. KOPP. I move, Mr. Chairman, that the debate on the pending amendment close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa moves that the debate on the pending amendment close in 10 minutes. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BUSBY. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BUSBY. The debate has been limited to 10 minutes. Is it the purpose of the Chair to yield all this time to one side of the argument?

The CHAIRMAN. No. The Chair can not do that.

Mr. BUSBY. That is what I wanted to know. The three gentlemen asking for time are all on one side.

Mr. SCHAFER rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Wisconsin rise?

Mr. SCHAFER. I rise in opposition to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin is recognized.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Chairman, I hope this amendment will be defeated. The Labor Committee of this House has carefully considered this legislation for some time and reports it to the House by practically a unanimous vote. Now because of a few rumbling words of opposition, the proponents of the bill present an amendment which they say is desired by the farmers of the country.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHAFER. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. I took this up with the members of the committee who reported the bill, and they approved it.

Mr. SCHAFER. All right; even if they did approve it, they have no more right as a matter of principle to approve an amendment of this kind at this late hour than the gentleman has. The committee held extensive hearings and carefully considered the bill, and I can not see how they can defend this amendment at this late hour. They might just as well support an amendment to strike out the enacting clause.

Although I have the honor to represent a city district, my record on farm legislation will favorably compare with the records of Members who represent rural districts. [Applause.] You say this will protect the farmer. You say it will prevent an injustice being done to him. Let me tell you that if this amendment is adopted, you will not help the producer of farm products but injure him. You will say that this Congress is willing to give to the States the right to protect the labor and industries of their people from unfair competition of cheap convict labor, but they can not protect the farmer who produces and the farm labor. If this amendment is adopted, notice will be sent to every prison in the country that if they desire the product of cheap convict labor to compete with free labor and not be subject to regulation by the various States, all that is necessary is to change your system so that the convict labor in the future will be employed to produce farm products.

I can not support this amendment, which will place another handicap on the already overburdened farmers of the country.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHAFER. No; I have only one minute left. I agree with the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. RAMSEYER] in his opposition to this amendment. Those Members representing city districts as well as those from farming districts should vote against this amendment which discriminates so unjustly against the farmer. The principle upon which this bill is based does not permit the exception provided in the amendment. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. RAMSEYER] is better qualified to speak for the farmers on this amendment than any manufacturer with whom the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. COOPER] has conferred this morning.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Is the gentleman from Iowa supporting this bill?

Mr. SCHAFER. I understand he is opposed to this amendment.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Is he supporting this bill?

Mr. SCHAFER. His speech in opposition to the pending amendment was a wonderful argument in support of the bill without the amendment. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. BUSBY rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Is the gentleman from Mississippi in favor of the amendment?

Mr. BUSBY. I am.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi is recognied for five minutes.

Mr. BUSBY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I am sure we have magnified the importance of convict labor. I read in the Senate hearings the statement made by Mr. John J. Hannan, president of the State board of control of the State of Wisconsin, and that is the State from which the gentleman who has just spoken comes.

Mr. SCHAFER. But the gentleman does not agree with Mr. John J. Hannan, and the people of Wisconsin do not agree with Mr. John J. Hannan, either.

Mr. BUSBY. That statement was to the effect that only 100,000 convicts throughout the country are employed in business which would be affected by this legislation, and that only 50,000 of that number are employed in activities where the products go into other States. That is a very small number of people. Did you ever stop to think that 10 or 15 years ago there were more than 4,000,000 aliens coming into this country each year, and that under the present immigration law we are admitting each year legally 165,000 aliens, and perhaps that many more are bootlegged into the country? All these labor in competition with our citizen laborers who are already in America. This proposition of convict labor is being overmagnified in importance, and the importance should not be given to it that has been given it by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

They say this proposition being considered is against the farmer. Why, the only States it would affect are States such as my State, Arkansas, and other Southern States that have built up the management of convicts around the system of growing cotton. You can not grow truck and produce or run a milk plant or a cheese factory with convict labor. You have got to work this proposition en masse.

Mr. SCHAFER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUSBY. No; I can not yield just now.

Mr. SCHAFER. Why could you not operate a cheese factory with convict labor?

Mr. BUSBY. That might be possible in Wisconsin, but I am talking about States where they operate in a different way.

I am sure this amendment will not affect anybody who is interested in the farmer. I have seen farm advocates here on the floor since this amendment has been proposed that I have not seen before. They have been speaking for the farmer, and when they do that I get suspicious, and I think they are wearing a cloak they ought not to wear.

Mr. BURTNESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUSBY. Yes.

Mr. BURTNESS. Does the gentleman take the position that it might not injure agriculture or that you stand on any principle at all if you force some penitentiaries to go out of one line of business and then give them an incentive to proceed along agricultural lines in producing agricultural products?

Mr. BUSBY. I am certain it would not influence the agricultural situation one particle, because of the smallness of the number of convicts employed in producing agricultural products, but it would influence the State penal systems materially, and for that reason we of Mississippi, who are receiving and have received $729,000 profit out of the operation of our convicts during the last four years, would very much dislike to see you step in and close the doors of our own institutions, and compel us to support the convicts in idleness and to tax our farmers to do this.

Mr. BURTNESS. I can see the gentleman's position from that standpoint, and will the gentleman answer one other question?

Mr. BUSBY. Yes.

Mr. BURTNESS. Can the gentleman give us any reason why the bill should apply to some and not apply to all, and does not the same argument the gentleman makes with reference to his situation apply with reference to any other situation?

Mr. BUSBY. In answer to the gentleman, I will say that this is a raw-product proposition entirely. There is no skilled-labor feature entering into it, and therefore I am not surprised that the labor organizations are entirely behind the move to strike out of the bill this particular word "produced" that is proposed to be stricken out by the amendment. There is no skilled-labor element that enters into it, and for that reason I am sure we should adopt the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. LAGUARDIA rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Is the gentleman from New York opposed to the amendment?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I am.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is recognized for one minute.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, there is no difference in convict labor, whether it produces a shirt, a broom, or a turnip. The purpose of this bill is to prevent the products of convict labor entering into the general markets of the country. You can not justify this bill by seeking to eliminate any one branch of convict labor. If you do that the very purpose of the bill is destroyed, and, as I pointed out before, if we close the doors to manufactured goods made by convicts we will simply open a new avenue of using this convict labor under the contract system. Those in favor of the general principle and purpose of the bill, to prevent the interstate commerce of convict-made goods, should vote down the amendment and stand by the bill. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio, which, without objection, the Clerk will again report.

There was no objection.

The Clerk again read the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. COOPER].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BUSBY and Mr. MCDUFFIE) there were—ayes 37, noes 140.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COOPER of Ohio: Page 2, line 6, after the word "otherwise," insert "Provided, however, That nothing in this act shall be construed to apply to the products of any Federal penal or correctional or reformatory institution manufactured or produced for use by the Federal Government."

Mr. KOPP. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I submit to the gentleman that that is not a fair discussion of an important amendment of this sort, and I object.

Mr. KOPP. I am not trying to unduly close debate on the section, but I do not think this amendment needs much debate.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. KOPP. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Iowa rise?

Mr. KOPP. Mr. Chairman, I simply want to say that the committee will accept this amendment.

[Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. We are not going to vote right now.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I have offered this amendment for the reason that to-day all goods manufactured or produced in our Federal prisons are used only for Government purposes.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. This amendment provides that any goods manufactured in our Federal penal institutions that are used for Government purposes only shall not be subject to the provisions of the bill.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Yes.

Mr. ABERNETHY. I am going to support the legislation, but I want to say to the gentleman that just this week I got a complaint from an iron manufacturer who manufactures various kinds of implements, complaining that the Government at a plant near Washington was selling products in competition with him. If we are going to keep the States from competing in this business, how can we by any proper reasoning put the Government in the same business?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The Government does not sell the products.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. No; the Government does not sell its products. This amendment merely provides that the products made in our Federal penal institutions that are used for Federal purposes, that do not go on the market in competition with other goods, shall not be subject to the provisions of the bill.

Mr. ABERNETHY. If you are going to shut out the States, why let the Government in?

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Some States are using prison products for their own State purposes. Ohio at the present time has a law providing that its prison-made goods shall be used only for State purposes.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Yes.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Let me suggest that so long as the Government conducts the business as it now does, and does not sell any of its product, this amendment is wholly unnecessary. The Government is already out from under this bill, and the gentleman's amendment would perhaps open up the field for the Government to enter it.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. I will say to the gentleman from Alabama that I am following the suggestion of the Attorney General of the United States, who is of the opinion that the purpose of the bill might in some way interfere with our Federal penal institutions and he himself has suggested that an amendment of this kind be offered.

Mr. CONNERY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Yes.

Mr. CONNERY. I will also say to the gentleman that the Federal penitentiaries have diversified their industries and they are not interfering in any way with the people on the outside.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. If the gentleman will permit, of course, the reason for the Attorney General making that statement is quite apparent. The Federal prisons are located in different States.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Yes.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. And they send from one prison things manufactured there for use in the other prisons.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Yes; for instance, the Federal prison at Leavenworth makes shoes and clothing, I believe, for the Army and the Navy. This amendment protects the Federal Government from coming under the provisions of this act as to goods that are shipped from the various penitentiaries, which are used only for Federal purposes.

Mr. BURTNESS. But only in the event they are sold to some other agency of the Federal Government.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Yes.

Mr. RAMSEYER. I wish to reinforce what the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON] has stated. If the gentleman is correct in his statement that goods manufactured in Federal penal institutions are not sold, I do not see the necessity of this amendment at all. I think it is entirely useless.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. As I have stated, it is offered at the suggestion of the Attorney General of the United States.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Just what did he say?

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. He said he was afraid the broad language of the bill might interfere in some way with our Federal prison institutions and suggested that there be an amendment offered like this I have offered.

Mr. BUSBY rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Is the gentleman from Mississippi opposed to the amendment?

Mr. BUSBY. I am.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa moves that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in five minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BUSBY. Mr. Chairman, I just want to accentuate the thought of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON] that as the present Federal penal institutions' business is being handled there is really no necessity for this amendment, and those of you who stood a while ago proclaiming your strength by your vote, that you stood for this bill and the principles of the bill, now I hope you will stand for the principle, making no exception in favor of the Federal Government, notwithstanding the fears of the Attorney General.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, I am going to support this legislation over the protest of the prison authorities of my State. They say it is very detrimental to our prison system, failing to recognize the fact that prison-made goods should not come in competition with other manufactured goods. If that reasoning is correct, why should the Government go into the business you are preventing the States from going into? There is no more reason for this than there is for any State selling prison-made goods. When the Government uses prison-made goods it takes away the opportunity for the manufacture and sale of goods by other people, and I hope you will vote down this amendment. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. COOPER].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. COOPER of Ohio), there were 75 ayes and 82 noes.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. LOWREY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 6, after the word "otherwise," insert: "provided, that this restriction shall not apply to raw material brought into the said State or Territory for purpose of processing or manufacture."

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. Was the time limited on the pending amendment or on the section?

The CHAIRMAN. On the pending amendment. The gentleman from Mississippi is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. LOWREY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, I believe it is generally agreed that the object of this bill is to prevent competition of convict labor with free labor. It has been suggested, if we pass the pending amendment, it would tend to turn convicts from the labor they are now doing in factories to making cheese and dairying products, and so forth. My amendment provides simply that wherever the convict-produced goods are shipped into a State as raw material for the purpose of manufacturing and processing they shall not fall under this law.

In all kinds of manufacturing we have to have raw material and the furnishing of that raw material is a benefit rather than a detriment to labor in the factories and to processing and manufacturing plants.

Now, there is a good deal of interest manifested in the question of the production of cotton on the farm, and some have mentioned the production of grain on a convict farm. This simply admits that cotton and grain for processing and manufacturing.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LOWREY. Yes.

Mr. KNUTSON. Can the gentleman conceive of any activity that the prisoners might be connected with that would not compete with free labor?

Mr. LOWREY. I am coming to that. We have to employ prison labor some way or somewhere, and we can not employ them without in some measure bringing them in competition with free labor. It seems to me that nothing could come nearer solving the question than along this line of furnishing raw material for processing and manufacture, and hence I have offered this amendment.

Mr. CASEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LOWREY. Yes.

Mr. CASEY. Do I understand the gentleman's amendment will exempt iron ore and such other raw material as that produced by convict labor?

Mr. LOWREY. I had not thought of iron ore, especially. To be candid, I was thinking of agricultural materials that go into processing.

Mr. CASEY. Will not the language of the gentleman's amendment include iron ores, coal, and other raw materials that may be manufactured or produced by convict labor?

Mr. LOWREY. It would probably include ores to be processed or manufactured. I do not think it would include coal.

Mr. BROWNING. Why should it not include iron and coal and everything else if it includes farm products? What is the objection?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. KINCHELOE rose.

Mr. KOPP. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate upon the section and all amendments thereto close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, it is because this is such an important proposition that I take the floor at this time. We need not deceive ourselves. If you adopt this amendment, you might just as well have eliminated the word "produced" when that amendment was offered a moment ago. If I understand the bill, the purpose of it is to prevent the products of convict labor from coming into competition with the products of free labor in the States. If that is what is to be accomplished, and it is a good thing, then let us accomplish it. Why should the manufactured products of convict labor be forbidden to come into competition with the manufactured products of free labor and the products of convict labor in the form of raw materials be not prohibited from competition with raw material produced by free labor?

The author of this bill may be correct that there are very few penitentiaries in the United States to-day producing raw material that would come in competition with the raw material produced by free labor, but I know, and so do you, and we need not fool ourselves, that practically every penitentiary in every State in the Union except the Atlantic seaboard that now has contract labor, the products of which are coming into competition with the products of free labor, when they have to adjust themselves will adjust themselves to raise farm products, which will increase a thousandfold the amount of raw material being produced by the penitentiaries to-day. I would like some one to give me a good reason why you pick out the farmer as the only laborer in America who will have to come in competition with the products of convict labor, which will be the result of this amendment be adopted. If you are going to readjust for the benefit of one class of labor, and if it is a good thing to do for that class of labor that works in the factory, then it is equally a good thing to protect the farmer. If you are going to put the farmers in competition with the products of convict labor, why not put all in competition with the products of convict labor? We all know that when these penitentiaries that now have convict labor and manufacture goods which come into competition with the products of free labor have to adjust themselves under this law, they can so adjust themselves to raise hundreds of thousands of bushels of corn, or wheat, or cotton, or anything else that can be shipped and come into competition with the free products of the farmer.

Mr. KNUTSON. Can the gentleman think of any activity that the prisoners can be put into that will not come into competition with free labor somewhere along the line?

Mr. KINCHELOE. No. But why single out the farmer and make him the only one to come into competition with convict labor?

Mr. KNUTSON. I am not doing that, but the only way that you can prevent convict labor from coming into competition with free labor in some way is to allow the convicts to sit idle in their cells or furnish them with golf clubs.

Mr. KINCHELOE. The gentleman's question is directed against the whole bill?

Mr. KNUTSON. Absolutely.

Mr. KINCHELOE. I am not talking about that. I say that if convict-made goods are to come into competition with one class of labor, they ought to come into competition with all classes of labor.

Mr. KETCHAM. And is it not true that with the invention of machinery and the application of it to farm problems the phraseology the gentleman offers will be a real menace to agriculture?

Mr. KINCHELOE. And in addition to that the big landowners can go and get convicts and put them on their lands and raise thousands of bushels of corn and wheat and everything else which, if this amendment is adopted, will come in competition with the farmers' products.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Mississippi.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. KOPP and Mr. ANDRESEN rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Iowa, the chairman of the committee.

Mr. KOPP. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 2, insert, after line 6, a new section, as follows:

"SEC. 2. This act shall take effect two years after date of its approval."

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the committee amendment to strike out the word "two" and insert the word "three."

Mr. KOPP. Mr. Chairman, on behalf of the committee I accept the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDRESEN] was on his feet to offer an amendment to section 1. The Chair recognized the gentleman from Iowa, who said he offered a committee amendment. The committee amendment, which is the addition of a new section, is not in order until all amendments have been offered to section 1.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is not able to read the mind of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KOPP], and concluded that the gentleman from Iowa wanted to offer an amendment to section 1. The Chair thinks the point of order is well taken. The Chair recogonizes the gentleman from Minnesota to offer an amendment.

Mr. ANDRESEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ANDRESEN: Page 1, line 4, after the comma, following the word "mined," insert "excepting farm machinery and binder twine."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDRESEN].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. ANDRESEN. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is demanded.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 25, noes 100.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. KOPP. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report. The Chair understands that the gentleman from Iowa accepts the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. KOPP. That is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] to the committee amendment.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, section 2 has not yet been read for amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Section 2 has been reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee to the committee amendment: Page 2, line 7, strike out the word "two" and insert in lieu thereof the word "three."

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I ask the indulgence of the committee for a moment, although the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KOPP] has accepted the amendment I have offered. It seems to me that there ought not to be any hesitation on the part of the proponents of this measure to accept this amendment. It is insisted by all the prison authorities of most of the States, so far as I am advised, that the passage of this legislation will create a revolution in the handling of prison labor, and will make necessary radical changes.

I am not out of sympathy with the desire of manufacturers and producers and the labor they employ to be rid of the competition which prison labor affords under the present conditions. But, after all, what will become of the prisoners? What can be done with them? It is surely not desirable to reduce them to a state of idleness. Some method of employment must be found, and the prison authorities agree that it is going to take more than two years to work out the problem.

Personally the commissioner of institutions in my own State, a gentleman who is making a great record, feels that it ought to be five years. I should be very glad if I could prevail upon the committee which sponsors this bill to accept a five-year term. They have advised me—certain members of it have advised me—that they could not do so, and I am offering the very best that it seems possible to get.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Why can they not accept five, but can accept three? What testimony have they that contradicts the testimony of the warden of the Tennessee Penitentiary, when he states that it will take at least five years to work out this problem? Now, if it will take five years, why give three years, which would simply aggravate the situation?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I know of no testimony which the committee has which will contradict the statement contained in the telegram I have.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Does the gentleman know why the committee adopted two years instead of one year?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. No. I have never heard the reason for it, except I suppose it was the thought of the committee to give some reasonable amount of time for the present authorities of the States to readjust themselves to these conditions.

Mr. RAMSEYER. The committee probably supposed that would give time for the present authorities to adjust themselves. I think we ought to have some statement from people of experience as to the length of time they need to readjust themselves to the conditions imposed by this bill.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Let me explain my situation to the gentleman. I favor the five years.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Why did the gentleman change on that?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I have been to the committee on this matter of legislation. They agree to accept three years, or certain members of the committee did.

Mr. RAMSEYER. The gentleman feels that it is not long enough?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I fear it is not. But I am keeping faith with the committee.

Mr. RAMSEYER. The taxpayers should be considered also.

Mr. CONNERY. If my memory is correct on this subject, when the matter came up the committee determined on one year. We asked some of these prison wardens regarding the feasibility of one year, and they suggested two years. I am willing to vote for three years and give them a little longer.

Mr. CARSS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for two minutes in which to make a statement.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. CARSS. I agreed with the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] that I would not oppose this amendment, but I want to state for the benefit of the House that when we had these prison wardens before us they testified that they had known for the last 25 years that this legislation was coming, and they had taken no steps to set their houses in order and readjust themselves for such legislation, if it were put on the statute books. I do not think they should have had any time, but we agreed to give them two years. I was not opposed even to three years.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Is it not important that they should readjust themselves for anticipated legislation?

Mr. CARSS. Yes. They saw it coming, and if they are so wedded to this contract system, they should have set their houses in order.

Mr. KOPP. Mr. Chairman, I move to close debate on this section and all amendments thereto.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa moves to close debate on this section and all amendments thereto. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Chairman, in order that we may get the reasons of the committee for making this time limit of three years I move as an amendment to the motion made by the gentleman from Iowa that debate close in 20 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion as amended, that debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 20 minutes.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. RAMSEYER) there were—ayes 44, noes 132.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Chairman, I move that debate close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa that debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in five minutes.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. RAMSEYER) there were—ayes 54, noes 128.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to utilize these two minutes in getting information. I think every Member of the House is sincere in wanting to know why this time limit was made two years and overnight the committee agreed to accept an amendment for three years. This amendment involves millions of dollars in investments by States in prisons and are you just trading around simply in order to get votes in support of the bill? I can not conceive that that is the situation.

Mr. KOPP. Does the gentleman want me to answer that question?

Mr. RAMSEYER. That is exactly what I want, and I yield to my colleague from Iowa for that purpose.

Mr. KOPP. After hearing the evidence in this matter the committee had a difference of opinion as to whether it would require two years or three years for the States to readjust themselves.

Mr. McDUFFIE. If the gentleman will yield, in some of the States the legislatures will not meet for three or four years and there can not be a readjustment.

Mr. RAMSEYER. I do not want the gentleman to tell us about the vote in the committee.

Mr. KOPP. I am not going to do that, but, as I said, there was a difference of opinion.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Expert opinion?

Mr. KOPP. Yes; expert opinion that came before us. Then there was another feature. Nearly all legislatures meet at intervals of two years and so there should be some time after the last legislature meets for a readjustment.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Before they can do anything the legislatures must act, and then they ought to have two or three years after the meeting of the legislatures in order to readjust themselves.

Mr. KOPP. That was not thought necessary by the committee.

Mr. RAMSEYER. The prison wardens can not do this of their own accord. The legislatures must act first and then the wardens and boards in charge of prisons should have some time to readjust their business to comply to this bill. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The point of order is that the question before the committee is the motion of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KOPP].

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Chairman, I offer a substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. There is a motion pending before the Chair. The question now is on the motion made by the gentleman from Iowa that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto do now close.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Chairman, I offer a substitute to the pending amendment. In section 2 change the word "two" to "five," so it will read:

This act shall take effect five years after the date of its approval.

The CHAIRMAN. There are two amendments pending, the committee amendment and the amendment to the amendment. If the amendment which the gentleman offers is to the original committee amendment it is in order but if it is to the amendment to the amendment it is not in order, being in the third degree. Will the gentleman make that clear to the Chair?

Mr. RAMSEYER. I offered it as a substitute, but I am perfectly willing to have it go in as the Chair suggests, so that it may be in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers an amendment as a substitute for the committee amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. RAMSEYER as a substitute for the committee amendment: In line 7, strike out the word "two" and insert in lieu thereof the word "five," so it will read:

"SEC. 2. This act shall take effect five years after the date of its approval."

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment to the committee amendment as offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT].

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, a point of order. The amendment itself clearly shows it is not a substitute but is an amendment to the amendment, and is therefore out of order. The amendment itself clearly shows it is an amendment to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment was offered in the nature of a substitute, and the Chair therefore overrules the point of order.

The question is on the amendment to the committee amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT].

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, should not the vote first come on the Ramseyer amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state there is now pending before the committee a committee amendment, an amendment to that amendment, and a substitute to the original committee amendment. In this state of affairs the first vote comes on the amendment to the committee amendment as offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee) there were—ayes 189, noes 18.

So the amendment to the committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the substitute offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. RAMSEYER].

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. McCLINTIC. If I understand it correctly, the substitute, if adopted, would make the time five years instead of three years.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. RAMSEYER) there were—ayes 74, noes 151.

So the substitute was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now comes on the committee amendment as amended.

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BROWNING. May I ask the Chair if it would be in order to now move to amend so as to make it four years instead of three years?

The CHAIRMAN. That can be offered as a substitute amendment.

Mr. BROWNING. Then I offer that as a substitute amendment, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BROWNING] offers a substitute amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BROWNING as a substitute for the committee amendment: Strike out all of the committee amendment and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 2. This act shall take effect four years after the date of its approval."

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BROWNING) there were—ayes 62, noes 149.

So the substitute was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the committee amendment as amended by the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The committee amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. KOPP. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House, with an amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BEEDY, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 7729) to divest goods, wares, and merchandise manufactured, produced, or mined by convicts or prisoners of their interstate character in certain cases, had directed him to report the same back with an amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule the previous question is ordered. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. BUSBY, Mr. McDUFFIE, and Mr. CONNERY asked for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 303, nays 39, answered "present" 1, not voting 87, as follows:

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I was not present, but I was coming. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman does not qualify.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

On motion of Mr. KOPP, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. NEWTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota.

There was no objection.

HISTORICAL MUSEUM AT FORT DEFIANCE, OHIO

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table Senate Joint Resolution 82, providing for the erection of a public historical museum on the site of Fort Defiance, Defiance, Ohio, insist on the House amendment, and agree to the conference asked for.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table Senate

Joint Resolution 82, insist on the House amendments, and agree to the conference asked for. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. LUCE, Mr. ALLEN, Mr. DAVENPORT, Mr. GILBERT, and Mr. BULWINKLE.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS—CONVICT-MADE GOODS

Mr. KOPP. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have five legislative days to extend remarks on the Hawes-Cooper bill just passed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that all Members may have five legislative days in which to extend remarks on the bill just passed. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MAJOR of Illinois. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, the bill now before the House known as the Hawes-Cooper bill is not a new legislative proposal but one which has been before Congress for years. The bill either in its present or similar form has been favorably reported three times by a committee of the House, and has each time passed the House. A similar bill has often been reported by the Committee on Interstate Commerce of the Senate, but for some reason or other a vote has never been had in both branches at the same session.

I became interested in this proposal during the Sixty-eighth Congress, when the Committee on Labor, of which I was a member, held extensive hearings. Before that committee and before the present Labor Committee every interested person has had an opportunity to be heard and every feature of the matter was thoroughly considered. It perhaps is not out of place for me to say the last time I talked to the late Edgar Wallace, legislative representative of the American Federation of Labor, only a few days before his death, was with reference to this bill. He was a strong advocate of the measure and entertained high hopes that it would become a law during this session. It now seems likely his hope is to be consummated, but not until death has removed him from a busy and useful life devoted to the welfare of organized labor and mankind generally.

THE BILL

Be it enacted, etc., That all goods, wares, and merchandise manufactured, produced, or mined wholly or in part by convicts or prisoners, except paroled convicts or prisoners, or in any penal and/or reformatory institutions, transported into any State or Territory of the United States and remaining therein for use, consumption, sale, or storage, shall upon arrival and delivery in such State or Territory be subject to the operation and effect of the laws of such State or Territory to the same extent and in the same manner as though such goods, wares, and merchandise had been manufactured, produced, or mined in such State or Territory, and shall not be exempt therefrom by reason of being introduced in the original package or otherwise.

Under our present situation the States are powerless to prevent prison-made goods and merchandise from coming in conflict with those produced by free labor. The State of Illinois, for instance, may regulate or control or prohibit the products of its own prisons from being placed on the market in competition with products of free labor, but is powerless to exercise that authority over prison-made merchandise of other States. In other words, the States whose legislatures try to curb this pernicious evil can only act in vain.

Each State is at the mercy of the other 47 States of the Union and has no way of protecting itself from being a dumping ground for the prison-made goods of the other States. Of the many evils growing out of our present system of prison management, the most monstrous of all no doubt is what is known as the contract system where those confined within the prison are hired to a contractor at a wage in many instances of a few cents per day. The factory is furnished by the State with the light and heat and all the other essentials which go to make up the overhead expense. The contractor then is permitted to sell products thus made in competition with the manufacturer who must furnish his own factory, his own light, his own heat, and pay a wage in conformity with our standard of living. This means restricted wages and reduced employment. Surely the man or woman, girl or boy, who travels the path of rectitude in an honest and honorable endeavor to earn a livelihood for their self and family should not have his or her opportunity of employment denied or his or her wages restricted by being required to compete with the man or woman who has gone wrong and is so unfortunate as to be required to spend their days in prison.

It is claimed by some that this is a State problem and Congress should have nothing to do with it. I agree prison management is for the States and that is the reason this bill should be enacted into law. It enables each State to handle the matter as it sees fit. The bill prohibits nothing, interferes in no way with prison management in the respective States, and makes no pretense of directing the manner in which the convict-labor question shall be handled. Those things are all left to the States as at present but it does clothe the States with the very essential power of handling the situation as its agencies may see fit, and making its laws effective not only to the goods and merchandise produced in its own prisons but to that produced in other States as well. In my opinion this bill is meritorious and I hope it will pass and become a law.

Mr. HOLADAY. Mr. Speaker, the Cooper-Hawes "Prison-made goods" bill provides that all goods, wares and merchandise produced by convicts in any penal institution, transported into another State for use or sale, shall upon arrival in such State be subjected to the laws of such State.

Each State now has the power, and many States are exercising their power, to regulate the sale of convict-made goods that are produced in that State, but a State does not have the power to regulate the sale of convict-made goods made in another State and shipped into that State through interstate commerce.

This bill proposes to give to each State the right to regulate the sale of convict-made goods wherever produced.

CONVICT LABOR AND STATE-USE SYSTEM

It is now almost universally conceded that convicts of all kinds should work at some form of useful labor during their imprisonment. The important problem arises how convicts may be employed at useful work without diminishing the demand for the labor of men outside of penal institutions.

The manufacture of commodities by enforced labor of convicts enables prison authorities or contractors, if they are allowed to do so, to sell these commodities at prices with which firms employing paid labor can not possibly compete, and so tends to lower the wages of free wage earners and penalize their righteousness by taking from them or lowering the market of employing firms.

The same is true where the service of convicts is contracted for in competition with free labor.

Even where the product of service of convict labor is not sold in competition with the product or service of free labor, but is confined to making necessaries for prisoners and governmental institutions, convicts are still required to do work, which if not done by them, would have to be done by free labor. On the other hand, to keep convicts in idleness is physically and spiritually bad for the convicts and is not good for the community.

To deal with the convict-labor problem constructively, therefore, the convict must produce in the way that interferes in the slightest possible degree with the markets of commodities or service rendered by free labor.

SYSTEMS NOW IN USE

To have an intelligent understanding of the convict-labor problem it is essential to know the several systems of employment of convicts in use by the several States. These systems may be classified into six groups. These systems are as follows:

CONTRACT SYSTEM

Under the contract system the State feeds, clothes, houses, and guards the convicts. A contractor engages for the labor of the convicts, which is performed within or near the prison. A stipulated amount per capita is paid for the services of the convict, the contractor supplying his own material and superintending the work.

PIECE-PRICE SYSTEM

The difference between the above and the piece-price system is small. The contractor supplies the raw material and pays a fixed amount for the work done on each piece or article manufactured by the convicts. The prison officials dictate the daily quantity of work required.

LEASE SYSTEM

Under the lease system the State enters into a lease with the lessee, who agrees to receive the convict and feed, clothe, and guard the convicts, to keep them at work, and to pay the State a fixed sum for their labor.

PUBLIC ACCOUNT SYSTEM

In the public account system the State enters the field of manufacturing on its own account. It buys the raw material and puts the product on the market and assumes all the risk of conducting a manufacturing business.

STATE-USE SYSTEM

Under the State-use system the State conducts a business as in the public account system, except that the goods produced are only sold to the State or a political subdivision thereof.

PUBLIC WORKS AND WAYS SYSTEM

The public works and ways system is very similar to the State-use system, except that the labor is applied to the construction and repair of the prison or of other public buildings, roads, parks, and other permanent public structures.

The contract system, the piece-price system, and the lease system are susceptible of grave abuses and have been abandoned by many States.

The general tendency among a considerable percentage of the States is to develop the State-use system and the public works and ways system.

Under either of the last-mentioned systems, the competition of convict labor with free labor, and the competition of convict-made products with the products of private manufacturers, is reduced to a minimum.

Under the provisions of this bill each State will be enabled to decide for itself the policy of manufacture and sale of prison-made products within its own limits. With this protection I believe the individual States will gradually work out a system that will provide some compensation for the labor of their convicts, some of this compensation to be applied to the care of the convict's dependents and the remainder paid to the convict when he is discharged in order that he may have a small sum of money to assist him in again taking his place in society.

This measure protects free labor and free industry and at the same time is a constructive step toward more humane and just opportunities for the unfortunate man and his more unfortunate dependents.

INLAND WATERWAYS CORPORATION

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 198, a privileged resolution from the Committee on Rules.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 198

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 13512, to amend the act entitled "An act to create the Inland Waterways Corporation for the purpose of carrying out the mandate and purpose of Congress, as expressed in sections 201 and 500 of the transportation act, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1924. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed two hours, to be equally divided and controlled by those favoring and opposing the bill, the bill shall be read for amendment under the five-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment the committee shall arise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and the amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Speaker, this resolution which has just been read makes in order the consideration of the bill H. R. 13512, which among other things increases the authorized appropriations for the Inland Waterways Corporation from $5,000,000 to $15,000,000. The bill consists of two sections. The first section is an amendment to an existing section in the law and the second section in the bill is an amendment to another section of existing law. The second section has six paragraphs to it, designated from (a) to (f), inclusive. Paragraph (a) and paragraph (f), the report states, are existing law, while the other paragraphs, (b), (c), (d), and (e), are additions to existing law.

I have no desire to discuss the merits of the pending bill. I just wish to call attention to two things touching procedure here in the House, and I would like the special attention of members of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce on the matters I am about to discuss.

One day several months ago, after some discussion in the House, it became the accepted policy of the House that bills reported to amend existing statutes should carry cross references to the new United States Code. This bill does not carry them, but I called the attention of members of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce to this omission when they were before the Rules Committee, and they agreed to see to it that the bill was properly amended to carry the cross references to the United States Code.

A few years ago when I presented a rule making in order the consideration of a bill in charge of this Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce I called attention to another matter of procedure which the committee then agreed should be followed, and that is that when a bill is reported amending existing statutes that the report should show by stricken-through type, italics, or otherwise just what changes were proposed to be made in existing law. Sometimes the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce follows that practice. I have not reported a bill from the committee of which I am a member for five or six years that did not show in the report just in what way we proposed to amend the sections of existing law, so that Members could see on reading the report just what changes were to be made in existing law.

In view of the fact that we have been rather unsuccessful in getting voluntary action along this line from the committees, after months of labor and consultation with Members of the House and the legislative council and the parliamentary clerk, I drafted a new rule which I am going to read. It is short. I do not intend to comment upon it to-day, but I do think that it is highly important and would add much to the orderly consideration of bills if the committees were required by the rule to show in their report just in what way the statute or statutes under consideration is or are to be amended. A number of State legislatures require that to be shown in the bill. The State of New York and the State of Vermont at least require bills whose purpose it is to amend existing statutes to show by stricken-through type what is to be lifted out of existing law and by italics or other typographical designation what is to be added to existing law. I am advised by members of the legislatures from those two States that it adds very much to the orderly procedure and the careful consideration of bills.

Mr. BLACK of New York. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSEYER. Yes.

Mr. BLACK of New York. The Committee on Revision in adopting the code adopted the New York system in respect to bills. The New York system brings out what the gentleman would like to have brought out. When we amend existing law in New York State by striking out any of the existing law we put the part stricken out in brackets and then leave the other in the old type. If we add new matter, we put that in italics. Everything appears plainly on the face of the bill.

Mr. RAMSEYER. I have bills showing that from the Legislature of New York in my office. I think it is a wise practice. However, here we sometimes have such long bills, complicated bills, such as the revision of the revenue laws or the tariff laws or the transportation laws, that it might be confusing to use only devices followed by the Legislatures of New York and Vermont. So my rule is drawn so broad as to take care of every situation that may arise in committees of the House.

Let me read this proposed rule:

House Resolution 164

Resolved, That Rule XVIII of the Rules of the House of Representatives be amended by inserting a new paragraph following paragraph 2, which shall be known as paragraph 3 and shall read as follows:

"3. Whenever a committee reports a bill or a joint resolution repealing or amending any statute or portion thereof it shall include in its report or in an accompanying document—

"(1) The text of the statute or part thereof which is proposed to be repealed; and

"(2) A comparative print of the bill and of the statute or part thereof proposed to be amended, showing by stricken-through type and italics, parallel columns, or other appropriate typographical devices the omissions and insertions proposed to be made."

I introduced this resolution on April 13, 1928, about a month ago. I have not pressed it before the Committee on Rules, but I think that either in the closing days of this session or at the opening days of the next session I shall insist on the consideration of the proposed rule by the Committee on Rules. I am simply calling attention to it now, so that Members of the House who are listening to me may think about it, and if they have any suggestions to make in regard to the proposal I wish they would submit them to me.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSEYER. Yes.

Mr. ABERNETHY. I notice that this is a bill of some length. Could the gentleman give the House in concrete form just what changes have been made?

Mr. RAMSEYER. That will be done in general debate by members of the committee who have had that matter under consideration for years.

Mr. KINDRED. I notice in the minority views that they discuss at some length what seemingly is a deficit in the operation of this corporation.

Mr. RAMSEYER. If the gentleman's question goes to the bill, I wish he would withhold it until the Members discuss it in general debate.

Mr. KINDRED. Very well.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the remainder of my time and yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD].

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I regard this piece of legislation presented here by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce as one of the most important pieces of legislation that we have considered at this or any other session of Congress. It relates to a question of supreme importance to all interests in that section of the country where the streams are upon which these barge lines are to be operated. As will be pointed out to you by the members of the committee in general discussion of the bill, it is a matter of particular importance to the agricultural interests of the great Mississippi Valley and the Northwestern States.

This barge-line system, as most of you know, came into the hands of the Government for Government operation as a result of the return of the railroad companies of the country to private operation after the World War. Under the general provisions of the railroad transportation act, which was in effect during the war, the Government took over and undertook to operate the very inadequate facilities that were in hand for the operation of inland water transportation. It was, of course, totally inadequate for any real experiment or for any effectual use; but when we came to turn the railroads back this surplus waterway property was found in the control of the Government, and in the wisdom of Congress it was determined to make an experiment in the nature of Government operation of these inland waterways facilities, which the Government owned. A Government-owned corporation was formed with a capital stock of $5,000,000, and the operation of the barge-line system was put under the control of the War Department. With the facilities they had in hand—crude, meager, inadequate—the War Department made a remarkable showing under the adverse circumstances of a temporary operation of this waterway system.

The experiment thus far made by the Government has been sufficient to show that if you will give to this inland waterway transportation an additional appropriation of $10,000,000 for the purpose of providing adequate facilities for transportation, this proposal can be converted under Government operation, if you please, into one of the greatest advantages we have ever had, particularly to the agricultural interests of the Mississippi Valley as well as to the commercial interests to some other sections of the country. The evidence before the committee, as it will be presented to you, will show that by virtue of the competitive freight facilities offered by this inland waterway transportation the average freight cost on each bushel of wheat raised in that great section of the country contiguous to the Mississippi and its tributaries is actually reduced by from 2 to 3 and more cents on every bushel of wheat, and the farmer saves that much on every bushel; and the evidence is that that benefit actually goes back into the pockets and the profits of the farmer.

I have forgotten the exact figures, but they will be presented to you later. They will largely show that by the operation of this barge-line system there is saved to the shippers of the country through this competitive system in actual freight rates many millions of dollars to the producers and business interests of the country.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Will the gentleman tell me whether or not the area to be served by this barge line has been increased by this bill, or is it still confined to the Mississippi River?

Mr. BANKHEAD. No. That is one of the main features of the bill. Not only the Warrior River and the lower Mississippi to New Orleans are involved, but under contemplation is the improvement of the upper Mississippi tributaries as far as Minnesota; and in that great reach of northwest territory as soon as we have spent the money we are now spending to make those streams navigable these barge-line facilities will be made available.

Mr. ABERNETHY. I will say to the gentleman that I will support the gentleman's bill——

Mr. BANKHEAD. It is not my bill.

Mr. ABERNETHY. I will support it because it favors the gentleman's section, but I do want to say for the benefit of the gentleman from Alabama and of the country that General Ashburn, the man who is back of this legislation, allowed the transportation to be taken off the inland waterway from Baltimore to the South, and he has done nothing to restore it. Now, you are extending it there, and we are spending millions of dollars on the inland waterways of the Atlantic coast, and you are asking to have $5,000,000 more for this corporation of General Ashburn's, and yet you are doing nothing to restore the waterway that he caused to be abandoned.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Right there, I do not think General Ashburn has had anything to do with that.

Mr. ABERNETHY. He has had all to do with it. I have a record here that I do not want to bring into this debate, but I think this matter should be investigated before we spend $5,000,000 more. He allowed a barge line to be destroyed on the inland waterways.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. I think the gentleman is doing General Ashburn a great injustice.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am not familiar with the controversy; but, be it as it may, I do not think it should be used to retard this enterprise for the benefit of the country.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Is it not true that this transportation was taken away, as indicated by the gentleman from North Carolina, at the request of the local people down there?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do not wish that our attention to the merits of the bill should be diverted by an outside issue. The gentleman from North Carolina can raise the issue at another time or place, or possibly by an amendment to this bill, if it is germane. I am in sympathy with the gentleman in the loss of his transportation facilities if they were improperly taken away from him.

Mr. NELSON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes.

Mr. NELSON of Missouri. I understood that the statement was made that the establishment of the barge line would mean a saving of 2 or 3 cents a bushel on wheat?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes.

Mr. NELSON of Missouri. In speaking at Kansas City, at the great meeting we had three years ago, Mr. Hoover, the Secretary of Commerce, said it would make a saving of 7 cents a bushel.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is a remarkable statement which is now put in the RECORD by the gentleman from Missouri, and if it is true—and I have no doubt it is true if he states it after examination—you can see what a tremendous saving there will be on the transportation of these agricultural products.

Mr. NEWTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes.

Mr. NEWTON. I will say to the gentleman that would be the case in wheat originating in the northern part of the country. Transportation by way of the river would mean a saving of about 9 cents.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. BANKHEAD. May I have two minutes more?

Mr. RAMSEYER. I yield to the gentleman two minutes more.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I did not intend really to undertake to discuss the merits of this proposal. I am sure, if you will listen to the statements concerning this proposal, you will be convinced that with this expenditure, with a small amount of Government credit, a tremendous advantage will be given to the business interests of that section of the country, and it will demonstrate that Government operation of a utility, at least temporarily, if properly exercised, can be effectively and successfully accomplished, because they are already making profits to the Government by this proposal. It will also demonstrate that if the time ever comes when it will be feasible and proper for the public interest, this barge-line system can be taken over by private enterprise and successfully operated as public carriers.

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes.

Mr. WRIGHT. What streams are affected by this barge line?

Mr. BANKHEAD. The principal streams at the present time are the Warrior River and the Alabama River in Alabama. I will ask my colleague Mr. MCDUFFIE what is the canal between the Warrior and New Orleans?

Mr. MCDUFFIE. The Mississippi proper, from Mobile and New Orleans. It is called the Mississippi Sound and Lake Ponchartrain. The other rivers are the Tombigbee and Warrior, and then on the Mississippi from St. Paul down to New Orleans.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes. And it is extended to the lower Mississippi and its tributaries.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13512) to amend the act entitled "An act to create the Inland Waterways Corporation for the purpose of carrying out the mandate and purpose of Congress, as expressed in sections 201 and 500 of the transportation act, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1924.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 13512. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

Mr. PARKER. Pending that motion, and before going into committee, Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a unanimous-consent agreement as to the division of time. I propose one hour to a side, half of the time to be controlled by myself and one-half to be controlled by the gentleman from Connecticut, in opposition to the bill. The only Member in opposition is the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MERRITT].

Mr. EDWARDS. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, how long does the gentleman expect to run this afternoon?

Mr. PARKER. We hope to finish the bill to-night. We hope we will not have to use all the time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the time be divided equally between himself and the gentleman from Connecticut, as permitted by the rule. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 13512, with Mr. FROTHINGHAM in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 25 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON]. [Applause.]

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I hope I may have the attention of those of you who are here, because the bill presents legislation of very great importance to the country.

This bill presents for your consideration a very important business of the Government. There is no politics in it. There is nothing that involves any question of constitutionality; it is a plain business proposition of trying to do something to enable the Government to run more successfully a great business enterprise until its purpose has been accomplished.

The first question that presents itself is: What is the Inland Waterways Corporation? I shall discuss that for just a moment and then I will discuss the question of what the purpose of the Inland Waterways Corporation is. Then I shall briefly discuss the purpose of this legislation.

During the war, when the railroads found themselves unable to carry on the transportation business of the country, the Government seized all of the facilities of the railroads. The Government took them over and continued their operation by the Government. Among other facilities that were taken over, were a great many barges, towboats, tugs, and other water craft that were on the New York Barge Canal and on other inland waters of the country. When the Government found itself in possession of all these various facilities the Director General of Railroads appointed a manager to take charge of these water craft and operate them in order to relieve the railroads as much as possible of the extra work that they had to perform in carrying on the war. These facilities were gotten together and operated on the Warrior River for about 440 miles from Mobile up to the neighborhood of Birmingham, Ala.; also on the lower Mississippi from St. Louis to New Orleans. The manager who was operating under the Director General of Railroads did the best he could during the war period, and then when the war was over these facilities were still operated under the Director General of Railroads until the transportation act was passed in 1920. That act provided for the return of the railroads to their owners, and we had to make some disposition of the barges, towboats, and other water craft that were taken over during the war. Section 201 of the transportation act provided for the disposition of these various water craft, and that section is set out in the report in full. It directed that all of these facilities be turned over to the Secretary of War and that he should continue to operate them and carry out all the contracts that had been entered into during the war.

The Secretary of War operated these barges and towboats on the Warrior River and on the lower Mississippi until the act of June 3, 1924, was passed, which act provided for the organization of the Inland Waterways Corporation. Prior to that time they had been operated by the Secretary of War through a bureau here in Washington, but it was found they could not be operated through that bureau along business lines or upon business principles, because it was subject to all the delays and difficulties that accompany any attempt to carry on any sort of business by a Government bureau. So in order to put it upon a better business basis the act of June 3, 1924, was considered by our committee, reported to the House, was passed, and became a law. That act provided for the creation of the Inland Waterways Corporation. It was given a capital stock of $5,000,000, all of which was taken by the Government. It provided that this corporation, of which the Secretary of War is the head, should take over all of the water craft that belonged to the Government; it provided for its appraisal, its set-up as a corporation, and instructed it to continue to operate these facilities on the lower Mississippi River and on the Warrior River. It also provided for the operation of a system of barges on the upper Mississippi from St. Louis to St. Paul and Minneapolis.

Now, before that time it had been operated at a loss. The facilities which were taken over during the war were, of course, in many instances, unfit for service. We had to improve them as much as possible and then we had to enter into contracts for the construction of additional barges and towboats and undertake to carry out the policy declared in section 500 of the transportation act.

Since 1924 these facilities have been operated by the Inland Waterways Corporation on business principles, and gradually the losses that had been theretofore sustained have been getting less and less, until finally the operations have resulted in a substantial profit to the Government, to say nothing of the very substantial savings in freight rates to the shippers of the country.

We have now reached the point where we have to do something more in order to properly carry out the provisions of the transportation act. In my time I want the Clerk of the House to read section 500 of the transportation act in order that the Members may have directly before them the purposes for which this corporation was organized, and also the main purpose for which this legislation is presented to the House. I ask the Clerk to read section 500 of the transportation act.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will read the section referred to.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 500. It is hereby declared to be the policy of Congress to promote, encourage, and develop water transportation service and facilities in connection with the commerce of the United States, and to foster and preserve in full vigor both rail and water transportation.

It shall be the duty of the Secretary of War, with the object of promoting, encouraging, and developing inland waterway transportation facilities in connection with the commerce of the United States to investigate the appropriate types of boats suitable for different classes of such waterways; to investigate the subject of water terminals, both for inland waterway traffic and for through traffic by water and rail, including the necessary docks, warehouses, apparatus, equipment, and appliances in connection therewith, and also railroad spurs and switches connecting with such terminals, with a view to devising the types most appropriate for different locations, and for the more expeditious and economical transfer or interchange of passengers or property between carriers by water and carriers by rail; to advise with communities, cities, and towns regarding the appropriate location of such terminals, and to cooperate with them in the preparation of plans for suitable terminal facilities; to investigate the existing status of water transportation upon the different inland waterways of the country, with a view to determining whether such waterways are being utilized to the extent of their capacity, and to what extent they are meeting the demands of traffic, and whether the water carriers utilizing such waterways are interchanging traffic with the railroads; and to investigate any other matter that may tend to promote and encourage inland water transportation. It shall also be the province and duty of the Secretary of War to compile, publish, and distribute, from time to time, such useful statistics, data, and information concerning transportation on inland waterways as he may deem to be of value to the commercial interests of the country.

The words "inland waterway" as used in this section shall be construed to include the Great Lakes.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. ABERNETHY. I desire to state to the gentleman that in view of the people who are favoring this bill, men like yourself and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WILLIAM E. HULL], the chairman of the committee, and others who have been consistent friends of waterways throughout the country, I do not feel justified in opposing the proposed legislation, and I shall not oppose it. I will support the bill, but I do want to call the attention of the gentleman and the committee to a bill that was passed sometime ago, which was introduced in the Senate by Senator Wadsworth and into the House by the gentleman from New York, Mr. Corning. This required the New York Barge Canal Co. to operate two barges from Baltimore to Morehead City and to Beaufort in consideration of the fact that the New York Barge Canal Co. had been relieved of $900,000. I have great respect for General Ashburn. I think he is a very fine officer, but I do not think that this agreement has been carried out, and following up the situation which is presented here, I want to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that we have a great waterway system from Boston to Beaufort at present and it will soon run from Boston to Florida, with not a single or solitary piece of transportation on it. We had a Government-owned line operated by General Ashburn. It was allowed to be sold and the people who bought it were relieved of $900,000. I can not afford to take the position of a dog in the manger and I am not going to do it, but I want to call the attention of the gentleman and the members of the great committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce to the fact that this agreement that was entered into with me has not been kept, as I view it; but I shall not oppose the proposed legislation in view of the fact that my friends here, who are the friends of waterways and have stood by me in the past, are for the bill, because I believe that when you start in with a set of good fellows on a great program you should stay with them, and for this reason I am going to support the bill.

Mr. DENISON. I appreciate very much the attitude of the gentleman from North Carolina, and I may say that I believe this proposed legislation will do more to bring about what the gentleman wants done than anything that can be done. Let me go ahead now briefly with a discussion of this matter.

Mr. McDUFFIE. May I interrupt the gentleman to say, with the gentleman's permission, that I do not want the impression left that the whole responsibility is left on General Ashburn, who is the executive head of this corporation. General Ashburn does not altogether fix the policy of this corporation. The Secretary of War and the board provided for by this Congress fix the policy with respect to the operation of the barge line.

Mr. DENISON. Yes.

Gentlemen, we have more navigable waterways in this country than there is in any other country in the world. We have plenty of rivers that can take care of a great deal of the commerce of the United States when they are finally developed and when transportation gets back on them, and everyone knows who knows anything about transportation that the cheapest transportation in the world is transportation on the water. The cheapest transportation in the world to-day is the transportation on the Great Lakes of this country. Whenever we can get transportation on our inland waterways the people who are burdened with heavy freight charges will be relieved just to that extent.

I think it is the duty of Congress, it is our duty here, to not only improve these waterways as rapidly as we can, but it is our duty to carry out a policy that will bring transportation back on the rivers when we get them developed.

We have expended in the past the sum of $250,000,000, about, in improving the rivers of this country. Two hundred and fifty million dollars in improving the rivers! What for? Has this been merely an idle gesture? Has the money been lost? It will be lost unless we get commerce back on the rivers.

We have been carrying on this work of improving the rivers for years, and we are now reaching the period in our history where some of them are approaching completion and yet we find that commerce is not returning to them. Now, why is this? I am going to tell you why it is.

In the first place, the lower Mississippi, from Cairo to New Orleans, is about completed. The Monongahela River is completed, and the Warrior River, from Birmingham to Mobile, is completed with 17 locks and dams. The Ohio River will soon have been completed with 53 locks and dams. It will be a canal from Pittsburgh to Cairo, and when this is done the prediction is it will be covered with commerce in a few years. They are now working on the last two dams.

But we find that private capital is reluctant to go back into transportation facilities on the rivers. Why is this? I will tell you why it is. There are several reasons for it, and unless these difficulties are removed they will prevent private capital from investing in transportation facilities and will prevent the return of commerce to the rivers.

Now, what are the things that are preventing this? One is that we have not yet quite completed the channels sufficiently for safe transportation on the rivers; private capital will not invest in expensive facilities for transportation on the rivers until we complete the channels, so that commerce can be transported with at least substantial regularity and safety. Why? When a barge or a load of barges gets hung up on a sand bar the expense is very heavy and private capital hesitates to go into such business until it is assured it will be reasonably free from such interferences.

Now, during the period when we have the rivers practically but not fully completed it has been thought wise for the Government to carry on this experiment in developing suitable types of barges and towboats for various rivers in order that we may pave the way and blaze the trail for private capital to invest in the industry. That is one reason.

Mr. MORTON D. HULL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. Yes.

Mr. MORTON D. HULL. Will you ever get the channels clear so that you will have an uninterrupted traffic?

Mr. DENISON. Yes.

Mr. MORTON D. HULL. Are you not going to have new sand bars forming all the time?

Mr. DENISON. We will always have to carry on maintenance work, but we will soon have it so that there will be an ample channel to permit transportation to continue on the rivers with practical regularity.

But let me discuss the principal difficulty in inducing private capital to invest in water transportation. In the first place, we will never again have the old steamers that could run up to the shore anywhere and throw a rope around a tree and load or unload its freight. The railroads are carrying that kind of freight and will continue to do so. We will never have the packet steamers back on the rivers. We will have to develop and use the new form and type of towboats and barges. Now, we are developing suitable barges and towboats. One of these great barges will carry as much freight as a long train of freight cars will carry. When you couple them up into a fleet one towboat will carry on one trip as much freight as three or four hundred freight cars.

Commerce can be carried and is being carried by the Government at a profit at 4 mills per ton mile. The average rail rate is 11 mills per ton mile. When we get suitable types of barges and the channels improved so as to avoid occasional losses we could carry freight much cheaper than 4 mills per ton mile at a profit.

I started to tell you why private capital will not invest at the present time. The second reason is that when you use barges of this type you have to have suitable terminals; and it requires expensive terminals, terminals that cost $400,000 or $500,000. Mobile has spent a million dollars on its terminal on the Warrior River.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mobile has just completed a $10,000,000 scheme of terminal, and the coal terminal cost about $450,000.

Mr. DENISON. Dubuque, Iowa, has a terminal that cost $400,000 or $500,000; Minneapolis and St. Paul have similar ones costing about as much; St. Louis and East St. Louis have similar ones; while Memphis and New Orleans have larger terminals. The municipalities will not bond themselves and spend hundreds of thousands of dollars building these expensive terminals until they know there will be facilities on the river to carry the freight.

On the other hand private capital will not invest in towboats and barges until there is assurance that suitable terminals will be available. So we reach a condition of impasse where we can not get anywhere. The result is commerce can not return to the rivers, and the benefits of cheaper water transportation are postponed.

On account of that situation the Government is going on with this work. We are going ahead and furnish such transportation as we can with the facilities we have and with such additional facilities as Congress will provide, during the period while municipalities are constructing terminals and private capital is preparing to invest in water transportation.

Mr. CROWTHER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. I will yield.

Mr. CROWTHER. The gentleman is making a very interesting statement in regard to getting private capital interested in this transportation. We have had the same experience in New York with reference to the Barge Canal that cost $300,000,000. We could not get the facilities for breaking bulk at New York and it is extremely difficult to get tonnage on the canal that really ought to be carried.

Mr. DENISON. Exactly. We declare a policy in this bill and say to the municipalities up and down the Mississippi River and certain of its tributaries and the Warrior River that we are going to continue the business of furnishing such transportation as we can and we ask them to cooperate by constructing suitable terminals; when the terminals are completed private capital, we think, will readily invest in transportation on the rivers.

We promise you that we will keep carrying on this business until you can build these terminals, after which time we will dispose of them to private capital.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Is it the purpose of this bill, besides maintaining the ways and digging the channels, to operate the tow lines as a pioneer work and take the losses, but that as soon as traffic is sufficient to operate them at a profit to turn them over to private individuals?

Mr. DENISON. Not at all. That is not the purpose of it.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Is that the result?

Mr. DENISON. No. This bill does not have anything to do with improving the channels. That is a matter for the War Department.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. This is an operating company?

Mr. DENISON. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Is it the intention to operate this company and to develop the trade up to the point where it can be operated at a profit and then turn it over to a private corporation?

Mr. DENISON. That is what we want to do if we can. As long as conditions exist so that private capital can not go into it and make anything out of it, private capital will not do so; it is not business; so there is an interim period when somebody has to carry on the work as a pioneer and demonstrate that it can be done in order to induce private capital to go into it, and if the Government can do that, then the money that the Government has spent will be well spent. With the few barges and the few boats which the Government has been operating on these rivers during the last year we have saved the shippers in freight rates $2,300,000. That represents the actual saving to the farmers and others who are using these limited facilities.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I concede this is a useful experiment, but some of us believe that when the Government does go into this transportation business, which is necessary as the argument shows, that it should continue in it.

Mr. DENISON. There are some who think the Government ought to stay in the business, but there is a difference of opinion about that. I am one of those who do not believe that the Government ought to stay in the business. I do not think the Government has any right in business, for the sake of business. I think the Government ought to carry on this work when private capital can not and will not go into it, in order to demonstrate that it can be done successfully and profitably to the shippers; and that then the Government ought to get out of the business. If we can remove these things that stand in the way of private investment, the Government can depend on private capital to come in and carry on the business.

Mr. MORTON D. HULL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. Yes.

Mr. MORTON D. HULL. We authorized a subscription of $5,000,000 worth of stock several years ago, and now it is proposed to make it $15,000,000.

Mr. DENISON. Yes; this provides $10,000,000 more.

Mr. MORTON D. HULL. For what purpose is the additional $10,000,000 to be used?

Mr. DENISON. This bill provides for $10,000,000 additional for the corporation and that money will be invested in additional towboats and barges. We are now holding ourselves out to provide this transportation and give the people the benefit of it, but the trouble is that the freight piles up on the docks and we have no facilities to take care of it. The farmers in Kansas City make sales of their wheat in Europe on the basis of its being delivered to the ships at New Orleans at barge-line rates.

It sometimes involves great amounts. When the time comes to ship the wheat, and they present it for shipment, we have not enough barges and towboats to take care of more than a small part of it, and the shippers, therefore, have to suffer the loss.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, as I understand it, this barge line is being operated to-day only on the Mississippi south of St. Louis and on the Warrior River.

Mr. DENISON. It is now operating from St. Louis to Minneapolis and St. Paul, as well as from St. Louis to New Orleans.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Oh, it is operating on the upper reaches of the river?

Mr. DENISON. Yes. Through the persuasion of our friend from Minneapolis Mr. NEWTON, who has been very much interested in this business, it has been extended to St. Paul and Minneapolis; and just the few facilities that we have to operate on the upper reaches of the Mississippi have resulted in a great saving to the shippers of the Northwest.

Mr. JENKINS. In view of the fact that the Ohio River is the most thoroughly improved river, what is the reason for excluding the Ohio River?

Mr. DENISON. For the reason that private capital is ready to invest in operations on the Ohio River, and additional private capital is getting ready to do so, and they do not want the Government to come there and operate in competition with them; and we do not want the Government to do it. Whenever we can get private capital to invest in facilities for the lower or upper Mississippi River the Government ought to withdraw from the service and let private interests take charge of it.

Mr. WRIGHT. This proposes to extend this service to any tributary or connected waterway of the Mississippi River.

Mr. DENISON. Yes; under certain conditions.

Mr. WRIGHT. I understand. Why do you restrict it to the tributaries of the Mississippi alone? This is Government operation, and why restrict it to the tributaries of the Mississippi alone? Is not that discriminatory?

Mr. DENISON. No; it is not. The system has from the first been working on the Mississippi River, and some of the tributaries of the Mississippi are more nearly completed than are any of the other rivers of the country; for that reason and because the service can be extended to the tributaries of the Mississippi River in direct coordination with the main-river line, the bill authorizes such extensions under the conditions mentioned. The conditions under which this service may be extended to its tributaries are laid down in this act.

Mr. BRIGGS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. I yield.

Mr. BRIGGS. Reference is made to connecting waterways with the Mississippi River. Does that include the coastwise canal?

Mr. DENISON. If it connects with the Mississippi River it will be included.

Mr. BRIGGS. Does it include that?

Mr. DENISON. I am not familiar with the geography down there. I do not know whether it does or not.

Mr. BRIGGS. It is connected with the Mississippi River and runs on through.

Mr. DENISON. I can only say to the gentleman from Texas that if the canal connects with the Mississippi River it would be included in the provisions of the bill.

Mr. MERRITT rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut is recognized for one hour.

Mr. MERRITT. I shall not use so much time as that.

Mr. Chairman, I am afraid that our side is not very numerous on this occasion. But I think that it is important that you gentlemen should understand what is proposed here. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON] has explained the genesis of this corporation. It came by reason of the war, and I point out to you that it was only under war conditions that the Government undertook in the first place to run this barge line.

It has been the policy of this Government always, or practically always, to spend money for developing the harbors and waterways of this country. But when those harbors and rivers were made fit for navigation it was the uniform policy to have the operation of these waterways conducted by private capital and private enterprise, so that you should appreciate the fact that this corporation, which it is now proposed to expand, represents a new policy on the part of the Government.

General Ashburn testified that the property which was turned over to the Inland Waterways Corporation after it was unsuccessfully operated by the Secretary of War at a cost of about a million dollars a year represented an expenditure of about $13,000,000. Since that time the United States has invested $5,000,000 in the capital stock, and about $6,000,000 in other ways, making up deficits, and so forth. So that, according to General Ashburn's testimony, the capital account of this corporation to-day is about $24,000,000 or $25,000,000.

Now, I do not mention that by way of criticism of anybody, because the original equipment which was turned over to that corporation was bought at the very high prices of the war, and much of it was not suitable, and much of it had to be scrapped. I only point it out to complete the picture, to show you the investment that has been made up to date.

General Ashburn testifies that under the operation of this Inland Waterways Corporation, which began in 1924, making no allowance for interest on this $25,000,000, the operating accounts are about equal. There has been little profit or loss, but it is shown that there is no money now for increased equipment. He therefore proposes that the United States, in addition to this $26,000,000 which the corporation now represents, shall invest $10,000,000 more.

That is interesting and important, I think, for the committee to keep in mind, when they consider the suggestion in the bill and the suggestion by the gentleman who opened this case [Mr. DENISON] that under certain conditions, when the Government has demonstrated that the operation is a success, it should be turned over to private capital. That means, of course, that in order to be turned over to private capital you have got to have private capital to take it over.

The gentleman who testified before the committee and who is very familiar with all the facts stated that at the present rate it would take about 25 years to develop these rivers, and that is reasonable because the project provides for a line of barges from New Orleans to St. Paul on the Mississippi, and on the Missouri up to Sioux City, and on the Warrior River up to Birmingham, Ala., and through the Illinois River to Chicago.

Now, I do not think it will need any argument for you gentlemen to understand that if this legislation is passed and this service is inaugurated, there will be constant demand—properly so, also, if it is started—for increased equipment, because the service can not possibly make enough profit to keep itself running and keep the boats in repair and also pay for new equipment. So at the end of 10 or 15 years, which was the shortest period that any man thought the development could be made in, the capital account would be so great that it seems to me it will be very doubtful, to put it mildly, that any private enterprise would want to operate it.

What are you starting out to do here, gentlemen? You will notice also that the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. ABERNETHY] thought that if a line of barges on the Mississippi River should be run by the United States, then a line should also be run down on the coastwise canal. Of course, that is one of the fundamental difficulties arising from Government operation, that there will be constant demands, political demands—I say it in no offensive sense—because when one part of the country is served, other parts will say they also have a right to be served. If this policy is not so unsuccessful as to be abandoned, you will get the United States into the transportation business on a tremendous scale. This corporation, run by the United States, will be one of the biggest corporations and perform one of the greatest parts in transportation of any concern in the country. What you are starting out on here, gentlemen, is this new policy of putting the Government into the transportation business. I think it is time for us to pause long enough at least to think of what we are trying to do here.

With Muscle Shoals before us to-morrow, putting the United States into the manufacturing business, and with what we have done to-day in the way of interference with the States as to prison labor, we are fast drifting, it seems to me, toward a socialistic state.

Mr. McSWAIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MERRITT. Yes.

Mr. McSWAIN. In view of the fact that the gentleman has referred to Muscle Shoals, I am curious to know whether the railroad interests manifested any opposition before the committee to the creation of a Government agency to operate in competition with the privately owned and operated transportation system ordinarily known as the railroads? I am curious to see the psychology of the situation as to transportation in comparison with the fertilizer situation.

Mr. MERRITT. What was the gentleman's question?

Mr. McSWAIN. Whether the railroads made any fight against this proposition before the committee or anywhere else.

Mr. MERRITT. The railroads appeared before the committee and pointed out certain changes in the bill which they thought desirable. They did not want to be compelled to make joint rates under certain conditions, but they said that so far as the use of the rivers was concerned they did not want to put themselves in the position of any opposition.

Mr. SEARS of Nebraska. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MERRITT. Yes.

Mr. SEARS of Nebraska. We have just voted $250,000,000 to be furnished to the shipbuilders for ocean traffic, three-fourths of the cost of the new ships to be paid for by the Government.

Mr. MERRITT. Oh, no; to be loaned to them.

Mr. SEARS of Nebraska. I said furnished; I did not say how, but loaned, with the suggestion that $250,000,000 more was going to be asked for. Now, the question recurs to my mind as to whether the gentleman would prefer something akin to that with reference to this proposition; that is, to loan money to companies which will be organized for the purpose of carrying on river traffic, and for the purpose of building barges rather than to have Government operation.

Mr. MERRITT. I would very much prefer that.

Mr. SEARS of Nebraska. And would the gentleman favor equal appropriations for river navigation as he would for ocean navigation?

Mr. MERRITT. Absolutely.

Mr. SEARS of Nebraska. I think that would cover all of our troubles, if we should adopt that theory.

Mr. MERRITT. I think the suggestion of the gentleman would take away what to me is the great evil of this operation. I am not concerned primarily with the initial investment, or, perhaps, with other investments. I am in favor of money being spent on the improvement of waterways and always have been.

Mr. HUDSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MERRITT. Yes.

Mr. HUDSON. I take it the gentleman would be in favor of establishing a revolving fund whereby private corporations might try out the success of this proposition.

Mr. MERRITT. Absolutely.

Mr. HUDSON. Which is a far different proposition than the proposition now before us?

Mr. MERRITT. Yes. To men who are so familiar with these matters I need not point out that when the Government begins to run these lines and reach all these points there will be a constant demand for a reduction of rates.

They will talk as they do about the Postal Service. They will say this service is for the public's use and it is not important whether the Government makes any money or not; the thing is to carry these things for the benefit of the public. Then you will have a tremendous number of Government employees, and you know from experience that any Government agency always employs a much greater percentage of men, that they do not get as much efficiency out of them and that the basis of promotion does not tend to efficiency and initiative, as it does under private ownership. This is no criticism of any government or any party, but you are bound in any government-owned operation not to get the efficiency, not to get the enterprise, not to get the invention, and not to get the initiative which you get in privately owned affairs. So I say it is much better to wait and let this service grow by natural economic forces than it is to try to start it as a grown institution by Government money.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MERRITT. Yes.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. How can the gentleman expect it will grow unless it is furnished with some means to permit of its growth?

Mr. MERRITT. The means are the Mississippi River and the channel. There is as much reason why the Government, having dredged out the harbors of Long Island Sound, should not put lines of barges on Long Island Sound as there is for putting barges on the Mississippi.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. If the Government has the barges on Long Island Sound and wants to extend the business and the business is to grow, how can it grow unless somebody supplies it with the means to furnish the wherewithal for the growth?

Mr. MERRITT. The gentleman will notice that this project is to improve any tributary on the Mississippi, as this clause from the bill will show:

(b) When the improvement of any tributary or connecting waterway of the Mississippi River, not including the Ohio River, shall have been advanced to the point where within two years thereafter there will have been substantially completed a sufficient and dependable channel for the safe operation of suitable barges and towboats thereon; and when the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army shall certify that fact to the Secretary of War, the Secretary of War shall thereupon cause a survey of such tributary or connecting waterway to be made for the purpose of ascertaining the amount of traffic, the terminal facilities, and the through routes and joint tariff arrangements with connecting carriers, that are or will, within such years, probably be available on such tributary or connecting waterway. As soon thereafter as such survey shall have been completed and a sufficient and dependable channel for the safe operation of suitable barges and towboats shall have been substantially completed, the Secretary of War may, if he finds from such survey that water transportation can, in the public interest, be successfully operated on such tributary or connecting waterway, extend the service of the Inland Waterways Corporation thereon as soon as the corporation shall have suitable facilities available therefor.

The reason they did not include the Ohio River is because, owing to the improvement of the Ohio River, a tremendous private business has already developed. The business on that river now from Pittsburgh is tremendous. It is not a common carrier business, it is true, but it is also true that when the final locks are completed it is certain there will be a carrier business developed on that river.

As I say, the promise is held out and the statement is made, and I do not doubt honestly, that these gentlemen who are developing this enterprise desire that private capital shall get control of it; but you will notice in the majority report what is necessary before the Secretary can lease or sell the transportation facilities. The report states on page 4:

These conditions are: (1) When the Secretary of War shall find that navigable channels are substantially available in the rivers where the corporation operates, adequate for reasonably dependable transportation service thereon; (2) when the Secretary of War finds that adequate terminals for joint rail and water service are substantially available on such rivers; (3) when the Interstate Commerce Commission finds and reports to the Secretary of War that such through routes and joint tariffs with rail carriers have been published and filed under the provisions of the interstate commerce act as will make generally available the privileges of joint rail and water transportation upon terms reasonably fair to both rail and water carriers; and (4) when the President approves such lease or sale.

Now, it is perfectly evident this is going to take years. The testimony shows that the lowest estimate is 10 or 15 years. At the end of this time, of course, you will have an enormous capital investment, and, as I suggested before, you will have a wide connection with all the towns and villages along the river and you will have an army of Government employees. You will have political forces of one sort or another intertwining over the entire Mississippi Valley. I am not a good prophet, but I prophesy that if the Government once starts in this business it will never get out of it, and I think it will be such a great corporation that it will seriously interfere with the structure of this Government.

I do not want to take any further time, because I do not mean to criticize the bill. I think if the project is to be carried out the bill is a good one, but my objection is to the great tendencies at present in this Government and to the tremendous expense involved.

I remember, and many of you gentlemen remember, the great hue and cry that was made years ago when we had a billion-dollar Congress; but in this Congress lately it seems to me we are disposing of about a billion dollars a week, and to use a slang phrase, we make that old billion-dollar Congress look like thirty cents.

There must come a time when we will have to regard Government expenses and Government commitments, and for this reason I think we should pause and not push this bill through and not involve the Government in this great transportation enterprise from which it will never emerge. [Applause.]

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, we have had one speech for the bill and one against it. The majority of the committee seem to be very much in favor of the bill and there is very little opposition, with all due respect to the gentleman from Connecticut. I ask unanimous consent that the rest of the general debate be dispensed with and that gentlemen be allowed one day in which to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. NELSON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on this bill and to include a brief article from the Post-Despatch of St. Louis showing the potential tonnage on the Missouri River.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. NELSON]?

There was no objection.

Mr. NELSON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, a bill reported from the Flood Control Committee, of which I am a member, and carrying an appropriation of $325,000,000, has just been passed by Congress and approved by the President. That measure is designed to make the Mississippi River and its tributaries safe. The bill now under consideration is to provide an additional appropriation of $10,000,000 for the Inland Waterways Corporation and so make a larger part of the Mississippi and its tributaries serviceable.

The Missouri farmer, in common with the farmers of other States which constitute the great grain and meat producing center of the Nation, is at a disadvantage because of long hauls and high freight rates. This handicap is partially offset by the productivity of the soil and the high degree of intelligence of those who till it. But a fertile soil well tilled will not in itself suffice. Prosperity is measured by the purchasing power of the profit. Where too large a per cent of the receipts represented in the sale of farm produce goes to pay transportation charges the profit is reduced and in some instances entirely wiped out. So the farmer is interested in reasonable freight rates. This is true also of the manufacturer, the merchant, and almost everybody else. But because farm produce is bulky and represents, in the main, the raw rather than the finished product, the freight bill is necessarily big.

Now, whatever will move the farm nearer to the market will help. In this farm "moving" we take into consideration the use of railways, highways, and waterways. Good transportation facilities, where it is possible for the farmer to make use of them, actually take the farm closer to the city and thus reduce the cost of the haul. As this cost is lowered, the distance, relatively speaking, between the point of produce and the sale, is decreased. In other words, whatever makes for lower transportation rates, provided they insure reasonable returns to those supplying same, helps both producer and consumer. This bill represents real farm aid. It is also industrial aid. In its passage city and country should cooperate.

The eighth Missouri district, which I serve, has long played an important part in transportation. Into it come the Old Trails Road, traversed by Daniel Boone; and here too, the Santa Fe Trail, stretching away 700 miles to the southwest, had its beginning. More than a hundred years ago the first steamboat came up the Missouri River as far as Boonville, and in later years the Missouri became a great carrier of commerce. With the extensive work now being done between St. Louis and Kansas City it is hoped that within two years river transportation may be restored. I would make it plain that this would not represent the return of the old-fashioned, picturesque steamboats. This has gone from the river forever. Instead, there will be business-like barges carrying in small groups entire train loads of freight.

Just here let me say that in a recent survey made to determine the probable amount of freight available, Jefferson City with 48,547 tons and Boonville with 57,255 tons show the largest estimated business between St. Louis and Kansas City. These towns are thoroughly awake to the importance of river traffic. At Boonville, especially, much excellent work in behalf of bringing about a thorough understanding of river possibilities has been done by O. F. Kelley, an enthusiastic river supporter. Missouri has long been referred to as the "Steamboat State," so that her interest in river traffic is not new.

Speaking before the Missouri River Improvement Conference held at Kansas City in October, 1925, Secretary of Commerce Hoover said:

We must plan and provide greatly increased transportation facilities for the forty millions added population that we must serve within the next quarter of a century. And if our conceptions be broad enough and big enough we shall find in our inland waterways a measure of forward action to the solution of all these problems.

Speaking further of the Mississippi system with its possible 9,000 miles of trunk lines and feeders, Mr. Hoover said:

This transportation system will greatly serve the vast heart of American agriculture. In this conception your project for the further improvement of the Missouri between St. Louis and Kansas City has a most important setting.

One of the most significant statements made by the Secretary of Commerce in the address referred to had to do with the comparative cost of water-borne wheat. The convention was told:

And all these forces and inventions have restored our water carriage to the cheapest of all forms of transportation for many types of goods. Broadly, if we have back loading, 1,000 bushels of wheat can be transported 1,000 miles on the Great Lakes or on the sea for $20 to $30; it can be done on a modern equipped Mississippi barge for $60 to $70, and it costs by rail from $150 to $200. These estimates are not based upon hypothetical calculations but on the actual going freight rates. The indirect benefits of the cheaper water transportation to the farmer are of far wider importance than the savings on individual shipments might indicate. In those commodities where we are dependent upon exports for a market (and upon some domestic markets) the price level will be determined at the point where the world streams of that commodity join together in great markets.

Thus the price of wheat is made at Liverpool and anything that we can save on transportation to Liverpool is in the long run that much in addition to the farmer's price. And it is not an addition solely to the actual goods which he may have shipped to that market, but it lifts the price level in our domestic market on the whole commodity in this same ratio. Thus if we can save from 5 to 7 cents a bushel additional by the completion of the Mississippi and Great Lakes systems we will have added a substantial amount to the income of every farmer in the Middle West.

I referred a moment ago to the official survey recently made to show the potential tonnage available when the proposed barge line on the Missouri River is established. The St. Louis Post-Dispatch of May 13 contains an article dealing with the report of T. L. Gaukel, head of the local office of the Department of Commerce. This is article is as follows:

Hundreds of shippers from St. Louis to Yankton, S. Dak., were interviewed in a two months' survey. The local offices of the department, here and in Kansas City, were the headquarters. The work was done by four agents of the transportation division, under direction of Norman F. Titus, who directed similar surveys on the Mississippi and Warrior Rivers. Another survey has been ordered on the Ohio to determine the tonnage now available between Pittsburgh and New Orleans.

Potential Missouri River tonnage is shown in the report as more than 1,000,000 tons a year higher than the estimate for the upper and lower Mississippi. This bears out the contention of advocates of a barge line for the Missouri, and the views of some practical river men, who have declared that the Missouri might be made the most profitable link of the great Mississippi Valley river system.

Kansas City, with 2,869,815 tons a year, shows the greatest potential tonnage, followed by Omaha with 2,021,455 tons; Sioux City with 1,281,214 tons, and St. Joseph with 1,045,664. St. Louis is fifth, with a potential offering of 656,594 tons a year.

Coal and coke for the Missouri River district is by far the greatest single possibility at St. Louis, accounting for 500,000 tons of the annual 656,594. Both Kansas City and Omaha, however, offer slightly more of these commodities, which are second in a list of 40, with total coal and coke potential estimated at 2,303,044 tons a year.

Grain and grain products head the list of commodities, with a total offering of 3,465,222 tons a year. St. Louis naturally offers only 50,000 tons of this item annually, while the great agricultural district about Kansas City offers 1,259,750 tons a year and the section above Kansas City offers 2,117,987.

Iron and steel is the third commodity, with total offerings of 739,917 tons a year, of which St. Louis offers 54,025 tons a year, while Kansas City offers ten times as much. As indicated, grain, coal, and coke lead the 40 items by a very wide margin.

To again make use of the Missouri River and other navigable streams in the transportation of freight will tend to restore prosperity to the farmer, who for a number of years has been so hard hit. The farmer sells with the freight off and buys with the freight added, so that whatever reduction in freight is brought about, either in what he sells or what he buys, will represent a saving. Nor will benefits be confined to the farm. As a result of lower freight rates manufacturing will be encouraged and our middle western country will be put in a position to compete with the coast country, to which many manufacturing interests have been forced to go because of high freight rates or inadequate transportation facilities in the Mississippi Valley. The railroads will not be injured. More industries mean more people. This means added freight, express, and passenger business. One of our real problems is to provide transportation facilities, waterways, railways, and highways, which the country will demand within the next two or three decades. There is every reason why this bill now under consideration should pass.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I understood the gentleman from New York [Mr. PARKER] to ask that all Members may have one day in which to extend their remarks. I may suggest that to-morrow will be a very busy day on the floor.

Mr. PARKER. Then I will ask that the Members may have five legislative days in which to extend their remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would suggest that that request should be made in the House and not in the committee.

Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York that further general debate be dispensed with?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That section 3 of said act be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 3. (a) Until otherwise directed by Congress, the corporation shall continue the operation of the transportation and terminal facilities now being operated by or under the direction of the Secretary of War under section 201 of the transportation act, 1920, as amended, and shall continue to operate the facilities now being operated or that may hereafter be operated by it under the provisions of this act; and shall, as soon as there is an improved channel sufficient to permit the same, initiate and continue the water carriage heretofore authorized by law upon the Mississippi River above St. Louis.

"(b) When the improvement of any tributary or connecting waterway of the Mississippi River shall have been advanced to the point where within two years thereafter there will have been substantially completed a sufficient and dependable channel for the safe operation of suitable barges and towboats thereon; and when the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army shall certify that fact to the Secretary of War, the Secretary of War shall thereupon cause a survey of such tributary or connecting waterway to be made for the purpose of ascertaining the amount of traffic, the terminal facilities, and the through routes and joint tariff arrangements with connecting carriers, that are or will, within such years, probably be available on such tributary or connecting waterway. As soon thereafter as such survey shall have been completed and a sufficient and dependable channel for the safe operation of suitable barges and towboats shall have been substantially completed, the Secretary of War may, if he finds from such survey that water transportation can, in the public interest, be successfully operated on such tributary or connecting waterway, extend the service of the Inland Waterways Corporation thereon as soon as the corporation has suitable facilities available therefor.

"(c) It is hereby declared to be the policy of Congress to continue the transportation services of the corporation until (1) there shall have been completed in the rivers where the corporation operates, navigable channels, as authorized by Congress, adequate for reasonable, dependable, and regular transportation service thereon; (2) terminal facilities shall have been provided on such rivers reasonably adequate for joint rail and water service; (3) there shall have been published and filed under the provisions of the interstate commerce act, as amended, such joint tariffs with rail carriers as shall make generally available the privileges of joint rail and water transportation upon terms reasonably fair to both rail and water carriers; and (4) private persons, companies, or corporations engage, or are ready and willing to engage, in common-carrier service on such rivers.

"(d) When the Secretary of War shall find that navigable channels and adequate terminals are substantially available as provided in paragraph (c) of this section, and when the Interstate Commerce Commission shall report to the Secretary of War that joint tariffs with rail carriers have been published and filed as provided in said paragraph, the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to lease for operation under private management, or to sell to private persons, companies, or corporations, the transportation facilities belonging to the corporation: Provided, That the facilities of the corporation shall not be sold or leased (1) to any carrier by rail or to any person or company directly connected with any carrier by rail; or (2) to any person, company, or corporation who shall not agree, as part of the consideration for such sale or lease, that the facilities so sold or leased shall be continued in the common-carrier service in a manner substantially similar to the service rendered by the corporation; or (3) until the same has been appraised and the fair value thereof ascertained and reported to the President by the Interstate Commerce Commission, and the sale or lease thereof has been approved by the President.

"(e) Any person, firm, or corporation, including the Inland Waterways Corporation, engaged or about to engage in conducting a common-carrier service upon the Warrior River or the Mississippi River, or any tributaries thereof, may apply to the Interstate Commerce Commission and, upon a hearing and showing as required under section 1 of the interstate commerce act, as amended, obtain a certificate of public convenience and necessity, and the Interstate Commerce Commission shall thereupon, by order, direct all connecting common carriers and their connections to join with such water carrier in through routes and joint rates with reasonable rules, regulations, and practices, as provided in subsection 3 of section 15 of the interstate commerce act, as amended, and the commission shall, in such order, fix reasonable minimum differentials between all rail rates and joint rates in connection with said water service to apply until changed by order of the commission; except that said joint routes, rates, rules, regulations, and practices may be changed by mutual consent of the water carriers and the other participating carriers. The commission shall further require the interested common carriers to enter into negotiations for the purpose of establishing equitable divisions of the aforesaid joint differential rates within 30 days after such joint rates are established, and if the carriers are unable to agree upon equitable divisions within 120 days from date of publication the commission shall, by order, determine and establish reasonable divisions to become effective coincident with the effective date of the joint rates. The commission is hereby given authority upon complaint, at once, and if it so orders without answer or other formal pleading by the interested carrier or carriers, but upon reasonable notice, to enter upon a hearing concerning (1) the reasonableness or lawfulness of any through route or joint rate filed pursuant to such order of the commission; or (2) the reasonableness of any minimum differentials between all rail rates and joint rates in connection with any water service; or (3) the reasonableness of any division of joint rates ordered by the commission under the provisions of this act; and after full hearings the commission may make such order with reference to any such matters as it may find to be proper and in the public interest. At any such hearing the burden of proof concerning the unreasonableness or unlawfulness of any through route, joint rate, minimum differentials between all-rail rate and joint rate in connection with water service, or division of joint rates shall be upon the carrier or carriers making the complaint; and the commission shall give the hearing and decision of such questions preference over all other questions pending before it, except such questions as are given like preference by law, and decide the same as speedily as possible: Provided, That if the Inland Waterways Corporation sells or leases its transportation facilities, or any part thereof, to any person, firm, or corporation to be operated as a common carrier, such person, firm, or corporation shall be entitled to a certificate of public convenience and necessity upon making application therefor; and all through traffic arrangements and joint tariffs with rules, regulations, and practices in connection therewith published by the Inland Waterways Corporation and filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission and participated in by other carriers shall remain in full force and effect between such carriers and the person, firm, or corporation purchasing or leasing such transportation facilities from the Inland Waterways Corporation and operating the same as common carriers until changed by order of the commission, except that such through-traffic arrangements and joint tariffs, with rules, regulations, and practices therewith, may be changed by mutual consent of the water carrier and the other participating carriers. Joint rail and water rates as herein used shall be deemed to include every movement of traffic in which a water line can participate.

"(f) The operation of the transportation and terminal facilities under this act shall be subject to the provisions of the interstate commerce act, as amended, and to the provisions of the shipping act, 1916, as amended, in the same manner and to the same extent as if such facilities were privately owned and operated; and all vessels of the corporation operated and employed solely as merchant vessels shall be subject to all other laws, regulations, and liabilities governing merchant vessels."

The following committee amendments were read:

Page 3, line 2, after the word "River," insert a comma and the words "not including the Ohio River"; line 22, strike out the word "has" and insert the words "shall have" in lieu thereof.

Page 4, line 3, strike out the word "reasonable" and insert the word "reasonably" in lieu thereof, and after the word "dependable" strike out the comma; line 25, after the word "directly," insert the words "or indirectly."

Page 5, line 2, after the word "not," insert the words "give satisfactory assurance and"; line 4, strike out the word "shall" and insert the word "will" in lieu thereof; line 14, after the word "and," strike out the comma and the word "upon"; strike out all of line 15; line 16, strike out the words "interstate commerce act, as amended"; line 17, after the word "necessity," insert the words "in accordance with the provisions of section 1 of the interstate commerce act, as amended."

Page 6, line 1, after the word "commission," change the semicolon to a period; strike out the words "except that said," and insert the word "Such" in lieu thereof; line 2, after the word "changed," insert the words "by order of the commission or"; line 3, strike out the words "mutual consent" and insert the word "agreement" in lieu thereof.

Page 7, line 10, after the word "facilities," strike out the comma and the words "or any part thereof."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

Page 3, line 24, strike out all of paragraph (c).

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, in reading the report of the committee on this measure I find that this paragraph is advocated as establishing "a policy of Congress." Now, it seems to me that this is a very serious thing for us to undertake. It is not direct legislation, but says it is the policy of Congress, to do what? Four things.

First. That it shall be arranged that the navigable channels shall be completed in the rivers. This has nothing in the world to do with the rights or powers of the Interstate Commerce Committee. That is one of the items in the river and harbor type of legislation. Therefore it does not seem to me that this declaration of policy should be in this bill.

Second. That terminal facilities shall have been provided on such rivers reasonably adequate for joint rail and water service. That is one of the direct specifications that will be found in all river and harbor legislation. What is the use of establishing a navigable channel in a river if the adjacent property is not available for landing of the ship or barge? It will be found always in legislation proposed by the River and Harbor Committee at the request and insistence of the Corps of Engineers.

Third. That joint rates shall be established under the Interstate Commerce Commission. I shall not speak on that, because I know very little about the joint-rates proposition. I have no doubt it has to do with the policy of Government that such joint rates should be effective.

Fourth. And that is the one item I think is the most vital to this paragraph (c), and that is that these barge lines shall be operated by the Government until some private company or corporation comes along willing to take it off the Government's hands. In other words, as the gentleman from Connecticut so well explained in the general debate, you are putting the Government into the barge business, running barges indefinitely, and probably forever. It reads very simple, very plain, and very nice; it is to be the policy to run these barges by the Government until some private person, company, or corporation asks to take them over. There is no question in the world about the permanency of our going into the barge business on the Mississippi River.

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes.

Mr. DENISON. I think the gentleman from Massachusetts misunderstands. It says "until a private person, company, or corporation are ready and willing to engage in the common-carrier service on such rivers." What would the gentleman have us do with it? We do not want to junk it. We want to sell it.

Mr. TREADWAY. You want to put millions more into it just as we did at Muscle Shoals. You will be asked to-morrow to add to the $125,000,000 that we put into Muscle Shoals and make it, as we have there, a political football. I have always been opposed to the Muscle Shoals from the very first day I went down on an inspection party and have continued to be, and I am glad that I have. We have wasted $125,000,000 at Muscle Shoals and are asked to put in a great deal more because, forsooth, we want to get something out of it. The same principle is involved here. You are asking the Government not to decrease but to add to the expenditures of the Government in this matter. You have $5,000,000 in the barge system on the Mississippi River now, and you want to dispose of it later on to private interests. To do that you are going to put $10,000,000 more into it, and probably $10,000,000 more after that, and so on.

Mr. WYANT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes.

Mr. WYANT. I was as much opposed to the Government going into business as the gentleman from Massachusetts, but we have $28,000,000 invested in this property. What solution does the gentleman have to offer whereby we may get rid of this and not lose the entire $28,000,000?

Mr. TREADWAY. I go on the business principle in Government affairs that I do in my own business. I may be wrong. If a mistake is made or a poor investment secured, take your loss. Do not continue to send good money after bad.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. NEWTON. Mr. Chairman, the Mississippi Valley contains the greatest potential waterway system in the world. In order to develop it the Government has spent several hundred million dollars. When the World War broke out, the commerce upon these waterways had dwindled down until it was infinitesimal. The necessity for extending and improving our transportation system prompted the Government to attempt to restore transportation upon these rivers. The United States Railroad Administration made a start. A start having been made, Congress in the transportation act declared it to be its policy to develop these waterways. The barge service that was started by the Railroad Administration was transferred to the War Department. What progress was made was slow. In 1924, to further promote this service upon our rivers, we passed the Inland Waterways Corporation act, creating a governmental corporation with a capital of $5,000,000, which took over the Government barge lines and has since been operating them.

The obstacles to be overcome in initiating this service have been tremendous. Notwithstanding this, and the fact that the corporation has only been in existence less than four years, remarkable progress has been made.

The Inland Waterways Corporation is now operating upon the Warrior, the lower Mississippi, and upper Mississippi Rivers. It has in assets $17,000,000. Upon the Warrior River it is operating several fleets of towboats and barges. On the lower Mississippi River it is operating several fleets of towboats and barges. The upper Mississippi service was not instituted until August of last year. They are now operating on the upper river 4 towboats and a fleet of 60 barges. A lower-river barge when filled to capacity will carry 2,000 tons, or the equivalent of 70 box cars. The upper-river barges are necessarily smaller, but they will carry when loaded to capacity 350 tons, or the equivalent of 11 box cars. This service is being patronized by a very large number of concerns. The products carried, and I am including both down and up stream tonnage, are grain, flour, sugar, sisal, burlap, implements, paint, furniture, paper products, steel products, hardware, soap, shoe machinery, automobile tires, hand trucks, radiators, stoves, shoes, coffee, ammunition, candy, chemicals, glassware, chinaware, clothing, and so forth. I am advised by the manager of the upper line that they have all of the tonnage that they can carry.

When it is considered that I secured a provision for initiating this service upon the upper river in the act of 1924 with the assistance of Judge Graham, of Illinois, and that there was not a dependable channel until the fall of 1925, it will be seen what a remarkable progress has been made upon the upper river.

The purpose or intention of those of us who advocated the passage of the Inland Waterways Corporation act was to make this purely a governmental-demonstration proposition. There was no thought whatever of permanently projecting the Government into the business of transportation upon our inland waterways. I want to interpolate here and to again express my own appreciation of the splendid efforts that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON] has made during the several years in promoting the Government barge line. Without his untiring work in 1924 we would never have had the Inland Waterways Corporation act.

We want to keep this a demonstration proposition. In order to do so, we want to make a proper demonstration. That will enable us to get the Government out of the business that much quicker. It was apparent at a meeting of barge-line officials and shippers last August that additional equipment was needed. There was also a demand for extending the service to some of the tributaries of the Mississippi River. For example: The Illinois and lower Missouri Rivers will have a dependable channel in two or three years. The St. Croix River, in Minnesota, and the Hennepin Canal, in Illinois, already have dependable channels. It would be beneficial both to the barge line and the shippers if use could be made of these tributaries. This bill will provide $10,000,000 additional capital to furnish this much-needed additional equipment and it also provides for the extension of the service to these tributaries.

No barge line can live upon its port-to-port business. Generally speaking, neither can a railroad live upon the business that it initiates upon its own line. Joint traffic arrangements between the barge line and the railroads are absolutely essential. This requires adequate and suitable terminals. As an evidence of the interest of the people on the Mississippi River in this demonstration, I want to say that the cities of Minneapolis and Dubuque have already constructed municipal terminals at considerable expense to themselves. These terminals have suitable rail connections. The cities of St. Paul, Rock Island, and Moline have, by popular vote, authorized the construction of adequate terminals with suitable rail connections. When those terminals are completed, the municipalities upon the upper Mississippi River will have an investment in terminals amounting to $2,500,000 to $3,000,000.

The existing law provides for joint rates between the barge line and the railroads. Congress very clearly has indicated its desire to foster the development of water transportation. There has been a great deal of delay, and it seems to me unnecessary delay at times, in putting into effect these joint rates. The testimony before the committee evidenced a lack of willingness at times on the part of some of the railroads to cooperate with this Government barge line. The sooner a joint-rate structure is put into effect, the quicker this demonstration will be at an end. It has, therefore, become more and more apparent to those of us who want to see this demonstration successfully made that Congress must provide a more expeditious way for instituting these joint traffic arrangements between the barge lines and the railroads. This bill does this.

Furthermore, there is another reason. With joint rates, the shippers and receivers in the interior, off the river, get the benefit of this transportation. Without joint rates, they do not get the benefit. Now that Congress has again expressed its policy in reference to this development of water transportation, I hope that in the future we will have more cooperation from the railroads of the country. If we do not get it, I believe that these provisions will substantially expedite proceedings compelling joint traffic arrangements and a suitable division of the rates.

There is another reason for adding to the equipment. Last fall the total capacity of the barge line on the upper river could have been used for the carrying of grain only. The port-to-port rate for carrying wheat from Minneapolis to New Orleans is 14.8 cents per 100 pounds. The rail rate from Minneapolis to New York for export is 37.16 cents. The rail-lake-and-rail rate is 29.77 cents. Note the very substantial difference in the rate. The ocean carrying charge from New Orleans to Liverpool is about 6 cents more than the charge from New york to Liverpool. There can be no question, therefore, but what a successfully operated barge line with capacity for carrying a very substantial quantity of wheat will save the northwestern farmer 10 cents per bushel on all wheat that is exported.

The total tonnage carried by the barge lines operated by the inland waterways has increased since 1925 from approximately 500,000 tons a year to 1,200,000 tons.

To-day there are something like 42 States of the Union originating freight which eventually finds its way for shipment upon the barge line. Something like the same number of States received commodities shipped a portion of the way over the Government barge line. There can be no question but what the benefits of this cheaper transportation inures not only to those upon the Mississippi River itself, but throughout the entire country.

The existing law sets no limit upon the demonstration period. The bill before us clearly recognizes that this is a demonstration and authorizes the Secretary of War, subject to approval by the President, to lease or sell the barge line whenever certain conditions are met. These conditions set forth the policy of Congress in reference to the continuance and termination of the Government's experiment or demonstration. Those conditions are as follows:

First. Navigable channels, adequate or reasonably dependable and regular transportation service.

Second. Terminal facilities reasonably adequate for joint rail and water service.

Third. Such joint traffic between barge lines and rail carriers as to make generally available the advantages of rail and water transportation.

Fourth. Private persons or interests ready and willing to engage in common-carrier service on such rivers.

There is a further restriction on the sale. Any person purchasing the same must agree, as a part of the consideration for such sale or lease, that the barge line shall be continued in the common-carrier service substantially similar to the service rendered by the Government barge line.

Yet these are the provisions which the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] seeks to strike out.

Mr. Chairman, the Government entered into the business of water transportation and came into the possession of barges and boats during the war. It was following the war when Congress was asked to make disposition. We did so, first in the transportation act. I quote from the transportation act, 1920, section 500, wherein Congress set forth the policy, as follows:

SEC. 500. It is hereby declared to be the policy of Congress to promote, encourage, and develop water transportation, service, and facilities in connection with the commerce of the United States, and to foster and preserve in full vigor both rail and water transportation.

It shall be the duty of the Secretary of War, with the object of promoting, encouraging, and developing inland waterway transportation facilities in connection with the commerce of the United States to investigate the appropriate types of boats suitable for different classes of such waterways; to investigate the subject of water terminals, both for inland waterway traffic and for through traffic by water and rail, including the necessary docks, warehouses, apparatus, equipment, and appliances in connection therewith, and also railroad spurs and switches connecting with such terminals, with a view to devising the types most appropriate for different locations, and for the more expeditious and economical transfer or interchange of passengers or property between carriers by water and carriers by rail; to advise with communities, cities, and towns regarding the appropriate location of such terminals, and to cooperate with them in the preparation of plans for suitable terminal facilities; to investigate the existing status of water transportation upon the different inland waterways of the country, with a view to determining whether such waterways are being utilized to the extent of their capacity, and to what extent they are meeting the demands of traffic, and whether the water carriers utilizing such waterways are interchanging traffic with the railroads; and to investigate any other matter that may tend to promote and encourage inland water transportation. It shall also be the province and duty of the Secretary of War to compile, publish, and distribute, from time to time, such useful statistics, data, and information concerning transportation on inland waterways as he may deem to be of value to the commercial interests of the country.

The words "inland waterway" as used in this section shall be construed to include the Great Lakes.

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] voted for the transportation act, and in doing so he approved section 500. [Applause.] In order that we might carry on the business in better shape we passed the Inland Waterways Corporation act in 1924, and it came out of our committee unanimously, with a New England man chairman of the committee. We did that so that we could place this Government operation of barges on a more businesslike basis. I quote:

An act to create the Inland Waterways Corporation for the purpose of carrying out the mandate and purpose of Congress as expressed in sections 201 and 500 of the transportation act, and for other purposes

Be it enacted, etc., That for the purpose of carrying on the operations of the Government-owned inland, canal, and coastwise waterways system to the point where the system can be transferred to private operation to the best advantage of the Government, of carrying out the mandates of Congress prescribed in section 201 of the transportation act, 1920, as amended, and of carrying out the policy enunciated by Congress in the first paragraph of section 500 of such act, there is hereby created a corporation, in the District of Columbia, to be known as the Inland Waterways Corporation (hereinafter referred to as the "corporation").

Mr. MERRITT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NEWTON. Yes.

Mr. MERRITT. The gentleman will remember that in the testimony before the 1924 act, and in the speeches, it was set forth that this was to be an experimental line, with the idea of turning it over to private parties. Is it not true that General Ashburn said the other day that he could sell this line now?

Mr. NEWTON. I do not think there is any doubt whatsoever but that the line on the lower portion of the Mississippi River could be sold to-day. We have demonstrated that that portion of the Government operation is a paying proposition. But the lower portion of the Mississippi River is only a part of the Mississippi River system. In the act of 1924 Congress made it mandatory to establish this service on the upper river wherever there was a navigable channel. We started it last August with a fleet of 3 towboats and about 15 barges. We filled them full, upstream and downstream, all last fall. We have now got 60, and, as I have said, there is more tonnage awaiting us than we can accommodate.

I am surprised that the gentleman from Massachusetts should seek to strike out the section that he has moved to strike out, for in that section we seek to limit the demonstration. We set forth that the policy of Congress shall be to maintain and operate these lines only until certain conditions have come to pass. It is not unlimited, as it is in the law to-day. We have done this in order to meet the objections of gentlemen who do not want to see the Government permanently in business. We provide, first, that there must be navigable channels, and Congress provides for that upon the recommendation of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and secondly that there must be terminal facilities. The municipalities of the country are bonding themselves to put in municipal terminals. Minneapolis has half a million dollars in it. The city of Dubuque, a city of 50,000 people, has put in a municipal terminal at a cost of half a million dollars. That is being done also by the cities of Moline and Rock Island. They have taken Congress at its word, and have gone to work and put in these terminals.

When these terminals are complete, then we will have that condition. Another condition is a joint traffic arrangement. You can not run a barge line or any other water transportation successfully without joint transportation arrangement with railroads. Neither a barge line nor railroad can exist on the business it originates on its own line.

Mr. HOCH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NEWTON. Yes.

Mr. HOCH. I believe the provisions of the law in paragraph (e) will do more to cause private interests to go into this business than any other thing we can do.

Mr. NEWTON. The gentleman is correct. If we had had that provision in the law in 1920–1922, when we first started operating this line, we would by this time be able to sell the barge line as a going and successful concern.

The only other condition is that there be a private party ready and willing to take it over. Of course, the Government is going to operate it until it gets somebody to sell it to. It is not going to junk it. All of these provisions are reasonable.

Mr. SNELL. If you can sell it right now, why not sell it?

Mr. NEWTON. The gentleman does not want to sell the paying portion only, which is the Lower Mississippi. He would not sell this before the rest of the river has been properly developed?

Mr. SNELL. Oh, there is only a part that you can sell at the present time?

Mr. NEWTON. Yes; that is all.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman read a portion of a section of the transportation act. Does he think that that section really commits us to running barges on the Mississippi River?

Mr. NEWTON. There is no question but that it does.

Mr. DENISON. It does not do it permanently, but temporarily.

Mr. NEWTON. If the gentleman will read section 500, along with section 201, with the various paragraphs of section 201, he will agree with me, I am sure, that it does put the Government into the business of operating a barge line as a demonstration proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. CHALMERS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Minnesota may have two additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. CHALMERS. As the friend of water navigation on the Great Lakes, I am glad to say, for the satisfaction of the gentleman from Minnesota and other members of the committee who are here, that our Committee on Rivers and Harbors will consider a project to-morrow for deepening the authorized channel of the Mississippi River in the locality that is to be selected from Grafton down to the mouth of the Missouri, and will report it to the House probably next week. That will make the depth of that portion of the Mississippi River uniform with the 9-foot depth that is contemplated all through.

Mr. NEWTON. I thank the gentleman from Ohio for the progress that has been made.

Mr. HUDSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NEWTON. Yes.

Mr. HUDSON. If we give to this company or corporation that is now operating the barge line $15,000,000, would not that be the best way out of it?

Mr. NEWTON. I do not think that there is a private company that is now ready to take over the entire system. I know we have made remarkable progress in carrying so much tonnage upon the Mississippi River in less than three years' time. Gentlemen, if there has ever been a proposition presented to this House as a demonstration that has shown the progress that this has, I have yet to be reminded of it. [Applause.]

Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON. Mr. Chairman, I am in hearty accord with a program for enlargement and extension of our Mississippi River barge line, and while the district I have the honor to represent does not border on the Mississippi River, South Dakota is, nevertheless, vitally interested in the improvement of our inland waterways. I, therefore, wish to briefly allude to the importance to us of river navigation and making of our rivers highways of commerce.

The broad and majestic Missouri, one of the great waterways of our land, with its source in the Rocky Mountains, divides South Dakota into two nearly equal sections. It is the highway over which Lewis and Clark made their way into the then unknown fastnesses of the Rocky Mountains. Later the early settlers made their way up this river to the interior of our country, and for many years it was the principal means of transportation for the people of that section.

In time the railroads came, and with the low rates prevailing up to the time of the late war transportation over this river became negligible. But in 1920 we returned the railroads to their owners and the Interstate Commerce Commission granted to the roads a very substantial increase in rates, which went into effect in the fall of that year.

My State of South Dakota, rich in natural resources, with fertile and productive soil, nearly every acre of which is tillable, lies far in the interior of our land. We have the long haul for the raw commodities to market and the long haul for the manufactured wares back to the State. The exactions because of the high railroad rates were a most potent factor in the depression that spread over the Mid West in the year 1921. In October of that year I said, in substance, on the floor of the House that these rates would paralyze the agricultural industry, and subsequent events showed that I did not overstate the situation.

Transportation is vital to every community; it has marked the progress of civilization. Along the rivers and lakes and wherever this means of transportation was at hand, there, history reveals, the most rapid progress was attained. I just mention this to call attention to the importance not only of transportation, but transportation at a reasonable rate and charge for the service.

The only hope I see for South Dakota and other Mid-West States to obtain a reasonable rate is by water competition. Here we have this splendid waterway, the broad Missouri, with its tremendous volume of water, ever ready to carry the commerce of our State to-and-fro at a reasonable rate. The day when this river is made navigable, as readily can be done, there will be competition and a general reduction of transportation charges.

The possibilities of the Missouri River as a highway for commerce is beyond one's comprehension. This river and its tributaries is the greatest inland waterway system in the world. One of our Government boards reported that if this system were improved as the board now know how to do it, it would have the capacity of 600 single-track railroads. Think of this capacity for beneficial use!

Touching and serving the very heart of our Nation, the greatest agricultural district in the world, with a population of more than 25,000,000, it would directly affect a hundred million tons of in and out going freight each year. For the more than a billion bushels of grain produced annually in the Northwest it would give to the producer an added 6 cents per bushel, which in itself will run into the millions of dollars, not to mention the saving on other commodities as well. It would stimulate production, extend industry, and make for the general prosperity of all.

The railroads, which are now opposed to river improvements, would benefit by the new era and the generally improved conditions. To my mind the railroads have in late years pursued a short-sighted policy; kept an eye solely to high rates rather than tonnage and volume of business. Let us inaugurate a program that will increase tonnage, and with such increase will come added prosperity to the producer as well as the carrier who will transport the same.

I wish to appeal to my friends from both the east and west coasts. Help us to make navigable the inland waterways of our land. Since the building of the Panama Canal this is a most important and necessary development of the interior of our country. It will add to our happiness and our prosperity and it will be a prosperity you will share. We will buy more of your manufactured wares and we will ship you more of our raw material. The development of our inland waterways will mark a new era in the progress of our Nation.

I hope the program for barge-line service and improvement of our inland waterways, including that section of the mighty Missouri in the State of South Dakota, making the same a highway of commerce, making use of a natural facility that an All-Wise Providence placed at the disposal of those far from the sea. [Applause.]

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto be now closed.

Mr. WRIGHT. I have never made a point of no quorum in this House, and I ask unanimous consent to make it 20 minutes so as to give gentlemen an opportunity.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York moves that the debate on this section and all amendments thereto be now closed. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

Mr. PARKER. I will make it a unanimous-consent request, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the debate on the pending section and all amendments thereto be closed. Is there objection?

Mr. TARVER. I object. There is no quorum present. There are other gentlemen here who desire an opportunity to discuss this matter. I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. FROTHINGHAM, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 13512) to amend the act entitled "An act to create the Inland Waterways Corporation for the purpose of carrying out the mandate and purpose of Congress, as expressed in sections 201 and 500 of the transportation act, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1924, and had come to no resolution thereon.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS—INLAND WATERWAYS CORPORATION

Mr. MILLIGAN. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, the bill proposes to increase the capital stock of the Inland Waterways Corporation from $5,000,000 to $15,000,000. This additional capital is to be used by the corporation for additional barges and towboats that are needed, where the corporation is now operating and to extend the service to the tributaries of the Mississippi River, except the Ohio River, when the channels are completed and sufficient freight is available. This extension is authorized by the Secretary of War, when, within two years thereafter, there will have been a dependable channel completed and a survey shows a sufficient amount of traffic, adequate terminal facilities, and necessary tariff arrangement with the connecting rail carriers. If the survey shows these conditions to exist and if the Secretary of War believes such extension is in the public interest, such action shall be taken.

Operations by the Government can only be terminated when certain conditions set out in the bill have been met, to wit, navigable channels and adequate terminals completed, and there have been published and filed under the provisions of the interstate commerce act such joint tariffs with rail carriers making available joint rail and water transportation on terms fair to both carriers and private persons, companies, or corporations engaged or willing to engage in common-carrier service on such rivers.

These conditions having been complied with, the Secretary of War is authorized to lease for operation or to sell, on approval of the President, to any person, company, or corporation, not directly or indirectly connected with any carrier by rail, provided such person, company, or corporation can give satisfactory assurance and agree as part of the consideration of the sale or lease that such facilities will be continued in the common-carrier service, similar to the service rendered by the corporation.

The bill authorizes the Interstate Commerce Commission to issue certificates of public convenience and necessity in accordance with the interstate commerce act. Also authorizes the Interstate Commerce Commission to direct all connecting common carriers and their connections to join with water carriers in through routes and joint rates, and to fix reasonable minimum differentials between all-rail rates and joint rail and water rates, and to require the rail and water carrier to enter into negotiations to establish equitable division of joint rates within 30 days after such joint rates are established.

If the carriers can not agree upon a division within 120 days, the commission shall establish reasonable divisions of such rates. Any carrier may file a complaint with the commission against such division and have a hearing before the commission, such hearing shall be given preference over other matters before the commission, except those questions given preference by law.

I believe by the passage of this bill we will have sufficient capital and adequate authority for the Government to complete the demonstration of the feasibility of inland water transportation. We have expended about $250,000,000 on these inland-river channels. It is estimated that $60,000,000 more will complete all of these channels and bring them up to where they can be used for river transportation.

This is a large investment, and to abandon the demonstration now would be like building a track and roadbed for a railroad and not provide trains to run over it.

It is said by those who oppose this bill that the Government should not go into the transportation business. That is not the question here. The Government is already in this business. The question is, how can the Government get out of this business? The quickest way will be to successfully complete this demonstration so that it can be sold, or leased, to private capital.

Private capital will not invest in this business until the demonstration has been successfully completed.

The cities along the rivers will not build adequate terminals unless they are certain that the service will be permanent. This bill will assure them of the establishment and continuation of the service.

A few of the railroads have cooperated with the waterways corporation in establishing through routes and joint rates, but a majority have refused to do so. This has been a great handicap, and with this condition existing private capital could not be expected to invest with this serious opposition of the railroad that no private concern could be expected to combat successfully.

The completion of these channels is an assured fact under the program that has been adopted by Congress. When these conditions have been met the Secretary of War, with the approval of the President, is authorized to lease or sell these facilities. I, for one, will be as glad as anyone here to see the time come when we can turn these transportation lines over to private interests with the assurance of continued service.

The operation on the lower Mississippi has proven that these barge lines can be operated on a paying basis. In 1926 the lower Mississippi division made a profit of $519,411.51; in 1927 a profit of $261,436.16. The smaller amount of profit in 1927 was due to losses caused by the hurricane near New Orleans and the excessive flood in that year; also the reconditioning of certain barges and towboats.

The losses on the Warrior division for 1927 was reduced $108,375. For the month of November of last year it showed a profit of $6,181, and General Ashburn predicts that by the end of this calendar year the Warrion division will be on a paying basis.

The upper Mississippi is a new line, and General Ashburn could not give the committee definite information, but was of the opinion that there was a possibility that the operations for 1928 may show a profit.

Under the estimates of General Ashburn these three divisions should total considerable profit for the calendar year of 1928.

This additional and cheaper transportation is needed and demanded by the country. A survey was made by the Department of Commerce, and we find that 7,000,000 tons of freight are available and waiting upon the upper Mississippi and in Illinois. In the Missouri River territory there is 8,000,000 tons of freight available for water transportation. The available tonnage from Kansas City to St. Louis, as shown by a survey made by the Chamber of Commerce of Kansas City, is 5,912,190 tons. This survey shows a tabulation of the approximate saving to the shipper by the use of the barge line of $4,881,405 per annum. Kansas City alone has an elevator capacity for 40,832,000 bushels of wheat. Last year they shipped, a greater part of which went into export, 8,718,775 barrels of flour, all of wh ch could have moved by barge line.

Kansas City is anxious to take advantage of water transportation. They have a fund of $850,000, which they are ready to put into boats and barges and add to the Government equipment for the Missouri River. This month Kansas City voted a bond issue of $600,000 to build terminal facilities. The people of Missouri are alive to the need for water transportation and awaiting the opportunity to take advantage of it. They are ready and willing to cooperate with the Government in order to make it successful from the start.

The Missouri River Valley is in greater need of water transportation than any other section of the Nation. We are a great agriculture district, and are farther from the markets of the world than any grain-producing territory in the world. Therefore we are more affected by the freight rates on products than any other section of the country.

The development of the Missouri River barge line means an increase of about 6 cents per bushel to the producer of wheat in this vast agriculture territory. It means a reduction by at least 20 per cent in the freight rates that are now paid; this reduction will be reflected in the price the farmer receives for his products.

The people of the Mississippi and Missouri River Valleys are entitled to additional and cheaper transportation. These States embracing this rich and fertile area contain almost 60 per cent of our country's entire population. These people produce 70 per cent of our total agricultural products, 45 per cent of our manufactured products, and 70 per cent of our total exportable products originate in this area. In view of these facts, why have not the inhabitants of this vast and productive area a just cause? Is it not wise to afford these people cheaper and better transportation facilities by improving, completing, and establishing these barge lines that will traverse the States that produce 57 per cent of our wheat, 55 per cent of our corn, 68 per cent of our oats, 73 per cent of our rye, and 65 per cent of the barley that is produced in the United States?

I hope you will pass this bill and revive water transportation on our inland waterways that is needed and demanded by our people.

Mr. COMBS. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, the Middle West is in a peculiar economic position. In the very heart of the county, it is less accessible to the markets of either the Atlantic or the Pacific seaboards than are those sections to each other, since they have been tied together by the Panama Canal. The Middle West is a landlocked area, isolated by freight-rate barriers, which not only prevent our industrial competition with the other sections of the country, but impose such a terrific burden upon us in the marketing of our agricultural commodities that our farmer has difficulty in competing with the grain growers of Canada or even remote Australia.

Let us see, briefly, what this barge-line service would do. There are available to move by river transportation almost 6,000,000 tons shipped to and from Kansas City. It has been estimated conservatively that by using the barge-line service a total saving of $4,881,000 could be effected annually in this one section. We would be able to save approximately 9 cents a bushel on our wheat from Kansas City to New Orleans. The seven States through which the Missouri River flows or is adjacent to last year produced 420,000,000 bushels of wheat. At a saving of 9 cents per bushel, the producers or farmers of this area would save, should the barge-line service be available to all, over $37,000,000 per year. At the present time it costs our people 41 cents a bushel to deliver Kansas wheat to Liverpool, the world market, as against 34 cents to deliver Australian wheat to Liverpool.

There could be no more cogent argument advanced for this bill than that it will help place our farmers on a parity with the other great agricultural countries of the world.

Yet the cry goes up from the railroad interests that in so doing we are placing the Government in business and using public moneys to help an individual class. Have the railroads never been the beneficiaries of Government aid? In addition to the regulations of the Interstate Commerce Commission, which fix a rate of return on railroad investment that the public must pay, the railroads have been granted 131,048,444 acres of public domain. The amount of money that has been contributed to the railroads of the country has been variously estimated at from two to eight billion dollars. Nearly all of our railroads were built by the aid of land grants.

One road which has been especially bitter in its opposition to the use of public funds for the development of waterways has been the recipient of approximately 5,000,000 acres of land and has received subsidies, bond aid, and other assistance from the Federal and State and local governments to the amount of approximately $18,000,000. This same railroad now owes the railroad administration of the Government approximately $8,000,000, all of it taxpayers' money, spent and I believe properly spent in the development of our transportation facilities. I do not begrudge the railroads one cent that they have received from the Nation, but I fail to see with what color of logic they can with one hand accept the beneficences of the Government and with the other seek to deny this aid to an equally valuable instrumentality of transportation.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, the President of the United States has signed the flood control bill. It will always be regarded as one of the great achievements of the administration of Mr. Coolidge. It is a great, constructive legislative program.

In the magnitude of the operations that will be conducted under and in conformity with this program even the construction of the Panama Canal must take second place. But the people of the Mississippi Valley must not be misled or deluded into the thought that their work in the way of solving the Mississippi problem is at an end. As long as rain and snow fall from above us on the places beneath between the Alleghenies and the Rocky Mountains and from far over the Canadian boundary line shall we have, in the springtime, particularly, great volumes of water seeking in accordance with the law that governs them the lowest spots and terrain in the journey to the Gulf of Mexico and out into the Atlantic Ocean. The lowest spot is a great stretch, winding its way tortuously, so that at times it looks like a coil within a coil and sometimes like a great spiral, horizontally moving on to its ultimate destination. That is the Mississippi River and all of the rivers that flow into it from east and west and are called its tributaries. In the House caucus room there was exposed by the Committee on Flood Control during its many notable hearings in a great effort to solve the problem a skeleton of the Father of Waters and its many attendants. It attracted great attention because it focused the mind at once upon the vastness of the territory drained by this wonderful system and at once the thought sprang into the mind of the beholder, Why is it that these rivers traversing the heart of the continent are not so cared for that they would make for the support of the greatest water transportation fleet that the world has ever known? That query will not down. Like Banquo's ghost, it will not down. It will be asked by generation after generation of Americans until the affirmative, satisfying answer is given—a complete, navigable waterway covering this tremendous reach of territory upon which will float myriads of vessels, barges, rafts, and towboats that will carry to and fro the commerce of the multitude of people that will increase the already large population found upon the farms and in the cities of the valley.

Mr. Speaker, vast as our imports and exports are they are relatively but a small part of our total commerce, foreign and domestic. And while that foreign commerce is greatly to be wished and much to be cared for, still if the necessities of some tremendous requirements demanded it we could live within ourselves and bid defiance to the rest of the world. Should we ever be pushed to it from any threat from beyond the Atlantic or the Pacific we could, with a waterway system properly developed to meet the great demands that would be made upon it, so arrange our lines, without any great economic disturbance, to live among ourselves. Our domestic commerce would maintain the Republic, financially, commercially, and socially until troubled nights of danger were over. For that domestic commerce, great as it is to-day, may be doubled, trebled, and quadrupled within the next 10 years. For, Mr. Speaker, our civilization will not have justified itself until every home in America, and throughout the world for that matter, is a home in the finest and noblest sense of the word, a home with sufficient rooms to make for that home life which is essential to the life of America. Every home should have a bathroom, be lighted by electricity for heating and cooking purposes. Our waterfalls throughout the country will some day be utilized to make for that power which will transmit electric energy to every household in the Republic. Upon the walls should be pictures that will ennoble the thought of the boys and girls in that home. Every parlor should be ornamented with statuary to stimulate the imagination of children to do noble things. There should be rugs and carpets upon the floor. There should be musical instruments; and upon every table there should be an abundance of foodstuff so as to make for a great, healthy, vigorous America. It should be a land flowing with milk and honey so that its citizenry, men and women, will be willing to fight for it as a land, that they will have an even better cause than now to love for the great blessings that will spring from its life.

The point I wish to make is that our domestic commerce is yet in its infancy and that its proper promotion, particularly in the way of encouraging finer homes, will make for a demand upon our factories that will keep their wheels revolving and humming, making sweetest music to the ears of a vast number of employees who will be happy in the good wages they will receive and the fact that they are adding to the pleasures of their countrymen by the generous output from their mills. This will make for enormous commerce, and I make the prediction, Mr. Speaker, that as a result of the operations of the Inland Waterway Corporation that the day is not far distant when railroads as the major factor in our transportation system will as a result of sheer economic necessity go into the operation of great barges, flats, and towboats as a part of their transportation machinery. It would not be surprising if in the course of years our whole transportation system were not so changed as to be almost unthinkable from what it is to-day. Many bold thinkers already envision a future in which railroads will run at right angles to all of our great rivers and in this altered plan the highways will be made to render a service so as to make for the greatest low-cost transportation system obtainable. The Republic will be driven to this by economic law and as a result of a laudable ambition to remain in the vanguard of the civilization of the present time—

Do well thy work—it shall succeed,
In thine or in another's day,
And thou that lack the victor's need,
Thou shall not want the toiler's pay—

is the stirring thought that has been in the minds of Americans from colonial times, a thought which acted upon has brought us to the wonderful place we have reached. But I say we are still at sunrise. Noon is far away, and we will go on toiling unremittingly so that our children's children will enjoy the fruits of our labors and work for the tremendously brilliant future that lies ahead of them. Yes, Mr. Speaker, the signing of the flood control bill is a great day, but we must not forget that it is an authorization bill, and that under the provisions of another law, that creating the Bureau of the Budget, the Chief of Engineers will submit estimates from year to year for the work that will have to be done and that the Committee on Appropriations will write appropriation bills in accordance with the recommendations of the bureau. We must not forget that this is a world of change, congressionally as well as otherwise, and that there may be attempts made to so amend this great bill as to render its provisions nugatory. We must as watchmen upon the towers be ever upon the alert to not only prevent its emasculation but to improve it so as to make for that waterway system that has been in the minds not of dreamers but of statesmen like Herbert Hoover.

The inland waterway bill does not make for the Government going into business. It is a great experiment, which its proponents know will last as an experiment only for a few years, when it will undergo a change of hands as a result of its successful operation and private enterprise will pay handsome for its then equipment. Great credit is due to the men who have advocated the operation of this line from the Twin Cities down to New Orleans and thence over to Mobile and Birmingham. They have planted a tree which will bear golden fruit.

The territory pictured by me of the Mississippi Valley comprises two-thirds of the total national area. It domiciles over half of the entire population. Its contributions to the national wealth are 68 per cent of exportable products, 52 per cent of manufactures, and 70 per cent of agricultural products of the Nation.

In this territory is contained the industrial center of the Nation, at the foot of Lake Michigan; the agricultural center, near the confluence of the Mississippi and Illinois Rivers, and the center of population in southwestern Indiana, close to the Illinois line.

For this chief wealth-producing section of the United States and of the world, the natural arteries of transportation are the Great Lakes and the Mississippi-Illinois-Ohio River systems, flowing into the Gulf of Mexico.

The Federal Government has spent nearly $430,000,000 on waterways in the Mississippi Basin. Of this, over $100,000,000 were appropriated to the development of the Mississippi from its mouth to the Ohio, and about one hundred million more to the improvement of the Ohio and its immediate confluence. As a result of this national effort the Mississippi is navigable by barge of nine-foot draught from Cairo to the Gulf, and the Ohio from the industrial centers of western Pennsylvania to its confluence with the Mississippi.

At an expenditure of $60,000,000 the people of the Sanitary District of Chicago have dredged and improved the northern link of the Illinois-Mississippi waterway from Chicago to Joliet. The State of Illinois, at the cost of $20,000,000 more, has partly completed and has under construction the continuing link from Joliet to Utica.

In the heart of this system of waterways—a clot, blocking off the circulation of lake traffic from the rivers to the south and east—is the undredged section of the Illinois-Mississippi Rivers from Utica to Cairo. The opening of this artery involves the expenditure by the National Government of less than $5,000,000, plus an undetermined sum of perhaps $25,000,000 for compensating works to maintain and restore lake levels. The improvement itself consists of deepening to 9 feet the two rivers between Utica and Cairo, removing four locks and dams in the Illinois, and assuring a constant and adequate flow of water from Lake Michigan into the Mississippi.

Adequate navigation of the Mississippi from St. Louis and of the Ohio-Mississippi from Pittsburgh to the Gulf and the Great Lakes is dependent upon the construction of this link.

The Government has appropriated approximately $40,000,000 for deepening the Missouri from Kansas City to St. Louis and the Mississippi from Minneapolis to the latter metropolis. The project will change the present 3½-foot depth to one of 6 feet.

Total Federal appropriations for the improvement of coastwise harbors aggregate more than $500,000,000. The cost of the Panama Canal was nearly $400,000,000. These expenditures were borne by all of the people, yet because of the undeveloped link in the Lakes to Gulf waterway, agriculture and industry in this great central empire are withheld from their full share in the benefits of these improvements, and the shippers of this section are forced to compete disadvantageously with those of the eastern centers.

An illustration of this inequality is in the fact that machinery can be shipped from points in the Middle West by rail to the eastern seaboard, thence by water through the Panama Canal to Pacific ports, more cheaply than it can be sent by rail, direct from the point of manufacture, to its western destination.

About 7,000,000 tons of cargo passed through the Panama Canal in 1919; in 1924 this tonnage had increased to between 27,000,000 and 30,000,000. The Ohio-Monongahela-Allegheny Rivers system carried about 38,000,000 tons in 1923. The Mississippi-Warrior Rivers service, under adverse conditions, in the first years of operation transported 4,000,000 tons of freight. In about this same period one railroad operating between Chicago and the Gulf increased its freight tonnage from 38,000,000 to over 55,000,000.

In the immediate territory traversed by the projected Illinois-Mississippi improvement, 25,000,000 tons of freight a year are immediately available for the waterway, which will have an annual capacity of 60,000,000 tons.

The city of Chicago alone uses annually about 38,000,000 tons of coal, with consumption increasing at the rate of 1,000,000 tons a year. Over half of this coal is mined in southern Illinois, within one day's motor-truck haul of the Illinois River. The construction of the Illinois-Mississippi deep waterway will lower the cost of this coal in the Chicago district by about $1 a ton, with a commensurate reduction in the cost of coal shipped by this 9-foot channel to such Lakes cities as Milwaukee, Duluth, Superior, and Detroit. As another indicant of the tonnage available for shipment by this waterway, 200,000,000 bushels of grain are raised yearly in Illinois within hauling distance of the river.

Every congressional district in the States of South Dakota, Minnesota, Illinois, Wisconsin, Indiana, Michigan, Iowa, Nebraska, Ohio, and Missouri utilized the Mississippi barge line during its first five years of operation. The water rates being 20 per cent lower than corresponding rail rates, this barge line saved for shippers, directly $3,392,000—and indirectly an indeterminate sum through reduction in the rates of competing railroads.

The industrial and agricultural centers of the Allegheny watershed and of the South can be linked by water routes with the Great Lakes only by the construction of the deep waterway between Utica and Cairo.

Over half of the Nation's population can secure the full benefits of the Panama Canal investment only through this construction.

The Federal Government, by the small expenditure involved, can enhance immeasurably the value of the $550,000,000 investment in Mississippi Basin waterways, and can give to all of the people of the United States the most comprehensive system of water transportation in the world.

The matter is in the hands of the National Congress, and Congress will answer patriotically with the vision of statesmen. Millions will silently think, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant."

Mr. NEWTON. Mr. Speaker, in the consideration of H. R. 13512, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON] offered an amendment to line 23, on page 4, after the word "facilities," by inserting the words "or unit thereof." Time for debate had been limited. There was not an opportunity for me to discuss the amendment. The intent and purpose of the amendment is to permit the Secretary of War, subject to approval by the President, to sell or lease not only the facilities of the corporation, but the facilities belonging to a unit or system of the corporation. The corporation contains two systems: The Warrior River system and the Mississippi River system and its tributaries. The Warrior River would be a unit under this amendment and likewise the Mississippi River and its tributaries would constitute a unit. The lower river, for example, would not be a unit. It would merely be a part of a unit. That would likewise be the case of the upper river or the Missouri River. I am authorized to say that the gentleman from New York [Mr. PARKER], the distinguished chairman of the committee, is in agreement with these views. This question of authorizing the sale of the activities upon a particular portion of the Mississippi River was gone into by the Committee on Interstate and Foregn Commerce very carefully. The lower river is now a paying proposition. It will be more and more so. It would be a mistake to separately sell the lower river for that reason, if for no other. Furthermore, there is the question of interrelations between the lower-river service and the upper-river service. Some of the barges on the upper river can be sent clear through to New Orleans. That is likewise true of barges commencing at New Orleans. They can at times go clear through to Minneapolis. The committee was very clearly of the opinion that it would be a mistake to authorize sales of parts of the facilities or the activities upon a particular portion of the river or tributaries thereof. By this amendment the Secretary of War is permitted, subject to approval by the President and when the conditions specified in the bill are met, to sell the Warrior River system as a unit or the Mississippi River system as a unit, but not otherwise.

Mr. WILLIAM E. HULL. Mr. Speaker, transportation is to-day the most important legislative feature before Congress for the relief of the Central West.

The Panama Canal destroyed opportunities of the 28 States lying between the Allegheny and Rocky Mountains, because it gave cheap transportation by water from the Atlantic coast to the Pacific coast and vice versa.

The building of the deep waterway between Lake Michigan and the Gulf of Mexico, with its branches extending up the Mississippi River to St. Paul, the Missouri River to Sioux City, the Ohio River to Pittsburgh, and the Intracoastal Canal to Galveston, makes the inland waterway a factor in transportation to compete with the Panama Canal, and puts the Central West on a parity with other parts of the Nation.

The waterways have been established, the projects have been adopted, and will be completed during the next three years.

This bill, known as the barge line bill, is more important to this great section of the country than any other legislation that can be passed. It adds $10,000,000 to the Inland Waterways Corporation for the building of barges and towboats; it extends the service up the Illinois River from Grafton to Chicago and connects with the Great Lakes; it extends transportation through the Hennepin Canal, connecting the Illinois River with the Mississippi River, thus making a direct line from Peoria to St. Paul, or from Chicago to St. Paul.

The most important feature of this legislation is the compelling of the railroads to make a joint rail, river, and rail rate.

By passing this legislation you will put the river transportation on a basis to secure its just rights in the division of rates with the railroads and this will make it a success. I hope that the Congress of the United States will see the importance of passing this legislation.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, the principles involved in the Boulder Dam bill and the Mississippi barge bill are so nearly identical that I desire to record my protest against the passage of both measures in one brief statement.

The basic feature of both bills is the putting of the Government into business, to which I am opposed both from the standpoint of good business and from that of proper governmental functions. We have drifted too far in the direction of furnishing financial aid to business, which is not attractive to private enterprise. There is no more occasion for the Government setting up a corporation, of which it is the sole stockholder, to build and operate barges on the Mississippi River than on the Hudson River, Long Island Sound, or any other waterway of the country. The Government's duty toward business conducted by water ends when it has constructed navigable channels and maintains proper lighthouses and other aids to navigation. To go further than this and establish the Government in the business of furnishing means of transportation is to exceed all just, legal, and constitutional needs.

Elements of socialism seem to predominate in legislation of this character. The establishment of such precedents can only mean broadening the scope of requests for the Government to engage in business in cases where those interested can readily see there will be no financial return to them or to the sections benefited by the expenditure. The line between Government agencies and private enterprise is so distinct and plain that I for one will continue to support the old-fashioned method of carrying on the Government for the people and regulating public service, but leaving the business itself to private enterprise and private investment.

So much has been said over a period of 15 years about Muscle Shoals and so many different methods have been devised to involve the Government in its operation and provide the necessary capital that it is unnecessary to rehearse the arguments at this time. Those who years ago wanted to foist Muscle Shoals onto the shoulders of the Government tried devious and sundry ways unsuccessfully, but eventually, through misconceived exigencies of the war, and with the active support of President Wilson their purpose was accomplished. Since that time the Treasury has furnished $125,000,000 of capital and the end is not yet. We are now asked to set up another business corporation, furnish the capital and pocket the losses, the principal excuse being the needs of the farmer. The political significance of this fallacious argument is perfectly apparent. I am glad to quote a telegram from the type of farmer who tills the soil in western Massachuestts. It reads as follows:

> Muscle Shoals bill in present form not sound business. Farmers here do not want that kind of assistance. Please work to defeat the measure.

They are self-respecting men and women and are not willing to appear either as mendicants or as applicants for charity from the Government.

The Mississippi barge bill and the 1928 Muscle Shoals bill are identical in that they are both based on a misconception of the relationship between the Government and the people. I am opposed to the principle and will vote against the bills and any similar type of legislation seeking to set the Government up in business.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

Mr. MURPHY, by unanimous consent (at the request of Mr. MORGAN) was granted leave of absence, for three days, on account of illness.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS SIGNED

Mr. CAMPBELL, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills and a joint resolution of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 8126. An act to repeal the sixty-first proviso of section 6 and the last proviso of section 7 of "An act to establish the Mount McKinley National Park, in the Territory of Alaska," approved February 26, 1917;

H. R. 13032. An act to amend the act of February 8, 1895, entitled "An act to regulate navigation on the Great Lakes and their connecting and tributary waters";

H. R. 13037. An act to amend section 1, rule 2, rule 3, subdivision (e), and rule 9 of an act to regulate navigation on the Great Lakes and their connecting and tributary waters, enacted February 8, 1895 (ch. 64, 28 Stat. L., sec. 645); and

H. J. Res. 184. Joint resolution designating May 1 as Child Health Day.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills and joint resolutions of the Senate of the following titles:

S. 766. An act to fix the compensation of registers of local land offices, and for other purposes;

S. 1662. An act to change the boundaries of the Tule River Indian Reservation, Calif.;

S. 2084. An act for the purchase of land in the vicinity of Winnemucca, Nev., for an Indian colony, and for other purposes;

S. 2340. An act to transfer to the city of Duluth, Minn., the old Federal building, together with the site thereof;

S. 3026. An act authorizing the construction of a fence along the east boundary of the Papago Indian Reservation, Ariz.;

S. 3365. An act to authorize allotments to unallotted Indians on the Shoshone or Wind River Reservation, Wyo.;

S. 3456. An act allowing the rank, pay, and allowances of a colonel, Medical Corps, United States Army, to the medical officer assigned to duty as personal physician to the President;

S. 3556. An act to insure adequate supplies of timber and other forest products for the people of the United States, to promote the full use for timber growing and other purposes of forest lands in the United States, including farm wood lots and those abandoned areas not suitable for agricultural production, and to secure the correlation and the most economical conduct of forest research in the Department of Agriculture, through research in reforestation, timber growing, protection, utilization, forest economics, and related subjects, and for other purposes;

S. 3565. An act to provide compensation for disability or death resulting from injury to employees in certain employments in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes;

S. 3699. An act for the relief of the land-grant railroad operated between the station formerly known as East Portland, in the State of Oregon, and Roseville, in the State of California;

S. 4034. An act authorizing the Calhoun Bridge Co., an Illinois corporation, its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Illinois River at or near Grafton, Ill.;

S. 4045. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Highway Department of the State of Tennessee to construct a bridge across the French Broad River on the Newport-Asheville (N. C.) road near the town of Del Rio in Cocke County, Tenn.;

S. 4059. An act authorizing the State Highway Commission, Commonwealth of Kentucky, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Tennessee River at or near the mouth of Clarks River;

S. 4060. An act authorizing the State Highway Commission, Commonwealth of Kentucky, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Cumberland River at or near Canton, Ky.;

S. 4061. An act authorizing the State Highway Commission, Commonwealth of Kentucky, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Cumberland River at or near Smithland, Ky.;

S. 4062. An act authorizing the State Highway Commission, Commonwealth of Kentucky, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Tennessee River at or near Egners Ferry, Ky.;

S. 4253. An act authorizing H. L. McKee, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across Lake Sabine at or near Port Arthur, Tex.;

S. 4254. An act authorizing the State of Texas and the State of Louisiana to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across the Sabine River at or near Pendleton's Ferry;

S. 4288. An act authorizing the State Highway Commission, Commonwealth of Kentucky, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the South Fork of the Cumberland River at or near Burnside, Pulaski County, Ky.;

S. 4289. An act authorizing the State Highway Commission, Commonwealth of Kentucky, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Cumberland River at or near Neelys Ferry, in Cumberland County, Ky.;

S. 4290. An act authorizing the State Highway Commission, Commonwealth of Kentucky, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Cumberland River at or near Burkesville, Cumberland County, Ky.;

S. 4291. An act authorizing the State Highway Commission, Commonwealth of Kentucky, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Cumberland River at or near Arat, Cumberland County, Ky.;

S. 4292. An act authorizing the State Highway Commission, Commonwealth of Kentucky, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Cumberland River at or near Center Point, in Monroe County, Ky.;

S. 4293. An act authorizing the State Highway Commission, Commonwealth of Kentucky, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Cumberland River at or near Creelsboro, in Russell County, Ky.;

S. 4294. An act authorizing the State Highway Commission, Commonwealth of Kentucky, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the North Fork of the Cumberland River at Burnside, Pulaski County, Ky.;

S. 4295. An act authorizing the State Highway Commission, Commonwealth of Kentucky, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Cumberland River at or near the mouth of Indian Creek in Russell County, Ky.;

S. J. Res. 119. Joint resolution granting an easement to the city of Duluth, Minn.;

S. J. Res. 125. Joint resolution authorizing the President of the United States to accept a monumental urn to be presented by the Republic of Cuba, and providing for its erection on an appropriate site on the public grounds in the city of Washington, D. C.; and

S. J. Res. 129. Joint resolution to provide for eradication of pink bollworm and authorizing an appropriation therefor.

BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. CAMPBELL, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, bills of the House of the following titles:

H. R. 126. An act to add certain lands to the Missoula National Forest, Mont.; and

H. R. 8105. An act to provide for the membership of the Board of Visitors, United States Military Academy, and for other purposes.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Saturday, after the reading of the Journal and the disposal of business on the Speaker's desk, I may be permitted to speak for 50 minutes on the Yosemite National Park and the Hetch-Hetchy grant to the city of San Francisco.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that on Saturday, after the reading of the Journal and the disposal of the business on the Speaker's table, he may have the privilege of addressing the House for 50 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. SNELL. Reserving the right to object, we have important matters coming up in the latter part of this week.

Mr. CRAMTON. I have consulted with the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON]. That seems likely to be the best place for me to take this time. I feel sure I could get the time on the deficiency bill, but it might be that it would be a drag on that bill and would not be desirable.

Mr. TILSON. It is very important to finish the deficiency bill on Friday if possible. I should hate very much to take 50 minutes out of the time on Friday, for it might be just enough to prevent the completion of the bill. If, however, we have to run over into Saturday in any case, then there will be ample time, and it will not matter whether the gentleman takes his 50 minutes before or after the bill is finished. Since this arrangement will interfere least of all, I am for it on Saturday.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

POST OFFICE NIGHT DIFFERENTIAL BILL

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the night differential bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Speaker, of all of the activities of the Government, the one that touches most intimately every business, every industry, yes, even every citizen of the United States, is the Postal Service. It reaches out and binds 120,000,000 people, spread throughout the vast domain of the United States and its possessions, into a Nation. The welfare and progress of our industrial, commercial, and social life are dependent upon its efficiency.

It is no idle boast but an indisputable fact that it is the best and most efficient service anywhere on earth, and at the same time the American Postal Service is conducted at the lowest unit cost of any postal service in the world. This is so because of the high grade of intelligence, the conscientious zeal, and the intense loyalty among the men and women who make up the postal personnel.

Every day over 70,000,000 pieces of mail—letters, parcels, and newspapers—are deposited in the post offices of the United States. The slogan of the Postal Service is, "Keep the mails moving," and from the time a piece of mail is deposited until it is delivered, it is the aim and the practice of this great army to keep it steadily on the move so that it will reach its destination within the shortest possible time.

Because over 75 per cent of the mail is deposited after 4 o'clock in the afternoon it is necessary for a great many of the post-office clerks to work far into the night in order that it may be properly routed and dispatched on the first train, boat, or airplane that will hasten it toward its destination.

These men are the trained distributors that must learn intricate schemes of distribution involving a mass of train schedules, types of service, and connecting or junction points. Each distributor must know instantly the proper dispatch for each of from 3,000 to 10,000 post offices. He must also enter in his scheme the daily changes and familiarize himself with them. He is examined at least once yearly upon his knowledge of these schemes and upon his proficiency in them depends his chances for promotion or retention in his salary grade. All of this study and practice must be done upon his own time.

Our modern business world demands a 24-hour postal service. There must, therefore, always be night work in the post offices. It should, however, be reduced to the absolute minimum. When that is done, those men who are still required to work unnatural hours should receive consideration in the form of a shorter working tour or increased wages or both.

Private industry recognizes the hardship of night work and almost invariably grants shorter hours or increased pay or both for such work. During the war, the War Labor Board, a Government agency, invariably granted a differential in favor of the night worker. In the Government Printing Office and in the navy yards and arsenals, night workers received a higher compensation. In the Postal Service itself, as early as 1810, an extra allowance was made to postmasters in offices where there was distribution at night.

Regarding the reduction of night work, the representatives of the Post Office Department have assured the committee that everything possible is being done to reduce it to the minimum. Mr. Leo E. George, president of the National Federation of Post Office Clerks, an organization embracing over 40,000 clerks in first and second class post offices, at the hearings on this subject before the Post Office Committee in the Sixty-ninth Congress, said in part:

It is generally recognized that night work is undesirable from every standpoint; that it deprives the worker of his normal mode of living, ostracizes him, so to speak, from his friends and family, and prohibits his taking his rightful part in the social and civic activities of his community; that it is more tiring than daywork and detrimental to the worker's health; that it is less efficient than day work.

We realize that the Postal Service is a 24-hour service, and that therefore there will always be some night work in the Postal Service. We believe, however, that the amount of night work can be materially reduced.

During 1920 the National Federation of Post Office Clerks instituted a nation-wide campaign in behalf of early mailing. Thousands of circulars were distributed among the large mailers of the country urging the sending to post offices of large mailings during the early hours of the day rather than at the close of the business day, as is the usual custom.

The Post Office Department under Postmaster General Hays took up the early-mailing campaign, with some slight temporary success. It was found, however, that such a campaign to be effective must be continued incessantly. Some postmasters have undertaken such a continuous campaign and solicit regularly the cooperation of the mailing public through the medium of circular letters or bulletins or personal calls. Business houses in general, however, continue to send their mail to the post offices at their own convenience, usually at the close of the business day.

The present First Assistant Postmaster General, Mr. Bartlett, has shown a friendly interest in this problem, and under his administration there has been some curtailment of night work. Yet, according to the testimony of the superintendent of Post Office Service, Mr. Spilman, before the Committee on Appropriations, over 60 per cent of post-office work is still performed at night.

During the consideration of the postal salary bill in the Sixty-eighth Congress, Postmaster General New recommended a differential in pay for night workers. In his report for the fiscal year 1925, he made the same recommendation.

Mr. Thomas F. Flaherty, secretary-treasurer of the National Federation of Post Office Clerks, in his report to the convention of that organization held at Kansas City, Mo., September 7–11, 1925, is quoted as follows:

The department at this time is committed to a pay differential for night workers. The views of the department are made known in the following letter from the Postmaster General, in reply to my request that the department recommend a time differential:

OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., April 7, 1924.

Mr. THOMAS F. FLAHERTY,
Secretary-Treasurer, National Federation of Post Office Clerks,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. FLAHERTY: I have your letter of April 3, 1924, asking that the department recommend to Congress the inclusion in any salary reclassification bill which may be considered, a provision for a time differential in favor of employees assigned to night work. This matter has been the subject of discussion and consideration in the department for some time.

While it is recognized that some distinction should be made in favor of the employee whose hours of duty are at night, the question of which of two methods of accomplishing this is the better, considering the interests of the employee and the service, is difficult of satisfactory conclusion in the absence of any experience. It is understood that the two methods—one providing shorter hours for the same rate of pay, and the other, increased rate of pay for the usual period of service—are in use in the industrial world. There appear to be advantages in favor of both plans, but after careful consideration of the matter, I have included in the draft of a bill submitted for consideration of the committees of Congress, a proviso for extra pay for work between 6 o'clock p. m. and 6 o'clock a. m., as follows: Eight cents per hour to employees whose salaries are $2,100 and $2,200 per annum; 7 cents per hour to those whose salaries are $1,900 and $2,000; 6 cents to those whose salaries are $1,700 and $1,800; and 5 cents to employees whose salaries are $1,600 or less. These rates are approximately 10 per cent of pay per hour.

Very truly yours,

HARRY S. NEW,
Postmaster General.

The delegates should consider carefully the preference of the department for a pay differential. It must be conceded that the placing of a punitive rate on night work will reduce its volume because the department, desirous of lowering operating costs, will eliminate much unnecessary night work. But the placing of a time differential will have the same effect. For the department will prefer to employ its clerks for 60 minutes an hour rather than 45 minutes an hour whenever possible, and to do so the unnecessary night work will be eliminated.

Therefore, so far as the volume of night work is concerned, both plans will tend to reduce it to the bare necessities and thereby release many employees from night work. They are on a parity in this respect.

But the time differential has the further advantage of reducing the work requirements for those who must perform the necessary night duties—and we will always have a certain amount of night work by the very nature of the postal industry. A time differential, by reducing the number of hours of work to be performed by those who must toil at night, will to that extent conserve the health and lives of the postal workers and is therefore to be preferred to the other proposed remedy.

I have quoted these statements to enlighten the membership of the House as to the attitude of the department as well as the men involved in this legislation.

While a time differential is preferred by the employees affected, and I believe would be a better form of relief as well as less costly to the department, the House has approved H. R. 5681, providing for a wage differential, and there should be no delay in granting to these faithful, overworked employees this small rocognition for the hardships of night work.

HAVE WE KEPT THE FAITH?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend in the RECORD my remarks on matters of legislation generally.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker and colleagues of the House, the record of the first session of the Seventieth Congress will soon be history, and while the achievements and failures of this session are due largely to the administration leaders, yet we can not escape the fact that the record of this House as a whole is only a combination of the records of 435 individual members.

Our forefathers very wisely decreed that a journal of all the votes and proceedings of Congress should be kept and published from time to time. Later this report of the official acts of Congress was increased to publish every word uttered on the House floor and in committee of the whole by each member, so that all might know the exact truth concerning the official record of each Representative. Thus we have the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, which official report is no small incentive for Members to keep the faith with the people who elect us as their Representatives at the National Capital. The people are entitled to know the absolute truth about the record of their Representatives here in Washington, and every voter should take advantage of every possible opportunity to learn the facts about the records of those who represent them.

This being my first term in the Congress, and knowing that a new Member is not expected to be heard too much on this floor, I have not presumed to address the House very often nor at great length. On the other hand, I have not failed to speak my sentiments on several important matters of legislation pending before the Congress. On January 6, I felt called upon to address this honorable body in demanding a thorough investigation of the sinking of the submarine S–4, where 41 brave men lost their lives. I also demanded safety devices and every possible precaution be made to prevent future naval tragedies.

The late Lieut. Commander Roy K. Jones of the S–4 was reared in Kingfisher County, Okla., the son of Mr. and Mrs. John M. Jones, of Hennessey. And, Mr. Speaker, one of the saddest failures to be recorded against this session of Congress is the fact that no complete and impartial investigation of the tragedy of the S–4 has been made.

A few weeks later I spoke again during the debate on the floor in opposition to a bill proposing to pension reserve-bank officials, some of whom receive $25,000 to $50,000 per year. At that time I declared it inconsistent to talk economy at home and support such measures in Congress.

During consideration of a general bill to amend the World War adjusted compensation act, proposing to eliminate a lot of red tape in the present law and in which was included my bill to extend the time for war veterans and their dependents to file their claims for adjusted compensation, I again took the floor briefly in favor of our disabled soldiers, their wives, widows, and dependent children.

I have supported the American Legion's legislative program, including the Tyson-Fitzgerald bill for the retirement of disabled emergency officers on a parity with Regular Army officers. I made a few remarks favoring this bill.

For several years I have advocated the passage of the universal draft law, proposing to draft money, materials, and industries, as well as man power in case of future wars. My interest in the passage of such a measure did not die after my election to Congress, but I have done everything in my power for this bill. Hundreds have written me indorsing my speech in Congress favoring the conscription of every available resource in case of armed conflict. It is my purpose to carry on this fight for the universal draft law until it is ultimately written into the law of our land. What if such a law should dry up the springs of ill-gotten gains of American millionaire munition makers? It will turn those same streams of industry from death-dealing to life-giving channels.

When the McNary-Haugen farm-relief measure was before this body for consideration, I had the honor of closing the debate for friends of the bill. I urged you gentlemen to support this farm legislation, believing it to be a great step in the right direction. I did not hold up the McNary-Haugen bill as a panacea for all existing evils and inequality of the present deplorable conditions of agriculture, but gave the measure my full support and urged its passage, hoping that it would aid materially in relieving the dire distress of our farmers. To have turned my back on the only farm bill which had the slightest chance of passage would not have been, in my opinion, keeping faith with the farmers of Oklahoma, who have reposed in me their confidence and support for the past several years.

My last remarks delivered on the floor of this House were made concerning unjust freight rates and the Fordney-McCumber high tariff, both of which have robbed the farmer and business man, especially of the South and West, of millions of dollars.

During the Seventieth Congress I have not introduced a great number of bills, but practically all those I offered have received every consideration at your hands.

Among my bills which this House has been kind enough to pass was one authorizing an appropriation of $40,000 for a much-needed dormitory at Riverside Indian School in Caddo County. This school had not been given a new building for more than 40 years. I also have bills pending to enlarge the Kiowa Indian Hospital and Fort Sill Indian School, in Comanche County, and the Concho Indian School, at Concho, Okla.

Another measure of vital importance to the taxpayers of Oklahoma is my House Joint Resolution 267, which, if passed, would compel the Government to pay the actual cost of educating restricted Indian children in the public schools of our State. At the present time there are more than 57,000 Government wards in the public schools of Oklahoma and the Federal Government is not now, nor has it ever been, paying but a small part of the actual cost of the education of these Indian children. I hereby give notice, Mr. Speaker, that I shall continue to press this resolution until the Government gives our people of Oklahoma a square deal.

No more just bill passed the Seventieth Congress than my measure, H. R. 4084, known in Congress for the past several years as the Lawton fire bill. It appropriates $75,000 to citizens of Lawton, Okla., who were made homeless through no fault of their own at a time when the Government was using all of Lawton's water supply. Representatives of the Government, who were negligent, were absolutely responsible for the loss of this property.

This House has been kind enough to pass other small measures for my district, and others are still pending in Congress. For all the kind consideration I have received at the hands of this House I am deeply grateful.

In checking the compensation claims for the disabled former service men and their wives, widows, and orphans I find I have been able to secure payments to them from the Government since March 4, 1927, to date, totaling the sum of $48,135.85, and have many other meritorious claims pending. I have succeeded in collecting many other claims for those in distress, including 14 pension claims for aged, dependent, and needy citizens. Some of those collected have been pending several years.

When I assumed my duties as Congressman from the sixth district of Oklahoma I learned that the Indian Bureau at Washington had been making plans for several months to combine the Indian agencies at Concho, Cantonment, and Colony, and it had been practically decided that the combined agency would be located in another district. Immediately I got busy, and with the cooperation of the live, progressive citizens of Canadian, Blaine, and Kingfisher Counties, who sent in hundreds of protests to the Interior Department against the proposed plan, the combined agency has been definitely located at Concho, in Canadian County, where it is going to remain.

I supported the tax reduction bill, as forced through the House by a majority of the Democrats and Progressive Republicans, to relieve the small business man of unjust burdens of Federal taxation. Included in this bill is the elimination of the Federal automobile tax, which touches not only our business men, but every automobile owner in America. After Secretary Mellon let it become known that the tax bill, as passed by the House, was unsatisfactory to the industrial East in general, and Wall Street in particular, the United States Senate revised the bill considerably and now it no doubt is more acceptable to the whims of one of the world's wealthiest men.

I have openly opposed the administration's war in Nicaragua, believing it is a war carried on at the behest of Wall Street. I maintain that the lives of the American boys lost in Nicaragua are worth infinitely more than all the money the American millionaires have invested in Nicaraguan properties. Many of my friends differ with me concerning this and other matters, but I feel that the people I am trying to represent are entitled to know my position on this and every other public question.

Mr. Speaker, I have consistently opposed the widespread agitation, backed by foreign propaganda, to relieve the foreign governments of their just debts to America. European governments have already been relieved of entirely too much of these debts.

In August, 1927, I was accorded the honor of attending, as a delegate from the United States, the twenty-fourth annual conference of the Interparliamentary Union, held in Paris, France, where I met representatives of 41 nations of the Old World. I was profoundly impressed with the thought that our debtor nations of the Old World are more interested in being relieved of their just debts to America than in maintaining the peace of the world. While I was in Rome a few weeks later a high official of the Italian Government intimated very strongly to me that unless America canceled all of the balance the Italian Government owes us, that country, as well as others, may repudiate her war debts. I stated on that occasion, and do not hesitate to repeat to-day, that if Italy, or any other country, attempts to repudiate her debt, she will ruin her credit, and it takes both money and credit to wage a war.

Only recently the President of France was reported as being very much displeased with the French war-debt settlement and we are told that Congress will soon be called upon, not only by France and Italy, but by all the foreign governments indebted to us, for a more favorable debt settlement to them. Now, we have given Italy 74 per cent of her debt, which she justly owes, and have canceled 51 per cent of that which France borrowed from us at a time when she could not borrow a dollar elsewhere. Still neither government is satisfied and the American is held up and ridiculed in Europe as being a gouger and a Shylock. For my part, Mr. Speaker, I will insist, so long as I am a Member of Congress, that the crowned heads of Europe be given to understand that they will be expected to pay every dollar they owe the American people.

Again, Mr. Speaker, I have vigorously opposed the staggering demands of the Navy Department for the largest peacetime building program in the history of the world. In my first utterance on the floor of the House, in connection with the terrible S–4 disaster, I said in part:

I have no quarrel with the Navy, nor am I a so-called pacifist. I want not only a reasonably strong Navy, but an efficient one. And it is an open secret that we have neither. Yet Congress has been extremely liberal in the way of appropriations for support of the Navy. The other day we appropriated more than $13,000,000, without a roll call, to raise a few guns and repair a couple of old, slow, delapidated warships which would be practically useless in case of war, because the Navy Department insisted on spending the money. No doubt these old, out-of-date, cumbersome ships will be taken out and sunk within a few years.

As a Member of Congress I have supported those measures which I have felt were for the best interest of all the people, regardless of the politics or creed of those who happened to be sponsoring the respective bills. In addition to the important measures already mentioned, I supported both the flood-control measure and the Muscle Shoals bill, believing them to be meritorious measures. Among the other important bills I have advocated and which appears doomed to defeat is a resolution introduced by Senator CARAWAY, of Arkansas, known as the antilobbying bill.

I am thoroughly convinced, Mr. Speaker, that the greatest menace to democratic government to-day is the professional lobbyist. So long as I am in public life I shall continue to oppose these carbuncles on society, these grafters who swarm about the Capitol, many of whom have the privilege of this floor, and employ every conceivable method of influencing their pet legislation for the special interests.

As we come to the close of the first session of the Seventieth Congress I find I have not succeeded in all the matters I had hoped to accomplish. It seems that I have only skimmed the surface, but have the satisfaction of knowing I have stayed on the job every day and have done my very best to honestly represent all the people of the sixth congressional district. More and more have I been brought to realize that a new man in Congress is greatly handicapped. And yet, I have found my many years of legislative experience in the State Senate of Oklahoma of incalculable value to me as a Member of the United States Congress, the greatest legislative body in the world.

In addition to this résumé of my record during my first term in Congress, permit me to say in conclusion that I have been impressed with the thought that in order to be a reasonably efficient Congressman it is essential for one to be a willing "errand boy." I am enjoying my work of doing errands for the good people of the sixth district and the many fine letters of appreciation from my friends at home, especially from those to whom I have been able to bring sunshine to their homes, are full compensation and reward. I would rather have it truly said of me that I had been instrumental in bringing sunshine and happiness into several homes where gloom and despair abounded, than to be known as the ablest Member of Congress or have all the wealth of the world, and yet know in my heart I had not kept the faith toward my fellow man.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 38 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, May 16, 1928, at 12 o'clock noon.

COMMITTEE HEARINGS

Mr. TILSON submitted the following tentative list of committee hearings scheduled for Wednesday, May 16, 1928, as reported to the floor leader by clerks of the several committees:

COMMITTEE ON BANKING AND CURRENCY

(10.30 a. m.)

S. J. Res. 129. Joint resolution to provide for eradication of pink bollworm and authorizing an appropriation therefor.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. WARREN:

A bill (S. 4473) granting an increase of pension to Henrietta B. Doak (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. HARRIS:

A bill (S. 4474) authorizing the South Carolina and the Georgia State Highway Departments to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge across the Savannah River at or near Burtons Ferry, near Sylvania, Ga.; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. DENEEN:

A bill (S. 4475) granting an increase of pension to Rella M. Lasater; to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (S. 4476) for the relief of David A. Wright; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. NYE (for Mr. FRAZIER):

A bill (S. 4477) to amend the act entitled "An act for the control of floods on the Mississippi River and its tributaries, and for other purposes," approved May 15, 1928; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. COPELAND:

A bill (S. 4478) to promote the public health of all who are engaged in the service or defense of the United States in the Army and Navy and all employees of the Government, and to encourage the dairy industry in the interest of the general welfare; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

By Mr. REED of Pennsylvania:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 155) authorizing the Secretary of War to receive for instruction at the United States Military Academy at West Point Jose J. Jimenez, a citizen of Venezuela; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

AMENDMENT TO SECOND DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. WATERMAN submitted an amendment proposing to pay $600 to J. Mark Trice for services rendered to Senate committees, intended to be proposed by him to the second deficiency appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

SARATOGA RECLAMATION PROJECT

Mr. PHIPPS submitted an amendment, intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 4305) to provide for the storage for diversion of the waters of the North Platte River and construction of the Saratoga reclamation project, which was referred to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12286) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929, and for other purposes; that the House had receded from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate Nos. 45 and 50 to the said bill and concurred therein; and that the House had receded from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate Nos. 46 and 52 and concurred therein, each with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9411) for the relief of Maurice P. Dunlap.

The message further announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 7729) to divest goods, wares, and merchandise manufactured, produced, or mined by convicts or prisoners of their interstate character in certain cases, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

PRISON-MADE GOODS

Mr. EDGE. I observe that the Senator from Missouri [Mr. HAWES] is not in the Chamber. He announced to me that when House bill 7729 to divest goods, wares, and merchandise manufactured, produced, or mined by convicts or prisoners of their interstate character in certain cases was received from the House he would ask unanimous consent that the House bill be substituted on the calendar for Order of Business 355, Senate bill 1940, the bill introduced and reported by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. HAWES]. The two bills are precisely the same, and, if there is no objection, I simply ask that the House bill take the place on the calendar of the Senate bill, without any action beyond that. I make this request for the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. KING. I should like to ask the Senator from New Jersey if he can speak for all the Senate as to whether there will be objection to substituting the bill which has just been received from the House for the Senate bill reported from the Committee on Interstate Commerce?

Mr. EDGE. The House bill is not given any advanced status, but simply takes the place of the Senate bill on the calendar, and it can be objected to at any time when it is reached on a call of the calendar. I make this request for the Senator from Missouri [Mr. HAWES].

The bill (H. R. 7729) to divest goods, wares, and merchandise manufactured, produced, or mined by convicts or prisoners of their interstate character in certain cases was read twice by its title.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCLEAN in the chair). The Senator from New Jersey asks that the House bill take the place of the Senate bill on the calendar. Without objection, it is so ordered.

POSTAL RATES (S. DOC. NO. 105)

Mr. MOSES. I submit a conference report on the postal rates bill, which I ask may lie on the table, be printed, and printed in the RECORD.

The report was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed, and it is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12030) to amend Title II of an act approved February 28, 1925 (43 Stat. 1066, U. S. C., title 39), regulating postal rates, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 9, 24, and 25.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 21, 22, 23; and number 8 with amendments so as to make the amendment read as follows:

"That section 202, Title II, act of February 28, 1925, is amended by the addition of a paragraph 4, to read as follows:

"(4) Provided, That in the case of duplications entered as second-class matter when the number of individual addressed copies or packages to the pound is more than 32 and not in excess of 48, the rates of postage thereon shall be double the rates prescribed in paragraphs (1), (2), and (3-a) of the act of February 28, 1925; when the number of individual-addressed copies or packages to the pound is more than 48 and not exceeding 64, the rates of postage shall be three times the regular rates, and for each additional 16 individually addressed copies or packages or fractional part of such number of copies or packages there may be to the pound the rates of postage shall be correspondingly increased over the regular rates."

And the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference have not agreed on amendments 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, and 20.

GEO. H. MOSES,
L. C. PHIPPS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
W. W. GRIEST,
C. W. RAMSEYER,
THOS. M. BELL,
Managers on the part of the House.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had approved and signed the following acts and joint resolution:

On May 15, 1928:

S. 3740. An act for the control of floods on the Mississippi River and its tributaries, and for other purposes.

On May 16, 1928:

S. 757. An act to extend the benefits of certain acts of Congress to the Territory of Hawaii;

S. 2978. An act authorizing the Secretary of War to donate certain buildings to the city of Tucson, Ariz.;

S. 3456. An act allowing the rank, pay, and allowances of a colonel, Medical Corps, United States Army, to the medical officer assigned to duty as personal physician to the President; and

S. J. Res. 135. Joint resolution making an emergency appropriation for flood protection on White River, Ark.

REPORT OF THE DIRECTOR GENERAL OF RAILROADS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying report, referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce:

To the Congress of the United States:

I transmit herewith for the information of the Congress the report of the Director General of Railroads covering the period from January 1, 1927, to January 1, 1928.

CALVIN COOLIDGE.

THE WHITE HOUSE, May 16, 1928.

INTERNATIONAL JURIDICAL CONGRESS ON WIRELESS TELEGRAPHY (S. DOC. NO. 106)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying report, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

I transmit herewith a report from the Secretary of State requesting that the Congress be asked to enact legislation authorizing an appropriation in the sum of $12,350, to pay for the expenditures involved in the participation by the United States in the International Juridical Congress on Wireless Telegraphy, to be held at Rome, beginning October 1, 1928.

I recommend that the Congress enact legislation authorizing an appropriation for the sum mentioned, in accordance with the recommendation of the Secretary of State.

CALVIN COOLIDGE.

THE WHITE HOUSE, May 16, 1928.

INDORSEMENT OF SENATOR M'KELLAR BY SHELBY COUNTY, TENN., DEMOCRATS

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, a few days ago the Democrats of Shelby County, Tennessee, met in convention and indorsed Senator MCKELLAR for renomination and reelection to the Senate.

The resolution indorsing him has been published, and I ask unanimous consent that it may be inserted in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHEPPARD in the chair). Without objection, it will be so ordered.

The matter referred to is here printed, as follows:

The Democrats of Shelby County, the home county of Senator MCKELLAR, indorse his record in the Senate and recommend his renomination by the Democrats of Tennessee for the office of United States Senator.

We take pleasure in calling attention to his work during the present session of Congress as a reason for our action in indorsing his record and asking for his renomination and reelection.

First. His successful work for flood relief in the Mississippi Valley. When others urged a compromise by agreeing that the local authorities should pay 20 per cent of the cost of protection from floods, Senator MCKELLAR was one of those who stood steadfast for no local contributions, and he and others standing with him won the fight making flood relief a purely national undertaking, and to the great relief of the already overburdened taxpayers of the valley.

Second. Senator MCKELLAR was the first southern Senator to come out openly for the McNary-Haugen bill. He favored it when there were few Senators for it. Now he is backed by an overwhelming majority of Democratic Senators and Members of the House. The CONGRESSIONAL RECORD shows that he took the lead in securing the provisions protecting cotton, and his amendments constitute a large part of the McNary-Haugen bill.

Third. He did splendid work for the benefit of the farmers in the manufacture of cheaper fertilizers and for the benefit of the light and power users in the Muscle Shoals controversy. As a Member of the House, Senator MCKELLAR introduced and secured the passage of the first amendment for the development of Muscle Shoals, and since that time he has consistently held that this property belongs to all the people, having been built with the people's money. While the present measure before the Congress is called the Norris bill, Senator MCKELLAR'S amendments placed in the bill constitute much of the completed bill.

Fourth. Senator MCKELLAR'S bill for the construction of rural post roads, not now securing Federal aid, has been favorably reported by the Senate committee and will eventually pass. For 12 years Tennessee, largely through Senator MCKELLAR'S efforts—he and Congressman BYRNS having been on the committee which drafted the first Federal aid to the roads bill—has been receiving about $1,700,000 a year for road purposes. And should this last McKellar road bill become a law Tennessee will receive about $1,200,000 more for roads annually.

Fifth. This year Senator MCKELLAR voted for and supported the Tyson-Fitzgerald bill for the retirement of emergency officers. Laws for the benefit of the ex-service men have received his approval—World War veterans, Spanish War veterans, and Civil War veterans. His vote for and support of the ex-service men's readjusted compensation act has been uniformly commended.

Sixth. Having voted for the woman's suffrage amendment, he has actively supported measures for the advancement of women, intending to carry out the intent of that amendment.

Seventh. All just and fair labor measures that have been brought to the Congress have received his support. Throughout his career he has believed in putting the man above the dollar and believed that those who toil with their hands should receive the equal protection of the laws.

Eighth. In 1925 the Republicans raised postal rates, resulting not only in injury to mail users but in great loss in the revenue of the Government. Senator MCKELLAR'S bill to restore the old rates, especially favoring the 1920 rates for newspapers, the 1-cent rate on post cards and circulars, and a removal of the 2-cent service charge on parcel post, has been reported favorably by the Senate committee, and it is believed will become the law.

Ninth. Postal employees of the Government have likewise received large benefits by reason of many measures which Senator MCKELLAR has espoused for the betterment of the Postal Service.

Tenth. He is on the Civil Service Committee and aided in reporting out the civil service retirement bill, now pending in the Senate.

Eleventh. Senator MCKELLAR voted to deny Smith and Vare their seats in the Senate because of corrupt practices indulged in by them in securing their elections. Even the Republicans of Illinois have indorsed the Senate's action so far as Smith is concerned.

Twelfth. Federal taxes have been repeatedly reduced and Senator MCKELLAR has voted and worked for all tax-reduction measures. He favors the repeal of automobile taxes.

Thirteenth. A short time ago the Senate Committee on the Judiciary reported Senator MCKELLAR'S bill to amend the Federal corrupt practices act by making it apply to primary elections, reporting the said bill without amendment, and, unless this bill is blocked in the House, it may become the law at this session. He has been the constant advocate of honest elections.

Fourteenth. Senator MCKELLAR has strongly disapproved the administration's policy in keeping our marines in a state of war in Nicaragua, in which 29 of them recently lost their lives, in violation of the law and Constitution. He believes that we should withdraw our troops from Nicaragua and encourage friendly relations with Nicaragua. He regards the action of the administration in supervising elections in Nicaragua as unconstitutional and ill-advised, and believes that it is not our duty nor our business to govern Nicaragua.

Fifteenth. Having earned his own way through college, he is greatly interested in all educational matters, and speaks for and votes for education on every opportunity.

Sixteenth. He vigorously fought for the merchant marine bill, passed by the Senate and sent to the House. He believes it is the only way to develop and retain our foreign trade.

This year, in conjunction with his Tennessee colleagues in both House and Senate, he has made a remarkable record for Tennessee, having secured:

An allocation of $900,000 for the building of a new post-office building in Memphis.

An allocation of $215,000 for a new post-office building at Kingsport.

An allocation of $85,000 for a new post-office building at McMinnville.

An appropriation of $75,000 for building of a concrete road connecting Lookout Mountain Park with Chickamauga Park at Chattanooga.

An appropriation of $95,000 for a national park at Murfreesboro.

An authorized appropriation of $50,000 for a national park at Fort Donelson.

An appropriation of $10,000 for a schoolhouse on the Shiloh Park Reservation.

An appropriation of $1,700,000 for Federal aid to roads in Tennessee.

A small appropriation for Smoky Mountain Park.

An allotment of $150,000 for navigation on the Tennessee River.

An allotment of $100,000 for an additional survey of the Tennessee River.

An allotment of $20,000 for forest roads and trails on public lands in East Tennessee.

An allotment of $185,000 for the maintenance and operation of Government works on the Cumberland River.

A conditional provision in the flood control bill for a levee from Tiptonville to the Obion River, which will probably cost in the neighborhood of $1,200,000.

An allocation of $152,000 for a dining hall and recreation hall at the Veterans' Hospital in Memphis. The dining hall is about completed and the recreation hall will be built shortly.

As a member of the Committee on the Library, a favorable report on Senator TYSON'S bill appropriating $300,000 for a memorial to Presidents Polk, Jackson, and Johnson at Nashville.

Under the Smith-Hughes and other educational acts an appropriation of $310,000 for education in Tennessee.

If his post roads bill passes, which has been favorably reported, it will mean more than a million dollars more from the Federal Government to Tennessee annually.

He is the ranking Democrat on the Post Offices and Post Roads Committee and high up on the Appropriations Committee. His place on both of these committees has been of immense value to the people of Tennessee, as the foregoing statement shows. It would take many years to obtain committee assignments of such commanding importance.

Senator MCKELLAR has, in addition, looked after all pension claims and business claims of every kind which his constituents made upon him.

For his personal character and ability; for his unswerving loyalty; for his devotion to the interest of all the people of Tennessee; for his splendid record of service to the Nation; for his being a progressive and untiring defender of Democratic principles; and, above all, for being a real man and a true Democrat, we, the Democrats of his home county in convention assembled, indorse him and his record, and present his name to the Democrats of Tennessee for renomination, and to the people of Tennessee for reelection to the Senate of the United States.

SENATOR NEELY'S MOTHERS' DAY ADDRESS

Mr. MCKELLAR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an editorial in to-day's issue of the New York Times, entitled "The Senate at its best," the editorial having particular reference to the address of the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] in the Senate on Mothers' Day.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE SENATE AT ITS BEST

Many people have an entirely wrong idea of United States Senators. They are thought of as men immersed only in politics or business, caring for nothing except tariffs or taxes, very hard-boiled, and without the finer sentiments which redeem our poor humanity. But where else could such a flood of tender emotion have been let loose as flowed through the Senate Chamber last Saturday in anticipation of the celebration of Mothers' Day? We have had occasion before this to praise the literary accomplishments of Senator NEELY, of West Virginia. But on this occasion he outdid himself. Not to speak of the way in which he ransacked poetry in order to adorn his speech, it contained no end of prose lyrics like the following:

"We laud the virtue, extol the spirit of self-sacrifice, and eulogize the loving kindness of every mother living; and in imagination, with bowed heads, grateful hearts, and generous hands, lay new wreaths of the freshest, the fairest, and the most fragrant flowers upon the graves of all the mothers who have gone from the fitful land of the living into the silent land of the dead.

"Mother's hands made the first dress that baby ever wore. Mother's deft fingers made playthings for the little one that filled his eyes with wonder and his heart with joy.

"A splinter in baby's finger, a briar in baby's foot, or a bruise on baby's toe became an affliction of such momentous consequence that only mother could heal it; only mother could banish its ache; only mother could exile its pain; only mother could smile away the tears it caused to flow down baby's cheeks."

THE MERCHANT MARINE

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 744) to further develop an American merchant marine, to assure its permanence in the transportation of the foreign trade of the United States, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. BLAINE obtained the floor.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. BLAINE. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. I may have been absent yesterday afternoon when it took place, but I should like some time before we enter upon a discussion of the conference report to ask the Senator in charge of the report to state to us what changes were made as regards the Senate bill in conference. What changes were made in conference?

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, the bill as the Senate passed it is incorporated in the conference report except that while the Senate bill required the unanimous consent of the Shipping Board for the sale of ships, the House amended the provision so as to permit the sale of ships to be made upon the consent of five members of the Shipping Board. That change was agreed to in conference. Substantially every other provision in the bill as it passed the Senate is incorporated in the conference report.

In addition to that the House put in further provisions looking to the encouragement of private capital to go into shipbuilding and ship-operating business. The House increased the loan fund, or rather provided for its increase up to $250,000,000, Congress to make the additional appropriation. Under the act of 1920 the proceeds of the sale of ships go into the fund up to the amount of $125,000,000. That is continued in the present bill with a further provision that such appropriations are authorized, as may be necessary, to bring it up to $250,000,000 and make it a revolving fund.

It is also provided that the act of 1920 be amended so as to provide that loans may be made up to three-fourths of the value of a ship instead of 50 per cent or two-thirds.

Mr. BORAH. Am I to understand that the $250,000,000 may be utilized in the way of loans and that a loan may run up to within three-fourths of the value of the ship?

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. Is not that an extraordinary loan?

Mr. JONES. It is, of course, a pretty liberal loan. The Shipping Board is authorized, however, to require additional security if it deems it wise to do it. That proposition was reported unanimously by the House committee; in fact, all the proposed amendments were reported by unanimous vote of the Merchant Marine Committee of the House, and the bill was passed in the House, I think, with these amendments without a roll call or division. They authorized loaning up to three-fourths of the value of the ships, and the loan is made at the current Government rate of interest.

In addition to that there is a provision for ocean mail service under which the Postmaster General, under certain conditions which are specified in the bill, is authorized to make contracts for a 10-year period for the carrying of mails, a postal subvention, and it is hoped that under that arrangement there will be sufficient encouragement to induce private capital to build ships of from 10 knots up to 24 knots and over.

The vessels are divided into seven classes: The lowest class includes vessels as slow as 10 knots and of not less than 2,500 tons. The compensation to such vessels is $1.50 per nautical mile.

Then, as I say, the scale increases throughout the seven classes, running up as high as 24-knot vessels of 20,000 tons and over. The highest compensation is $12 per nautical mile.

Mr. NORRIS. How would that compare with the present rate which we are paying?

Mr. JONES. We are now paying special rates, fixed by the Postmaster General under yearly contracts. A good part of our mail is carried by foreign shipping, especially British. We are now paying millions to foreign ships for carrying our mails. This is in effect aid from us to maintain foreign shipping.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator from Washington yield to me?

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. COPELAND. The proposed rate will not be greatly different from the present rate, but conditions will be more favorable, because the Postmaster General will be able to enter into 10-year contracts. At the present time, under a rider put on an appropriation bill, the contract can be only for the limit of the appropriation, which is only one year.

Mr. JONES. It can be for only one year.

Mr. COPELAND. But the favorable thing about the ocean mail contract arrangement under this bill is that it may be for a period of 10 years.

Mr. JONES. Then the vessels are required to carry mail messengers. There is also a further provision in the proposed act as passed by the House of Representatives requiring Government officials to travel on American ships. This is merely a summary of the principal changes or additions made by the House.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I am very glad that the Senator from Washington has made clear some of the changes which have been made in the conference report.

Mr. JONES. There are only about three changes made in the conference report; that is, the conferees agreed to the House amendment with, I think, but three changes. One change was with reference to the requirement in regard to the crew, and especially as relates to the steward's department. The House required three-fourths of the crew, exclusive of the licensed officers and exclusive of the steward's department, to be American citizens. The conferees have changed that in this way: We provide that for the first four years after the enactment of this act 50 per cent of the crew, exclusive of the licensed officers, who, under the law, must be American citizens—the crew including the steward's department, there being no distinction between the steward's department and the remainder of the crew—shall be American citizens, and after four years then two-thirds of the crew must be American citizens.

Mr. EDGE. As a matter of fact, such a provision does not appear in any other maritime law. I understand that Great Britain and the other countries frequently permit almost 100 per cent of the crew to be foreigners.

Mr. JONES. That is true, and aside from this provision there is practically no legislation that we have requiring a certain number of the crew to be American citizens, except as to licensed officers. Then the conferees omitted the provision relating to the Naval Reserve. Then we omitted the provision under which Filipinos could be included in the crew up to any extent. That was put in on the floor of the House. Aside from those three items, the conferees have accepted the amendment adopted by the House.

Mr. BLAINE. That was my understanding as to the difference between the bill passed by the House and the conference report.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, if the Senator from Wisconsin will permit, I should like to ask the Senator from Washington a question.

Mr. BLAINE. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator from Washington refers to a provision now in the bill requiring a certain class of officials of the Government, as I understand, to travel in American vessels. Was that necessary? Do not Government officials now travel in that way?

Mr. JONES. No; many do not.

Mr. NORRIS. I had supposed that right after the World War, when we had had a lesson in patriotism and everybody was supposed to be 100 per cent American, Government officials certainly would not travel in foreign ships.

Mr. JONES. One would think so; but they have been doing it.

Mr. NORRIS. It really amounts, then, to putting a provision in the bill that Government officials shall be patriotic?

Mr. JONES. The Senator may construe that as he pleases. That provision was put in in the House and the conferees accepted it. I myself think it is a pretty good provision.

Mr. NORRIS. I supposed our Government officials were all patriotic and that they would be insulted if it was suggested that they were not.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Wisconsin yield to me for a moment?

Mr. BLAINE. I yield.

Mr. NEELY. The Senator from Washington has stated that under the bill in its present form the Postmaster General is authorized to make contracts for carrying the mail for as much as $12 a nautical mile. Will the Senator translate that into more readily understandable English and inform us how much mail will be carried per nautical mile for $12?

Mr. JONES. That will depend largely upon the quantity of mail which may be available or which may be on hand awaiting transport to any particular port.

Mr. NEELY. Does that mean that if there should be but one sack of mail to be carried, a steamship may receive $12 a nautical mile for carrying that one sack from this country to Europe?

Mr. JONES. That is possible, but not at all probable. Compensation at the rate of $12 a nautical mile only goes to fast vessels, of course, vessels of 24 knots and of not less than 20,000 tons. Vessels of that kind are going to run between large ports, with large business, and there will be a large amount of mail. As a matter of fact, the Postmaster General estimates that on the building of these ships, because of the development of business, and so on, the postal receipts will more than pay the additional compensation; and I believe he is right.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, if I may interrupt the Senator just on that point, I wish to say that, of course, the suggestion is that this is, in effect, a subsidy or, as some may call it, a mail subvention. Granted that it has the characteristics of a subsidy, it can only be regarded as an enlargement of a policy which we adopted in 1891. The act of 1891 provided for carrying the ocean mail on vessels at a certain rate per nautical mile; and in 1920 the merchant marine act provided for the carrying of mail on these ships at a price that might be fixed by the Postmaster General. So that this is rather an extension and enlargement of the policy adopted in 1891. Call it a subvention if you will, but the experience of the Government in that connection might be profitably referred to.

In 1891 we provided for such a subvention, and two ships, the St. Louis and St. Paul, were constructed and placed under our flag in the trans-Atlantic business. Those two ships were constructed with the idea of being aided by ocean mail contracts. At first it looked as if it were an enormous amount to pay for those ships—$3 or more a nautical mile—whether they carried one letter or a thousand letters. The compensation was based entirely upon the mileage, and it did look as if the Government was going to an enormous expense to provide a fund out of which these ships might be paid. We practically had no other ships under our flag at that time. I believe, all told, we then had four ships sailing across the Atlantic under the American flag, including the St. Paul and the St. Louis, which were built to take advantage of this subvention. At first we paid them $3 a mile, and they did not anywhere near carry enough mail to enable the revenue derived by the Post Office Department to pay the cost; but before their contract expired they were so loaded with mail that they had scarcely any room at all for express or cargo. The business expanded, the use of the vessels for mail purposes increased; and that is what is predicted will happen under this bill. Our experience in that connection ought to be borne in mind. At first it looked like an enormous expense to the Government, but before the contracts expired the vessels were losing money on the contract hand over fist.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, if the Senator from Wisconsin will permit me, I should like to ask a question of the Senator from Florida.

Mr. BLAINE. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. Can the Senator from Florida tell us what the total expense per nautical mile is in the operation of one of these vessels?

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I will not undertake to say as to that. I could make a guess at it, but it would be only a guess. They have got it down pretty fine; they know what the fuel cost is and what the total expenses are.

Mr. NORRIS. To what particular ports in Europe are these ships to go? Are there any designated points?

Mr. FLETCHER. The Postmaster General will indicate to the Shipping Board where the mail is needed to be carried, and the proposed route, and then the Shipping Board will let him know what ships are available and can be provided for that service.

Mr. NORRIS. Can the Senator give us the number of nautical miles, approximately, that a ship would travel in going, let us say, from New York to Rome, in Italy?

Mr. FLETCHER. I think about 4,000 miles. It would be about 2,400 miles across the Atlantic to Cherbourg, for instance, or to Plymouth.

Mr. NORRIS. Then, in going from New York to Italy, would the vessel earn $12 per nautical mile?

Mr. FLETCHER. There is no expectation that we will have 24-knot ships going to Italy.

Mr. NORRIS. Where are the 24-knot ships going to go?

Mr. FLETCHER. Probably to England and ports in continental Europe.

Mr. NORRIS. Let us say to Liverpool. How many nautical miles would a ship travel in going from New York to Liverpool?

Mr. FLETCHER. About 2,400, I think.

Mr. NORRIS. And a vessel of a certain grade would get $12 for each mile traveled?

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes. Of course, it would be an unusually fast ship of a large type and would carry fast mail.

Mr. NORRIS. It would receive something over $30,000 for the trip. Are the ships to be paid for bringing the mail back?

Mr. COPELAND. They are paid for carrying the mail only one way.

Mr. NORRIS. Very well; so that the amount paid to such a ship would be something over $30,000 for each trip that it made?

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I should like to know from some of the experts what the total cost of the operation of the ships would be.

Mr. COPELAND. About twice that.

Mr. FLETCHER. It would be at least twice that.

Mr. JONES. The faster and larger the ships, the greater the expense of operating the ships.

Mr. NORRIS. Can the Senator tell us what the cost of operation would be?

Mr. JONES. No; I can not tell the Senator what the cost of operation of a ship like that would be.

Mr. NORRIS. So the Senator can not inform us as to the proportionate part of the cost of operation of these ships that we would pay from the Treasury of the United States?

Mr. JONES. I think the proportionate part would be rather small. That is, I do not think it would be more than a third, and possibly less.

Mr. NORRIS. Not more than a third of the cost of operation?

Mr. JONES. Yes. It might not be that much; it may be less. I could not say as to that.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, the senior Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] yesterday, with a great deal of ecstasy, made this remarkable statement in connection with the conferees' report. He said:

> I think this bill will terminate the Shipping Board within a reasonable time. That is the reason why I have enthusiasm for it.

The Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] replied:

> There is certainly more of a prospect to put the Shipping Board out of existence under the terms of this bill than under the terms of existing law.

That proposition the Senator from Washington frankly concedes, which leads me to the conclusion that that is the purpose of the law as it will be when this conference report is adopted. So, Mr. President, I want to direct my remarks to the great discrimination that is being exercised against agriculture and the great favoritism in subsidies and in governmental favors in the interest of industry and transportation.

An analysis of the conference report can lead to but one conclusion on that proposition. I therefore desire to analyze just briefly the results that will flow from the adoption of the conference report.

It has been suggested that the conference report embodies the bill as it passed the Senate with the exception of the requirement with reference to the disposal of the Government-owned ships.

Mr. President, that is not the only issue involved, in my opinion, as between the conference report and the Senate bill. Additional subsidies and subventions are given to industry and transportation under the conference report.

The Senate on January 31 last, by a record vote, defeated an amendment which had been proposed to strike out of the bill the requirement that there must be a unanimous and recorded vote of the members of the Shipping Board before vessels could be disposed of, and to insert in lieu of that provision a vote of only four. That amendment was defeated by a vote of 52 to 31, showing that this body was emphatic in its expression of opinion in retaining the unanimous vote of the Shipping Board.

Another amendment was proposed——

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield there?

Mr. BLAINE. Let me state this record vote first, if the Senator please; then I shall be glad to yield.

On the same day it was proposed to strike out the provision relating to the unanimous vote of the Shipping Board regarding the sale of vessels owned by the United States, and to permit the sale by a vote of five. That amendment was defeated by a substantial majority, 47 Senators being recorded against the proposal and 37 in favor of it. That was a second expression of this body against the elimination of the unanimous-vote provision for the disposal of these ships.

I now yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, the Senator will recall that when those votes were taken the Senate had no choice between continued governmental ownership and operation of Shipping Board ships, on the one hand, and destruction of the merchant marine on the other. There was no provision in the Senate bill for naval subventions or mail subventions or loans or encouragement of privately owned ships. The Senate had to choose between continuing the Shipping Board and abolishing absolutely our merchant marine.

I am frank to say now, as I view it, that if I had to choose between permanent Government ownership and operation and no American merchant marine, I should oppose the sale of any ships; and I think the Senate acted very wisely. But, if I may say so to the Senator, we have a very different situation now. We have before us a bill which provides for the continuance of the operation of the governmental ships so long as it seems wise to do so, and at the same time a provision for the building of privately owned and operated merchant ships.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, the Senator's statement is interesting and lends to the emphasis of what the Senate did on those two roll calls. In the face of that knowledge, with the knowledge of the existing law, notwithstanding those facts, this body voted overwhelmingly against the sale by the Shipping Board of vessels owned by the United States unless there was a unanimous vote.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, that was because it had no other choice. It had either to make sure that those ships should not go out of Government ownership or to take the flag off the seas.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, in reply to that suggestion I want to suggest to the Senator that I have searched the RECORD and read the debate when the Senate bill was before this body, and I find that the Senate had every opportunity to vote upon any amendment that any Member desired to present. There was no Member who chose to do as the Senator suggested, and therefore the Senate emphatically declared that the policy as provided for in that bill should be a policy of continued Government operation of the merchant marine under the Shipping Board.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCLEAN in the chair). Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. BLAINE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. NORRIS. With the Senator's permission, I should like to add to what he has just said that at the time we voted on those amendments it was in order here in the Senate to offer an amendment similar to what is now in the conference report. In other words, it would have been perfectly in order to couple with any other amendment that any Senator wanted to offer a ship-subsidy proposition such as is in the bill now. I want to ask the Senator if it is not fair to presume that no such amendment was offered at that time because it was known, or at least believed, that the Senate was opposed to a ship subsidy, and that such an amendment would not have had any chance whatever of receiving a majority of the roll call?

Mr. BLAINE. Yes, Mr. President.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an interruption?

Mr. BLAINE. Just a moment. I want to add to the Senator's suggestion the fact that the Senator from Washington, who had charge of the Senate bill, very frankly and very emphatically told the Members of this body that there was no chance to pass a ship subsidy bill, and therefore he recommended the passage of the bill by the committee.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, the Senator from Washington said in presenting the bill that it was quite evident, because of other attempts that had been made, that Congress was opposed to a ship subsidy bill; and, therefore, he accepted the bill as it was.

Mr. BLAINE. Exactly.

Mr. COPELAND. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. BLAINE. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. Now, let us have the record before us. As a matter of fact, I introduced the ocean contract amendment which is now in the conference report; that is to say, the report is practically identical with the amendment which I offered here. Many Senators, including the chairman of the committee, said they thought it unwise to put that amendment on the bill, because there was no hope of passing it through the House. Many Senators took that position, and I venture to say that that was the position of the chairman of the committee—that while he was in favor of such measures as would encourage a privately developed merchant marine, he did not think it was possible for them to pass the House; and that was the argument which was used here which finally induced me to withdraw the amendment.

Now, however, it has been shown that the House does favor this plan; and we have the conference report before us in such shape that if we adopt it we will continue to operate the Government ships, and at the same time we will challenge American shippers, and say, "You have been arguing that if we would do thus and so you would build ships. Here is your opportunity. The challenge is given you. Now, if you do not make good and build these ships, the Government is going to continue to own and operate merchant ships."

That is exactly my own position, enthusiastic as I am for private operation. If private shippers do not take advantage of what is offered them now, then there is nothing else for us to do except to go on with our merchant marine; because, as far as I am concerned, I want the American flag on the sea, whether it is on a Government-owned ship or on one privately owned.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I understand that the amendment to which the Senator refers was offered by the Senator in the committee.

Mr. COPELAND. It was offered on the floor of the Senate; and finally, if the Senator will recall, I made a little talk in which I said, "I know when I am licked. Therefore, I ask unanimous consent that this amendment and the other amendments be withdrawn."

Mr. LA FOLLETTE and Mr. NORRIS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. BLAINE. I yield first to my colleague.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I merely wish to say as one member of the Committee on Commerce that I do not wish the Senator's statement to stand that all members of the committee were opposed to his amendment merely on the ground of expediency. I for one was opposed to the amendment because I regarded it as a disguised subsidy.

Mr. BLAINE. Now I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. I myself can not understand, if Senators wanted the kind of an amendment which the Senator says he offered, why there should be any reason for the Senate to refuse to put it in the bill, because it could not meet any worse fate in the House than being defeated. But now we are confronted with a situation in which, as the Senator from New York says, the Government will still operate ships, and we have provided a method in the bill by which we will pay out of Government money practically enough to operate private ships, and loan the balance of the money at a rate of interest away below that at which we loan to anybody else, or at least to agriculture, and let them, by means of this Government subsidy, put our own ships off the ocean.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I think the issue is clear and that the senior Senator from New York recognizes that the conference report does provide for a mail subvention.

Mr. COPELAND. Of course, I deny that.

Mr. BLAINE. I want to analyze what that subvention or subsidy is going to cost the American people annually.

Mr. COPELAND. I hope the Senator will yield for one moment. I deny that it is a subsidy. It is a payment for services rendered. If the Senator from Wisconsin desires to have the United States Government continue to pay British ships several million dollars a year for the carriage of American mail, the Senator from Wisconsin can vote that way, but I never will, so long as I have a chance to have those mails carried in American ships.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, the effect of the Senator's argument is that we must tax the American people to pay this subsidy to private interests to carry the mail of the United States under the American flag. Let me suggest to the Senator from New York that if he were not so enthusiastic about the abolition of the Shipping Board and its functions, he would be more enthusiastic for the American flag flying over American ships owned by the American people.

Mr. COPELAND. If the Senator will yield; I am enthusiastic that the money of this Government should be paid to help support American ships, and at the present time the people of this country are taxed in order that the Post Office Department may pay several million dollars a year to foreign ships.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, if there is to be any subsidy paid to carry American mails, let that subsidy be paid to the Shipping Board in the operation of the fleet under its control. Moreover, the Shipping Board has been operating many vessels in foreign ports. There is no reason why a contract for the carrying of the American mail should ever have been made with British interests to carry American mail under a British flag.

This conference report provides for a graduated scale of compensation for carrying mail. It classifies the vessels from class 1 to class 7. They are classified according to the gross registered tonnage and the speed at sea. Under the conference report the first-class vessels will be paid $12 per nautical mile, and I understand that is quite regardless of the amount of mail transported, either as to its bulk or its weight. The payment is upon the nautical-mile basis. The lowest-speed vessel will receive $1.50 for transporting the mails, the second class $10, the third class $8, the fourth class $6, the fifth class $4, and the sixth class $2.50.

Under the present law the vessels are not classified according to tonnage or speed, but are classified as first, second, and third class. The first class is the speedier vessel, and under the present law receives only $4 per mile for transporting the United States mail. The first-class vessel under the present law corresponds to the first-class vessel described in the conference report, so that under the conference report the amount that will be paid to the first-class vessels is three times that of the present law.

Under the present law a second-class vessel receives $2 per mile for carrying the mail of the United States, the third-class vessel under the present law receives $1 per mile. The third-class vessel under the present law and the seventh-class vessel described in the conference report correspond. Therefore the intermediate classes between 1 and 7 are similar to the second class in the present law, which gets a rate of $2 per mile.

The Senator from Washington yesterday, as the RECORD indicates, said that the increase for carrying United States mail would be from $7,000,000 to $10,000,000. I doubt if $10,000,000 will pay the increased cost.

There is no claim made that the present rate paid for carrying mail to foreign countries is not compensatory. The whole scheme and purpose of this conference report is to grant these privileges, this subvention, this subsidy, to private interests, and the cost thereof, and the increased cost, will be paid by the American taxpayer.

Moreover, additional favors are given to transportation interests. The conference report provides that the rate of interest shall not exceed the lowest rate of interest of any existing outstanding obligation of the United States, except postal savings funds which were issued subsequent to April 6, 1917. The best information I can obtain upon that proposition is that the rate of interest for the loan is 3 or 3¼ per cent.

There will be, in order to carry out the authority granted by this bill, an appropriation of $125,000,000 from the Public Treasury, which will go into the loan fund. That loan fund, with the accumulations that are received by the Shipping Board, will eventually and very soon amount to $250,000,000, which may be loaned to private interests at a rate of interest ranging from 3 to 3¼ per cent for the building of vessels to engage in foreign trade. Under the present law the rate of interest for that same purpose is 4¼ per cent. It therefore means a reduction in the rate of interest of 1 per cent from the present rate.

Under the present law the rate of interest demanded of those who borrow from the loan fund to construct vessels for coastwise purposes is 5¼ per cent. The interest rate, therefore, under this conference report, is reduced 2 per cent in comparison with the rate of interest that must be paid by private interests who borrow from the loan fund in order to construct vessels for the coastwise trade.

Let us examine the discrimination that exists with respect to that interest problem. Under the present law the most advantageous loan the agricultural interests of this country may receive, through Government sources or sources organized and supported by the Government, is at a rate of 5 per cent per annum. If a farmer desires to borrow money to purchase his farm, or to retire an indebtedness, he must pay not only

5 per cent per annum, but he must also subscribe for stock to the extent of 5 per cent of the amount of the loan. More than that, under the law he is liable, in case of failure of the loan organization, to pay 5 per cent of the loan into the fund.

The result is, therefore, that he is obligated to pay 5 per cent. If he borrows $10,000, five per cent is deducted from the $10,000, so he does not receive the full amount. If the organization becomes insolvent he is personally liable for a 5 per cent assessment. On top of all that he must pay a percentage for obtaining the loan, all the costs of the abstract and examination of the abstract, with the result that he pays in the aggregate almost 5½ per cent for a loan for agricultural purposes.

Moreover, he can borrow only 50 per cent of the value of his real estate. He can borrow only 20 per cent of the value of his improvement, his buildings. He can not borrow any money on long terms for equipping his farm with machinery or stock and all other necessary equipment.

Under the conference report the private shipping interests are given a loan out of the loan fund at a rate of interest of about 3 to 3¼ per cent. They are permitted to borrow to the extent of three-quarters of the cost of the construction of the vessel, including the equipment. The equipment of those vessels is subject to very rapid deterioration. Under the conference report private interests may borrow sufficient money to build their vessels, and out of the increased subvention or subsidy retire the 25 per cent of their equity in the property and thereafter enjoy the entire accumulation of the subvention with an investment wholly by the Government and without an investment of one single dollar of their own money.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LA FOLLETTE in the chair). Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. BLAINE. I yield.

Mr. EDGE. The Senator, I take it, is favorable to the maintenance and development of an American merchant marine, as he voted for the original bill, as I recall it. In view of that fact, does he think his illustration is entirely pertinent and proper? Will it not cost the Government, if they do maintain and develop a merchant marine, 100 per cent, at whatever the current rates of interest may be for the Government, if the Government does it entirely itself? In this case they are trying to encourage private interests to build ships and help build up a merchant marine, upon which basis the taxpayer of the country will at least save a clear 25 per cent even though the entire 75 per cent is loaned to the private builder of ships.

Mr. BLAINE. I think the Senator's logic is erroneous.

Mr. EDGE. I am quite ready to be corrected if it is.

Mr. BLAINE. If the Government operates the vessels as a government, every single dollar of profit will go into the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. EDGE. Then the Senator is optimistic enough to hope that the Government will administer it at a profit, is he?

Mr. BLAINE. I think it can be administered at a profit.

Mr. EDGE. All history would certainly demonstrate to the contrary.

Mr. BLAINE. I think not. I say that all history demonstrates that where a governmental agency has zeal in the administration of public ownership, public ownership has succeeded. But wherever the governmental agency is under the control of influences the purpose of which is to make government unsuccessful, then government ownership has failed. Bureaus and boards and commissions too often reflect the political opinion of the power that gave them their appointment. In private industry, if there was no zeal shown for success of the business, if the president of the organization, the board of directors, those who are responsible for the operations of the organization or the private undertaking, lacked zeal as it is lacking to-day in the Shipping Board and in the White House, the business would go bankrupt.

The increased cost of carrying the mail is not the only subvention or the only subsidy that is being granted. The vessels are to be manned by officers of the United States, one-half of whose salary is to be paid out of the Treasury of the United States.

Moreover, the increase of $10,000,000 for carrying mail, together with the reduction in interest from the normal rate, amounting to $5,000,000, gives an annual subvention or subsidy of $15,000,000 to private shipping companies.

The result of the conference report is that the American taxpayer must annually, not once, but every year, contribute between $15,000,000 and $16,000,000 as a subvention or subsidy or favor to private shipping companies. Remember, this is not for one year. When the appropriation for the loan is made it is one bulk appropriation, but the subvention or subsidy is a continuous, continuing tax from year to year upon the American taxpayer.

Under the present law the cost of carrying the United States mails to foreign countries, exclusive of the coastwise transportation for the fiscal year 1927 was $7,183,584.99. The conference report, if adopted, will more than double the cost of transportation of the mails.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. BLAINE. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. Last year the Post Office Department paid the United States Lines $608,000 to carry mails on the Leviathan. This figures out $12.50 per mile. The Leviathan made 14 eastbound voyages and received approximately $43,500 per voyage. So when the Senator talks about the great subsidy that is going to be paid, his comments are not in accord with the actual experience of the Government.

Mr. BLAINE. I have been quoting from the report of the Postmaster General. I assume that the Senator does not claim the report is inaccurate. The figures are contained in his annual report for the fiscal year 1927. While there was a hang-over from the prior year of $943,981.89, I have stated the cost of transportation for the fiscal year 1927.

Moreover, under the conference report the Postmaster General, whenever, in his opinion, the interests of the Postal Service may be served, may enter into a contract with vessels of the first class for the payment of compensation in excess of the maximum compensation authorized by the bill.

There is no question that the proposal is exactly what the private interests have been seeking for years, and yet the Congress of the United States may now submit to their demands. It is a subvention, a subsidy. It is indefensible. The President of the United States through his spokesman informed Congress that he will disapprove or veto the farm relief bill, and the Senator from Washington stated quite conclusively yesterday that the President would approve of this bill. So whenever agriculture seeks relief, asking no subvention, no subsidy, willing to impose upon itself the necessary tax to carry on the proposals of the McNary-Haugen bill, relief is to be denied; but when industry and transportation, when private interests come to Congress asking for subventions and subsidies we are told that kind of legislation will be approved.

Mr. President, I hope that if this conference report shall be adopted the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, the distinguished Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY] will immediately ask that the conference report on the farm relief bill be considered so that if the two reports shall be adopted by this body they may be transmitted at the same time to the President for his approval or disapproval.

Mr. MCNARY. It will be done.

Mr. BLAINE. Then, Mr. President, if the pronouncements that have come from the White House shall be carried out, the Republican National Convention at Kansas City, if the Republican Party desires to remain in control of this Government, will find it to its advantage to advance the candidacy for President of some one other than one who announces as his only policy adherence to the Coolidge policies. When the Coolidge policies constitute a denial of the rights and the interests of agriculture and the granting of subventions and subsidies to private industry and to private transportation, Mr. President, the intelligence of the American agriculturist will respond, in my opinion, to deny that party any place in the executive administration of this Government.

However, this is not a party question. What I have said may be applied to the Democratic Party. I should like to see a contest made as to whether or not agriculture is to be further denied relief while, on the other hand, industry and transportation are to receive additional subventions and additional subsidies. I hope the conference report will be rejected.

Mr. JONES (and others). Vote!

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. BLAINE. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum being suggested, the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Bratton	Copeland	Dill
Barkley	Brookhart	Couzens	Edge
Bayard	Broussard	Curtis	Edwards
Black	Bruce	Cutting	Fess

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-three Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, we have before us now in this conference report our old friend the ship-subsidy proposition. It has been before Congress for a great many years. It was supposed, I think, by most Members of the Congress, that it was finally disposed of, and that no attempt would be made to pass such a law through Congress.

When this bill was before the Senate the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] very frankly stated on the floor of the Senate that it was quite apparent that Congress would not pass a ship subsidy bill, and that while he preferred such a bill to the one he then reported, he assumed—and everybody, I think, believed he was correct in his assumption—that it would be useless to try to pass a ship subsidy bill, and the other bill was passed instead. It went to the House, and has now returned in the shape of a conference report which, as I look at it and as I understand it, possesses all the evils that were ever possessed by any ship subsidy bill that was ever before Congress.

It is to be regretted that if this question was to come before the Senate for consideration, it did not come in the shape of a bill subject to amendment, instead of a conference report that can not be amended.

When the bill was here originally, I think the Senator from Washington fairly stated the question as applied to this kind of legislation; and we passed the bill with the understanding, I believe it is fair to say, that no such thing as a ship subsidy bill should grow out of it. If Senators wanted to pass through the Senate a ship subsidy bill, they ought to have made the fight at that time, instead of bringing it in here in the shape of a conference report that can not be amended, and that must be either voted up or down, without any possibility of change.

We are confronted now for the first time in a conference report with a proposition that we shall pay to shipowners a subvention, as it is called in polite terms; but admitted by everybody, I think, who is inclined to be fair to be a ship subsidy.

Mr. President, it was only a few years since an attempt was made, during President Harding's administration—and that was the last time that I remember when the attempt was made—to pass a ship subsidy bill through the Senate. It was a fair, straightforward contest between those who favored it and those who were opposed to it. We all remember that it was in a lame-duck Congress, and that there was organized here a filibuster that succeeded in beating the bill. No attempt was made to pass that bill during the long session, when those deals that can be made in a lame-duck session would have been out of order, and could not have been made. No attempt was made to pass that bill in the following Congress. It was conceded that it could not pass. Now we are confronted, in the closing days of the session, with a ship subsidy bill to which no Senator has the right, under parliamentary procedure, even to suggest or offer an amendment; and we must take it with all its evils as a whole, or we must reject it.

So far as I am concerned, Mr. President, I find no difficulty in reaching the conclusion that this conference report ought to be rejected; and I supported the bill as it originally passed the Senate.

It is said in defense of the conference report that it contains the provisions that were in the Senate bill as it passed the Senate providing for the Government building and operation of ships; but I want to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that although those provisions may be contained in the conference report, they are practically nullified. In other words, we have said: "We will build Government ships. We will operate them by the Government through the Shipping Board. We will operate those that we now own and have already constructed out of public funds; but we will give a subsidy to private parties, who will be able to put the Government-owned ships out of business."

We go, it seems to me, to the foolish length of building ships by the Government and providing, through the medium of the Shipping Board, for their operation upon the seas, and then we say to private parties, "We will furnish you Government money to build ships to compete with them, and after you have built them out of Government funds, at a rate of interest lower than that at which we have loaned money to anybody else, we will pay you a great part of the expense of their operation."

How can you expect Government ships to contest in the commercial world with that kind of a subsidy given to private parties? In other words, we are going to the foolish length of using public money to operate Government ships and then going to the additional length of giving somebody else Government money with which to put those ships out of business.

I would much rather have this conference report with nothing in it except the subsidy part of it than to have the rest of it in that we know, from the very nature of things, is going to result in failure.

Mr. President, I can not myself understand how any Senator who is opposed to a ship subsidy can support this conference report; and even though I were in favor of a ship subsidy, it seems to me I would be fair enough to say that this subsidy that we are granting is going to put out of business the Government ships which we already own, which we have built with Government money, and which we are operating at the expense of the taxpayers.

How can we justify ourselves for taking Government money in one hand to do something and then taking Government money in another hand to ruin the business of the first hand? How can we justify the use of public money to build a Government ship and then take public money and build another ship and give it to a private party and furnish him Government money to operate it in opposition to our own ship?

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. What is the Senator going to do when a Government ship wears out? He is going to use Government money to rebuild it, is he not?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. COPELAND. That is exactly what we are facing. We have a Government fleet of vessels which are practically worn out, so we have to face either the assistance of a privately owned merchant marine or the appropriation of funds to replace ships which are now privately owned.

Mr. NORRIS. What is the use of taking money to repair an old ship if we are not going to operate it after we have it repaired? What is the use of building a Government ship with the taxpayers' money if we are going to take out of the same taxpayers' money enough financial aid to a private party to put the first ship out of business? We had better stop it at once, it seems to me, as a matter of economy and fairness. We ought not to go into both of these operations.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BLACK in the chair). Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to his colleague?

Mr. NORRIS. I do.

Mr. HOWELL. Is it not a fact that the result of repairing our vessels has been that after we have expended enormous sums thereon, within a year or two the board has sold them for half of what the repairs cost?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes, Mr. President.

Mr. HOWELL. Is not that substantially a subsidy to private interests? Is not that what has been going on here year after year?

Mr. NORRIS. And we thought, Mr. President, that in the bill that passed the Senate we had put a stop to that by providing that these ships could not be sold except by the unanimous vote of the board. The conference report now before us amends that by providing that the ships can be sold upon the affirmative vote of five members of the board.

What is the answer to it all? Why, the answer is made by the Senator from New York: "We want to put the American flag upon the ocean. We are going to pull down the American flag and take it off the ocean as far as Government ships are concerned, but we are going to supply the American flag to private parties who get the benefit of Government funds to enable them to put that flag upon the ocean on that kind of ships."

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. COPELAND. The position of the Senator from Nebraska is that he wants to sink the American flag, because unless there is a replacement of ships there will not be any ships to carry the American flag.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator has drawn a conclusion there that he is welcome to draw if he wants to. I had a better opinion, however, of his intelligence than to think he would draw the conclusion from what I said that I wanted to sink the American flag.

Mr. COPELAND. I based it on what the Senator said.

Mr. NORRIS. The proposition to build Government ships was not my proposition, although I supported it. It came from this committee, as the Senator from Washington said; he had tried every other scheme, and he felt that there was only one way left, and that was for the Government to build them and have the Shipping Board operate them. If that is done, and a ship wears out, we will repair it. If it is completely worn out, we will build another one in its place, and build more if we need them in the business. That is a matter of detail. That is a matter which it seems to me is one of the smallest details of the business.

Mr. COPELAND. It is rather an expensive detail, is it not?

Mr. NORRIS. Exactly; but it is not so expensive to build one ship as to build one ship for the Government and give the money to a private party to build another ship and then let him have enough money to operate the ship and put the Government ship out of business. That is more expensive yet.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. Certainly the Senator does not contemplate that the Government will never get back the money it loans for the building of privately owned ships, does he?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, does the Senator think we will get it back?

Mr. COPELAND. I certainly do.

Mr. BORAH. Does the Senator know a business institution in the world that would loan its money on ships at three-fourths of the value and expect to get the loan back?

Mr. COPELAND. If the Senator from Nebraska will permit me to reply; does not the Senator from Idaho desire to have the American flag on the seas? The only way in the world that we can accomplish that result is by doing as other governments do. Every other country in the world is doing the same thing that is provided here.

Mr. BORAH. Of course, if the Senator should carry out his propostion to its logical conclusion, he would simply argue that we should donate this $250,000,000. That is one proposition. But that is a proposition the Senate was denied an opportunity to pass upon. We passed a wholly different measure. The author of the bill which we passed conceded that the other proposition could not pass. Now there comes back to us in the shape of a conference report the subsidy proposal, for which the Senator is now contending. He does not contend that we would get the money back now. He says, however, that in order to keep the flag upon the seas we should donate the money. If that is the proposition, it ought to come to us in an original bill and let us deal with it.

Mr. COPELAND. Of course, that is not the proposition. That is not involved in the bill. It is a loan to these ships on which they pay interest, and they are to pay back the principal. It is not contemplated for one moment that this is a donation on the part of the Government.

So far as the other matter is concerned, the Senator might address his question to the chairman of the committee, who said that his reason for not advocating a measure embodying the ocean mail contract, increasing the loans, and so forth, was that he did not believe the House would pass it, and there were many Senators who voted for the bill believing that it provided the only solution, that there was no hope of going forward with an enterprise which would put privately owned ships upon the ocean.

Mr. BORAH. Does not the Senator admit that this is a distinct subsidy, and not only a subsidy but a reckless subsidy?

Mr. COPELAND. I do not; on the contrary, I deny it. Of course, what the Senator is talking about now, I assume, is the ocean mail contract. Is that what he has in mind?

Mr. BORAH. In part; yes.

Mr. COPELAND. The money received under that is in payment for services rendered. I said a few moments ago, as regards our own ship, the Leviathan, that last year the Post Office Department paid the United States Lines $608,000 for the carriage of mail on the Leviathan. Those figures meant a rate of about $12.50 per nautical mile. That means a contribution, if the Senator wants to put it that way, of $43,500 per voyage. But it was not that. It was a payment for services rendered, and that is exactly what this contemplates. The advantage offered by this bill is that the Postmaster General is permitted to make 10-year contracts. We could not induce private capital to go ahead and build a ship on the basis of a 1-year contract. It is because these privately owned lines know that they have 10-year contracts, and the operation of the ships during that time, that it is possible to encourage the building of privately owned ships.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, let us consider these loans for a moment. This bill, coming to us for the first time in the form of a conference report, provides that loans can be made upon these ships up to the amount of three-fourths of their value, and I understand that includes their equipment. I wonder if there is a business institution in the world that will loan money upon a ship and its equipment on those terms at three-fourths of the value of the ship and the equipment, at the rate of interest that will be paid on these loans? The equipment wears out and must be renewed. It is a good deal like the furniture in a hotel; it will have to be replaced from time to time. The Senator says the loans will all be repaid. I do not believe they will be unless they are able to pay it out of the subsidy we give them. They may be able to do that.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. We can make it so profitable, by giving them a large enough subsidy, that they can pay us back with our own money. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. COPELAND. Does the Senator imagine for a moment that a corporation big enough to build ships would invest $25,000,000 of its own money, as against $75,000,000 advanced as a loan by the Government, with the expectation in mind that it was going to default on the payments and lose the $25,000,000?

Mr. NORRIS. No.

Mr. COPELAND. No; I guess not.

Mr. NORRIS. It is not necessary to draw on one's imagination for that. I presume that 99 per cent of the loans that ever have been made in the history of the world, where the borrower has afterwards failed, have been originally made on the theory and the belief of the man who borrows the money that he was going to repay it. It is very seldom a man goes into such a transaction with the deliberate idea of robbing the man who loans him money.

Mr. COPELAND. Will the Senator yield again?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. The Senator from Nebraska is an ardent advocate of Government ownership and operation of ships. No ship can be built, under the provisions of this bill, with a loan from the Government, without the Shipping Board passing upon the case to determine whether it is a wise investment. Suppose the corporation did default; what would happen? The Government would take over the ship at three-fourths of the price it would cost the Government to build such a ship, and have the ship for operation by the Government.

Mr. NORRIS. Does the Senator expect the Government to do business that way? Has he an idea that the Government is going to get a lot of ships through the passage of this bill? Does he think the Government is going to get ships at three-fourths of the value of the ships through the operation of this bill? Nobody believes any such thing as that.

Mr. COPELAND. The Senator wants the Government to have ships, to build ships, and to buy ships. That is his plan.

Mr. NORRIS. I am not hunting for a victim to put up the money and have the Government take the ships away under the technicality of a mortgage. I do not want to do business that way, and I do not believe the Senator does. It is a pure question of business; how much money would a business man loan on security of this kind? A ship with its furniture, its equipment, would cost $1,000,000, we will say. The Government is expected to loan on it three-fourths of that amount.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I would like to answer one Senator at a time, I would be perfectly willing to yield to the Senator, but the Senator from New York never permits me to answer one question before he asks another, and though I like to have him ask his questions, I would like to have an opportunity to answer them.

Mr. COPELAND. The Senator from Nebraska is so fertile, and he has so many brilliant ideas, that it is hard for the Senator from New York to keep up with him.

Mr. NORRIS. I have yielded to the Senator and I will continue to do it, because out of it all we may get some valuable information.

Going back now to where I started, let us consider the business proposition of the Government of the United States loaning money upon a ship and its equipment up to three-fourths of its value, personal property, not real estate. If we were loaning it on a piece of real estate, that would always be there, and could not be carried away or destroyed. Even then we would not do it as business men. But these ships are personal property. Will a banker loan to a farmer money upon his automobile up to three-fourths of what the automobile cost new? Would anybody think of doing that unless it were a case where it was either getting that or nothing? A banker would not think of doing business on that basis. If he did, he would fail before long. Would one loan upon a building, even at three-fourths of its value? Would one loan upon the real estate itself up to three-fourths of its value? The Government refuses to do that with the farmer who wants a loan. It will not loan him three-fourths of the value of the land. As I remember the law, if the improvements are given any consideration in the mortgage, they are only considered at 25 per cent of their value, less than half of what they would cost. I yield now to the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. EDGE. In reference to this particular feature of the bill permitting a loan up to a maximum of 75 per cent, that figure is only approximately 9 per cent more than the one in the bill the Senator from Nebraska voted for a few weeks ago, which made the figure 66⅔ per cent. I am just wondering if the Senator's objection to this particular feature, not discussing some of the other features, but only this one, has been developed because of the fact that the committee saw fit to raise the construction fund to a maximum of 9 per cent beyond the figure in the bill the Senator supported.

Mr. NORRIS. That has something to do with it. I am speaking of it now as a pure business proposition, and I invite Senators who think it is a good business proposition to give me instances where business men have made loans upon this kind of property up to 75 per cent of the value or the cost of the property. I would be glad to find out whether that has been done in the business world. I would be glad to know where the Government has done it, except in a case of this kind. It does not do it with the farmer. It does not do it when it makes a loan upon land, security which everybody knows is stable and less fluctuating than a thing like a ship, which floats upon the water, or even a house, or animals, or wagons, or automobiles, or anything of that kind. Every business man knows that it is a poor business proposition to loan upon property of that kind up to 75 per cent of its value, and it is not done in the business world.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. The Senator talks about loaning money to the farmers. The Senator, of course, knows that the Government does not do anything of the kind. They established a bank, the stock of which was subscribed to by farmers, and every loan that bank makes is guaranteed by every farmer who belongs to the association through which the money is obtained. Every farmer who is a member of that association guarantees the loan of every other farmer who borrows money from the Federal land bank, making additional security. It would seem to me that if that idea should be carried out every shipowner who borrowed money from the Government out of the Government Treasury would be required to be a guarantor of the loan to every other shipowner. As I understand it, this money is loaned directly out of the Federal Treasury. That is not true of the Federal land bank. Bonds are issued against the loans, and are sold to investors. As I understand it, this is a direct loan out of the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nebraska permit me to ask a question of the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. EDGE. Does not the Senator see any distinction or difference between an activity where the Government recognizes and Congress recognizes that the merchant marine can be augmented by new ships, replacements, where the Government, now being in the business, is compelled to make a decision between paying 100 per cent in order to have the merchant marine a going concern, or encouraging some citizens of the country to pay 25 per cent and the Government loaning 75 per cent to bring about the same results; in other words, make the necessary replacements for the maintenance of an American merchant marine? Does he see any distinction between that and the ordinary loaning of money to citizens or interests in which the Government itself is in no way engaged?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I do not see anything wrong with the loaning of Government funds in and of itself, providing it is done on a sound business basis and to an industry that is important to the national welfare. I think that the shipping industry is important. I want the United States to have a merchant marine. I did not intend to argue against the idea of loaning that money, if it is found to be necessary and economically sound. I did not hear all the argument of the Senator. I just wanted to call attention to the fact of the analogy that was drawn between the loaning of money under the Federal farm loan act and taking it directly out of the Treasury of the United States, which is on an entirely different basis.

Mr. EDGE. If I may take the Senator's time another moment——

Mr. NORRIS. Certainly.

Mr. EDGE. I thoroughly agree with the statement, as I followed it, that the Senator from Nebraska presents that, generally speaking, it would not be a defensible proposition to loan 75 per cent in the ordinary way, illustrated by the loans he suggested. The only possible defense of it—I am quite sure that should be clear—is just what I attempted to say to the Senator from Minnesota, that either the Government must pay 100 per cent, because we are all, I think, of the same accord that we must have an American merchant marine, or we can encourage private interests and advance 25 per cent. On that basis I think it is justifiable, but I agree with the Senator that it would not be on perhaps any other basis.

Mr. NORRIS. I want to thank the Senator from New Jersey for the candor with which he meets the proposition. He admits to begin with—and I think that is what I started out to demonstrate—that as a business proposition we can not defend it. Now, let us stop that, so far as that one proposition is concerned. It can not be defended, therefore, on a business basis.

Mr. EDGE. Except by adding the other requirements to it.

Mr. NORRIS. Of course, that is not a business basis. The Senator gives as a reason for his support of it something that is not business. It is perhaps higher than business. It is rather a patriotic idea that he has that we want to build an American merchant marine. He admits we are doing something here to get it that we can not defend on any business basis. That brings us to an understanding, so far as that one proposition is concerned.

Now, in answer to the suggestion of the Senator from Minnesota, I think what he said, so far as the operation of the farm loan bank is concerned, is correct, but I am speaking in broad terms. Through the instrumentality of the farm loan system we are loaning money to the farmers. We are charging them a rate of interest that will be practically twice as high as we are going to charge the shipowners when they build these ships. That, it seems to me, can not be defended either on a business basis or patriotic basis or any other kind of a basis. We are picking out one class of citizens, not so necessary, either, to human life and human happiness as are the men who toil in the field and raise the food that feeds the world. We are charging them a rate of interest upon security which, on a business basis, is far superior to that contemplated by the conference report, a rate of interest practically twice as high as we are going to charge men who are already possessed of millions, in order that they may go into business with Government money and perform a Government service for which they are going to be paid, under the law, a Government price.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield again?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. In addition to that we give them another privilege or favor that we do not extend to the farmer. In the first place, we compel the farmer to pay a high rate of interest, and in addition to that we pass an immigration law so that he must pay a higher price for his labor. In fact, for all practical purposes we have said, "You have to hire American citizens to do your work." That means he has to pay more. I have not any fault to find with that. But to the Shipping Trust we say, "You can hire cheap foreign labor. You do not have to pay American wages. You can hire foreigners to compete with American labor. We will loan you money at a very much lower rate of interest than we loan to anybody else, and in addition to that you may employ foreign labor. The immigration act does not apply to your business. You can hire people from the Mediterranean, you can hire Chinese coolies, you can hire labor wherever you can get it the cheapest." That is another favor that we extend to the shipping interests.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes. I think that is in the bill, although perhaps it is not as unlimited as the Senator from Minnesota suggests.

Mr. JONES. We strengthen that very much in this report. We require 50 per cent to be Americans during the next four years, and, after that, two-thirds of the crew must be Americans.

Mr. NORRIS. But at least there is something in what the Senator from Minnesota has suggested. The man who employs this side of our eastern or western shores must employ men who are lawfully within the dominion of the United States, citizens of the United States, but the Shipping Board for several years, so far as one-half of the men they employ are concerned, can go outside of that limitation to select anyone they desire to select, and permanently can so select one-third of their employees, all of whom may be and perhaps will be people who are not citizens of the United States.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator to add another observation?

Mr. NORRIS. Certainly.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. When we do that we are training men for other countries as seamen; we are training them for the navies of other nations, instead of training them to go to sea for the United States and as naval reserves or men for the American Navy.

Mr. NORRIS. That is true, Mr. President, but I would like to call the attention of the Senator from Minnesota to the fact that to that extent we are training men to serve in the navies of other nations, we are doing it under the American flag.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Why, of course.

Mr. NORRIS. Some people have no objection to training others for foreign nations to fight us in time of war if we will do it under the American flag. That is the emphasis—put the American flag on the seas and let the taxpayers pay the bill. Let us drive off of the seas all of the Government-owned and operated merchant ships, and when we get them off they will take the flag with them, and then we will let a few millionaires, who are going to do it mainly out of Government funds, build ships to drive the Government-owned ships off the seas.

The Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] said that there is no subsidy in the bill; that it is a payment for services rendered. He used that expression several times, "payment for services rendered." Early in the debate, through some questions I asked the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] and the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], it was developed that to one class of these ships which are going to be subsidized there would be paid as subsidy money over $30,000 for making a trip from New York to Liverpool. If that ship carries one letter, a 2-cent letter, from New York to Liverpool, we would pay them that $30,000 for carrying it. That is "payment for services rendered." Of course, that is an exaggerated illustration. It is a possibility under the law, however, as we are going to pass it. But there is no doubt that the price paid for carrying the mail is going to be exorbitant. I think those who will consider the question thoroughly will admit that it is exorbitant. They admit that a subsidy is going to be necessary from their standpoint.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Sentaor from New York?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. Does the Senator consider it exorbitant when the same Government and the same Post Office Department pay 50 per cent more than that to one of the Government-owned ships?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; I should think so.

Mr. COPELAND. That is exactly what is happening.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not know about that. It may be that the mail we are sending is a good deal like the patriotic officials of the Government, that we have to pass a law in order to compel them to travel on an American ship. That is in the bill, too. It seems to me that the Senator makes his comparison with a condition which the bill, as passed through the Senate, was intended at least to remedy; that we would not have been paying to these foreign ships this exorbitant price if the bill that we passed through the Senate became a law and went on the statute books. Then the mails would have been carried in ships provided for in the bill, owned and operated by the Government of the United States, under the American flag. So I do not think it is fair to say that unless we give this subsidy to private owners, to those who will build ships under the bill and under the subsidy, a British ship or a Japanese ship or a German ship or a French ship will carry it at a bigger price. We do not have to give it to those foreign ships. We do not have to give it to a British ship if we have an American ship. The bill as it passed the Senate provided for American ships and their operation.

I believe that if we are going to use Government money in any kind of a business operation, in any kind of an enterprise, the Government ought to own it rather than to take the same money and give it to somebody else in order to make private profit out of it. I have not been conspicuous as an advocate of the building of Government ships, as the Senator said. I have not participated in that matter. I have not been on the committee which had to do with it. I have not introduced any bills providing for it. But if we start with the presumption that we are going to keep American ships on the sea and that some way must be provided out of the Treasury of the United States to keep them there, I prefer to have the Government own them rather than to use the Government money without any ample return, giving it to private people to build the same ships and operate them for private profit.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. KING. Perhaps it is not pertinent to the line of thought which the Senator is now developing, but I want to invite his attention to one phase of the bill which, to me, is exceedingly obnoxious. He spoke of the shipping bill of 1920. Here is one of the reasons why I voted against that bill and opposed it. By our coastwise navigation laws we have given a complete monopoly to coastwise and intercoastal trade that American capital might build ships, engage in the coastwise trade, and may have a complete monopoly. It may charge fifty times as much as the service is worth and as much as the cargo could be carried for by some tramp steamer or the best steamer in the world from some other country. It has such an ironclad monopoly that no one can interfere. Notwithstanding the fact that we have some sixteen millions of tonnage of coastwise trade, an enormous tonnage, an adequate tonnage, and a very fine tonnage, too, may I say, we propose to give those people the benefit of these loan features. Though they have a monopoly and there is no competition, they can get three-quarters of the cost of their ships and equipment from this $250,000,000 revolving fund on any new ships which they may build or any reconditioned ships which they now have.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Washington is that provision in the conference report?

Mr. JONES. That is the provision in the act of 1920, except as to the modification of three-fourths of the value; and they pay not less than 5¼ per cent interest.

Mr. NORRIS. They pay 5¼ per cent interest?

Mr. JONES. Not less than that.

Mr. NORRIS. Does this bill propose to change that?

Mr. JONES. It proposes to change the amount of the loan to three-fourths, but otherwise it is the same as the act of 1920.

Mr. NORRIS. The only change made as to the coastwise ships is that an increased amount may be loaned for such ships?

Mr. JONES. That is all, and that is not specific; that is, it is not mentioned specifically, but it is carried in the provision that loans may be made up to three-fourths of the value of the ship.

Mr. NORRIS. In the case of coastwise shipping?

Mr. JONES. As to all shipping which may ask for a loan.

Mr. NORRIS. But loans made to ships for the overseas trade built under this bill may be at a lower rate of interest than that?

Mr. JONES. Yes; but coastwise ships have to pay at least 5¼ per cent.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, however, if the Senator will pardon me, they have resort to this fund. We have been announcing with a good deal of earnestness and jubilation that we wanted to develop our foreign trade; that the primary purpose of this bill was to develop our foreign trade, to build ships that would cross the Atlantic, and, as the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] said yesterday, be seen upon the seven seas; and yet we are proposing to provide that this fund shall be available for this monopoly, which, in my opinion, has exercised upon many occasions the power which it possesses in a very ruthless way.

Mr. NORRIS. I presume there is not any doubt but that it exercises its power, and I speak of that without faultfinding, for I presume that anybody similarly situated would do that as a matter of business. When the coastwise shipping has a monopoly, of course, it puts on "all the traffic will bear"; that is perfectly natural; and although another ship of a foreign nation may be passing, going between the same ports, it is unable to get any of the business, no matter what the price may be that the coastwise American shipping may charge for the service.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nebraska yield to me?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. CARAWAY. Of course there is not any provision in this bill that affects that monopoly. That is not a new thing.

Mr. NORRIS. That is true.

Mr. CARAWAY. I do not presume there is anyone in the Senate who would vote to open our coastwise trade to foreign competition; I feel certain of that; but what I started to say is this: We have spent hundreds of millions of dollars trying to establish American shipping, but we have not been very successful in doing it. It struck me that if we could induce business people to put up 25 per cent—and they must do that; at the very minimum they will risk 25 per cent of their money on a venture to put our flag back on the seas—we would find it very much more economical than the methods we have adopted heretofore under which we put up all the money. It struck me that we were at least traveling along the line that sound business would suggest.

Mr. NORRIS. When we put up all the money it is our ship; when we put up three-fourths of the money it is the other fellow's ship.

Mr. CARAWAY. I am aware of that; and when we put up all the money and conduct the business whatever loss occurs is the loss of the Government.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; and in case of war and we have to have a ship it costs us nothing if we own it, but we have to buy it if we do not own it, although we furnish three-fourths of the money to build it.

Mr. CARAWAY. I am just presenting the view that appeals to me. I am not trying to combat the Senator's viewpoint. We have millions of dollars worth of ships that we never were able to use and were not able to sell. Every dollar we put into them we lost and we were not able to establish and keep our ships upon the seas.

Now, here is a bill under which some business men believe we can induce private capital to furnish a part of the money and put in its time, its energy, and its knowledge of the shipping business. We will not have to pay as we have to do when we are running Government ships; we do not risk anything but the loan, because private interests will risk the price of the ships, the cost of operation, and the overhead, which involve enormous amounts. It looks to me as if it is an economical thing to do, if we believe it is worth while to put the Government money into a venture in the effort to try to keep American shipping on the seas. That is the way it appeals to me.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, if we should build the ships and own them, we, of course, would have to pay for their operation, but any income that might be derived would come to us, and not to the other fellow. In case of war—and I presume that is one of the great objects of having a merchant marine; while Senators talk only of seeing the American flag on the seas, I do not believe that is the real motive here; we want to place many ships on the sea so that we may use them as auxiliaries to the Navy. Whether we have private parties do it or whether the Government does it, the result, perhaps, so far as having the ships is concerned, is the same, but which method will be most economical for the Government? Will it be better for us to furnish three quarters of the money to build the ships through a loan, which, in my judgment, in a year or two will be less than 3 per cent, and let the private individual own the ships, or will it be better to have the Government put up a hundred per cent and own the ships and operate them through the Shipping Board, in which case whatever income may be derived will belong to the Government and in case of war or difficulty we will have the ships to begin with? In the other case we will pay, as our experience shows, much more than the ship originally cost and much more than it is worth. Then, if we are opposed to having the Government own anything, when the war is over, if the ship is not destroyed, we will give it to somebody for a song and let him sing the song and select it himself. That is the business end of it, it seems to me, as it will work out.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. FESS. The Senator made a statement a while ago which I think differentiates his viewpoint from mine, and, if it will not interrupt him, I should like to make a very brief statement of the view I have in contrast with the view which he has just expressed.

Mr. NORRIS. Very well.

Mr. FESS. It appears to me that, wherever it can be done, the Government ought to avoid entering into business enterprises if they can be carried on by private industry. That is my first fundamental proposition. The second one is that in case the Government undertakes to do a thing that involves a loss, such as operating a merchant marine—and all of us agree that at a certain stage, at least, it will be operated at a loss in competition with other nations which operate their shipping on a cheaper basis—other things being equal, if the loss suffered by the Government would be greater by operating the ships itself than by granting what might be called a subsidy to private enterprise, whether it would not be wiser to grant a subsidy to private enterprise and thereby suffer any loss that might accrue in a less degree?

The third proposition is this: Is it not conceivable that under American efficiency and business methods we have reached a point where a merchant marine may be operated on a basis of profit? I have feared from the beginning that, owing to the lack of urge on the part of the Government to guard against losses, as compared to private enterprise, the Government would not be so much concerned about operating free of loss as would private enterprise, because the Government is able to continue to operate at a great loss, as the loss could be made up by the Treasury. A private enterprise, on the other hand, can not do that; and, therefore, if there is not profit, the business will not be conducted.

My position is that, other things being equal, the Government ought to stay out of a business that private enterprise can carry on; second, that if there is to be a loss in the beginning, the Government may suffer a less loss by granting what may be called a subsidy than by paying the loss out of the Treasury as the result of operating the business itself; and the last point is, whether we are not assured of a permanent merchant marine on a profitable basis under private enterprise that we will not be assured of under Government operation.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I wish to take up the three suggestions the Senator has made. The first one I find no fault with, and I wish to discuss it briefly. The Government ought to stay out of business whenever private enterprise will do the work and can do it better than or as well as the Government. It is conceded that there is not any private enterprise that is going to build a merchant marine. They have had all these years in which to do it, and they have not done it, and it is conceded that private parties will not do it. So we get rid of that to start with. It is claimed by everybody—and I am not an expert; I have to take the other man's word for it—that unless the Government does something directly as a government or gives a subsidy to somebody for doing the same thing we will not have any merchant marine; that private individuals will not build it; they can not afford to do it, so it is said.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I think I am ready to concede that statement so long as our present legislation lasts—that is, so long as we require private enterprise to operate under present laws.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator would not repeal, for instance, the law as to coastwise shipping and open that character of shipping to the ships of the world?

Mr. FESS. No; I would not. I am willing to concede that without some assistance private enterprise is not likely to build up a merchant marine, because it is practically impossible to do so.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, there is not any dispute, then, about the first proposition. The Government should not go into the business unless it is necessary, and we all admit that it is necessary to do something if we are going to have a merchant marine.

The Senator's second proposition is that it may involve a less loss to pay this bonus to begin with than to build the ships and operate them by the Government. That may be true. Nobody knows. The Senator has not said that if we should have war next week or next year it would be the most expensive business proposition on earth to give this subsidy for private people to build the merchant marine. Everybody would concede that, because we would have to condemn the ships; we would have to take them over; we would have to pay not only the value of the ships which we took but we would have to pay the damages that were suffered by the owners of the ships by reason of interfering with and ruining their business. We know how that goes when the Government takes over something. It pays more than it is worth, as a general rule; and I am not particularly finding fault with it. If the Government takes over somebody's ship, it ought to pay him for the value of the ship; and if the ship is in a certain line of business, and that is worth something, it ought to pay the damages besides. That is all right.

Nobody knows how much it is going to cost, because no one can tell whether we are going to have a war to-morrow or next year, or whether we will ever have one; but on that score it is conceded—it must be—that the proper business proposition would be for the Government to build and operate the ships in the first place.

Now, let us take the other proposition, that it might be cheaper or we might have more of a merchant marine in the end, and keep it up better, if we should grant this subsidy.

That might be. It depends on the amount of the subsidy; but we have left out of the equation one consideration: What is it going to cost the Government? There is not any doubt but that we could use money enough and make the subvention high enough so that we could build up the greatest merchant marine on earth. We could build up a merchant marine greater than the combined shipping of all the other nations in the world. Suppose we provided by law that we would pay $100 a mile for carrying the mail for every ship that private parties built, and that we would furnish 100 per cent of the cost of the ship, and let them give us a mortgage on the ship at 1 per cent interest. We would get a pretty big merchant marine right off the bat; so it would be possible, by the right kind of a law of that sort, to get a wonderfully big merchant marine; but what would the taxpayers say? What would they have a right to say? And even in that case if we got into a war we would be up against the proposition of paying an exorbitant price for the very ships that we built with our own money.

To my mind, if we have to furnish the taxpayers' money to build the ships, then we ought to build them in the name of the taxpayers and operate them in the name of the taxpayers; and no private party can complain, because he admits that without getting a subsidy he would not go into the business. The only fellows who would kick would be the owners of foreign shipping, and I take it we are not trying to legislate for them here.

Mr. President, these comparisons that are so often made under existing law with what would be done under the subsidy provisions of this bill leave out of the question the fact that it is tacked onto a bill that itself, it is conceded, would bring about a merchant marine. I think it was conceded by everybody that the bill which passed the Senate would give us a reasonable merchant marine. We were going to get it under that bill. Now, we have put on that bill something that kills that part of it; and we ought not to make a comparison and say, "Unless we give a subvention as we have it here we will have to pay as the Senator from New York says we now pay to foreign shipping for carrying the mail." Under the bill which passed the Senate we would have carried the mail in Government ships, and when we take it all into consideration, Mr. President, it does not seem to me that there can be any doubt about the matter.

I am not advocating this position on the theory that the Government ought to go into the business. I should be glad to have it stay out. I have not been advocating that except as a necessity. I thought the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] stated it plainly. Private people will not do it. We are confronted with the proposition that if we want a merchant marine we will have to pay for it out of public funds; and I am opposed to using public funds to turn over to private individuals for private profit. I do not believe it can be defended upon a sound economical basis. It does not seem to me that it is the right use of public funds. It seems to me we have not any right to do it. We are using for an illegal purpose, as I look at it, the money of those who toil and pay the taxes. We ought not to turn over public funds to private individuals in order that private individuals may make a profit out of the transaction.

Moreover, Mr. President, we are doing for this class of people something that we never have done, and do not propose to do, for any other class of people. I have called the attention of the Senate to the comparison with agriculture. Following this conference report—I presume it will follow—we have a conference report on the so-called McNary-Haugen bill, which provides for assistance to agriculture; but it contains a specific provision that the farmers who get the benefit of the bill pay the cost of it themselves. I concede that men have a perfect right to disagree as to its merits; but the subsidy there, while perhaps advanced from Government funds in the first place, is paid for in the end by the men who toil and produce the things that are governed by that bill. Yet—so far, at least—we are denied any relief for agriculture, for that class of our people who are doing something which—without intending to cast any reflection upon shipping—is more necessary, more important to the American people and to the consumers of our country than those who are going to build and man ships.

If this conference report, if it must be agreed to—and I am told that it is going to be—I should like to see it go to the President in the same envelope with the conference report on the McNary-Haugen bill and let the President consider them together.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHEPPARD in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Fletcher	Locher	Schall

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-four Senators having responded to their names, a quorum is present. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to call up the conference report on the naval appropriation bill.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I can not agree to yield for anything while the conference report on the shipping bill is pending.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the interpretation placed upon the conference report by Senators shows that it is not free from ambiguity and that the bill which the report provides will inevitably lead to contradictory constructions and opposing policies. The Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] yesterday announced his great enthusiasm for the bill, and urged the adoption of the report. He gave as the paramount reason for his support of the bill that it would soon result in the Government going out of the shipping business. His position, as I understood it, when the bill was before the Senate some weeks ago, was that he favored a privately owned and operated merchant marine, but that if private capital did not engage in the construction and operation of ships he would support a policy calling for the Government to own and operate a merchant marine fleet. He now contends, that under the conference report provisions private capital, with the aid given by the bill, will construct ships for foreign service and, as he said, operate the same upon "the seven seas."

The Senator from Florida, in his statement yesterday, became vigorous and vehement in behalf of the bill, and declared that he gave his support to the conference report because he desired to retain the Shipping Board and to keep the Government in the shipping business. He stated that the most vital part of the bill, as reported by the conference, was section 1, which stated—> that the policy and the primary purpose of section 1 of the merchant marine act of 1920 are confirmed.

He interprets the act of 1920 as committing the Government irrevocably to the policy of owning and operating a merchant marine. The Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] who is the chairman of the Committee on Commerce, and who reported the bill to the Senate in January last, declared in his report that—

> We are at the parting of the ways on our merchant marine problem. * * * There seems to be no way by which we can get an American merchant marine constructed and owned by the Government. Concede for the sake of the argument all the objections that may be urged to the Government conducting the shipping business, we must choose between a Government merchant marine or no merchant marine at all.

We find, therefore, the chairman of the committee and one of the leading members of the committee interpret the bill and the conference report to mean that the Government is to continue in the shipping business and is to own and operate ships, not only for our foreign commerce but to be employed in our coastwise trade. The Senator from New York, as I have stated, places a different interpretation upon the bill and the report and insists that under the terms of this bill we will soon have a privately owned merchant marine.

With these differences of opinion upon the part of those who were members of the committee drafting the bill and conducting it through its various parliamentary stages it is certain that sharp differences of opinion will arise upon the part of the public and the bureaucratic machinery of the Government which will have to do with enforcing the law, as to its meaning and effect. It will mean, undoubtedly, that if the Shipping Board or the administration favor keeping the Government in the shipping business such a course will be pursued. Reasons will be offered, undoubtedly, for the adoption of such a policy. It will be contended that the advantages to be derived from the Government owning and operating ships are so great as to warrant, if not require, an indefinite continuation of such policy. Knowing, as I do, the characteristics of bureaucracy and of the abortive efforts to get rid of bureaus and Federal agencies and administrative boards, it is safe to predict that the Shipping Board, like the "old man of the sea," will be upon the back of the Federal Government for many, many years to come.

However, this prediction may fail if an administration shall come into power that is favorable to special interests and subsidies in various forms, and imposes its will upon Congress. Of course, the measure before us is not unchangeable, and if an administration of the character just alluded to shall control, greater bounties and subventions and benefits may, and probably will, be granted to private persons who may seek to engage in marine activities.

I confess that after a somewhat careful examination of the conference report and of the bill which the conferees have submitted, that I am not certain as to what the bill means or what it will accomplish. As I interpret it, however, it is neither fish, flesh, nor fowl. It is ambiguous, indefinite, and uncertain. It will be provocative of controversy and result in shifting and changing policies which, in the end, will prove most unsatisfactory and disadvantageous to the Government and to the country.

Mr. President, the United States prior to the Civil War had an imposing merchant marine, and American ships carrying American products were found in all parts of the world. No nation could compete with Americans in the construction of ships. We built them more cheaply and operated them more efficiently than did any country in the world. There is no reason why we can not compete with the world to-day in the building of ships, and surpass them in their operation. My recollection is that in 1903 the Commerce Reports, published by the Government, stated that steel steamers could be built on the Great Lakes more cheaply than on the Clyde. American labor is more efficient than European labor. Our factories and mills and manufacturing plants produce commodities cheaper than they are produced in most parts of Europe. We manufacture automobiles and other commodities and undersell the rest of the world.

It has often been charged—and I think there is ground for these charges—that we have been more concerned with shipbuilders than in shipbuilding and that Congress has too often been responsive to the demands of the owners of various shipyards and not sufficiently concerned in the building of ships to engage in foreign trade and commerce.

Legislation has been influenced by the steel interests and the shipbuilding interests, and they have interposed obstacles to the building up of a suitable merchant marine. The demands for extortionate tariff duties have not been ignored and unwise navigation laws have been placed upon the statute books, driven through Congress by sordid and selfish if not predatory interests, which result in driving American ships from the seas. If it were a fact that the growth of our merchant marine is handicapped because ships can be built at less cost in foreign lands, we could very quickly modify existing laws and provide for the purchase by American citizens of foreign-built vessels to be registered under the laws of the United States and to be operated under the American flag. At the present time no American can acquire a foreign-built ship and have it registered under our laws as an American ship and operated under the American flag. It is a fact which should be considered in the consideration of the shipping problem.

American capital following the Civil War found so many avenues for profitable investment in the building of railroads and manufacturing plants, and in internal and domestic activities that attention was diverted from ship construction and the merchant business generally. We ceased to be, for the time being, "sea minded" and were pushing with enthusiasm and feverish zeal the internal development of our country. Moreover, we were extending our foreign trade and commerce. We were finding markets for our surplus products in European countries, and payment in part for our exports were realized in meeting shipping charges. In other words, our agricultural and other products found foreign markets and payment in part for the same was made to the American exporters by furnishing ocean transportation.

I recall that Mr. Meeker in his book entitled "Shipping Subsidies" states, in substance, that it seems reasonably certain that with an organization for large production American shipyards could build ships as cheaply as English yards. Mr. President, the experiences of the Government since 1918 in the construction and operation of ships can bring no gratification to any American. We have expended more than three and one-half billion dollars in the last 9 or 10 years in the building and operation of American ships. This, of course, does not include the huge sums expended in the construction and operation of naval vessels. The Shipping Board's budget reveals the expenditure of this stupendous sum, and it also reveals losses substantially as great.

I do not think that all of the ships of the Shipping Board could be sold for $200,000,000. In other words, the billions of dollars which have been expended are now represented by ships of the inconsiderable value of $200,000,000. The operating expenses have consumed substantially all of the capital invested and also several hundred millions of dollars directly appropriated to meet annual deficits. In 1926 the Government operated in transoceanic trade 293 vessels. Privately owned vessels to the number of 170 were engaged in foreign trade during the same year. But, notwithstanding the revenues derived from the ocean carrying trade, the Shipping Board continued to absorb its capital and demand appropriations from the Federal Treasury to meet deficits.

Mr. Hoover in an address delivered by him in 1924 referred to the evils of governmental ownership of railroads and ships and the failures resulting from its efforts to engage in private business. He referred to the fact that certain utilities were not efficiently operated by the National or State Governments, as they were not "planned or equipped for the task." He stated that—

> The fathers purposely made our Government to a different model, for a different task. They thought liberty and individual rights worth safeguarding even at some cost in efficiency. But this very fact necessarily leaves to private enterprise many things which other nations can, if they prefer, do through government—after a fashion. On the governmental side the result has been one of which we are as proud as other peoples are envious. On the business side the accomplishment far surpasses anything they know. Through the one we have liberty; through the other, enterprise and decisiveness. * * *
> The very first fundamental obstacle to Government ownership that our form of government presents is the relation of the States to the Federal Government. For in our plan we conceive that liberty requires a great measure of decentralization in authority.

Mr. Hoover, in this strong address, refers to the evils of bureaucracy and speaks of the "dead hand of bureaucracy." He states that the Government can not operate as economically as private enterprise. That Secretary Hoover properly appraises the disadvantages arising from bureaucratic control of matters that belong to the field of private endeavor is apparent from the following statements contained in his address:

> The very first fundamental obstacle to Government ownership that our form of government presents is the relation of the States to the Federal Government. For in our plan we conceive that liberty requires a great measure of decentralization in authority. * * *

In speaking of our experiment in the shipping business he says:

> * * * Our national shipping is a daily sample of all the arguments I have given, and more. We paid $3,000,000,000 of the taxpayers' money for a fleet—some part of it was truly for war purposes—but we have written it down 90 per cent in six years to $300,000,000; and if the accounts were based upon true costs with interest and depreciation we should find that we are losing over $100,000,000 of the taxpayers' money a year in operating it. Yet private shipping is earning profits. Nor is this the fault of the Shipping Board; it is inherent in the system.

President Coolidge, in his message to Congress on the 6th of December, 1927, speaking of our merchant marine, states that—

> Public operation is not a success. No investigation, of which I have caused several to be made, has failed to report that it could not succeed or to recommend speedy transfer to private ownership.

Mr. President, I believe the views of Mr. Hoover and of President Coolidge just referred to are sound, and that if the measure before us was drawn in harmony with those views it would be for the best interests of the United States and the American people. If we enacted wise navigation laws and adjusted some of the tariff duties as those duties relate to ships and ship construction and repair, an adequate merchant marine would be constructed, subsidies would not be required, and Government operation would not only be unnecessary but would be disadvantageous to a uniform and proper foreign ocean service system. Mr. President, the bill before us indicates that the Government is to continue owning, building, and operating ships. The Shipping Board is to recondition and repair vessels, and may remodel and improve those in its possession and under its control, without restrictions, and to meet what the board may conceive to be "competition in the foreign trade of the United States."

The Shipping Board is to replace vessels owned by the United States, and in the possession or under the control of the board, and to construct up-to-date cargo, combination cargo and passenger, and passenger ships to give the United States what they conceive to be an adequate merchant marine. The board is also directed to present to Congress recommendations for new vessels which the board deems necessary for permanent operation under the United States flag in foreign trade. A construction loan fund of $250,000,000 is provided. There are no adequate limitations with respect to such loans and to whom they are to be made, and no adequate protection given the United States. However, the board has discretion to impose restrictive terms in making loans so as to defeat the apparent purpose of the loan provisions of the bill. The board is to determine when loans are made; what ships are to be built, whether in private shipyards or navy yards, and the types of ships to be constructed; how "they are to be fitted and equipped, and the character of engines and machinery and commercial appliances." In other words, the board has such unlimited authority that they may impose conditions so oppressive and obnoxious as to discourage the building of ships by private persons with funds obtained from the Public Treasury. Loans to the extent of three-fourths of the cost of the ships, or for their reconditioning or remodeling, may be made at rates of interest which are extremely low.

As I have heretofore stated, the bill is so uncertain and susceptible of such different construction and so framed as to permit of divergent policies that it is difficult to predict just what the effects of the measure will be. If it is designed to encourage private shipbuilding by governmental loans, the terms of the bill are liberal and generous, but liberal and generous at the expense of the Government. If those enforcing the law take the bureaucratic view, they can pursue a policy which will make the measure wholly inoperative, in so far as it relates to the building of ships by private persons under the loan features of the measure.

Another objectionable feature in the bill is that which perpetuates a provision of the act of 1920, extending the loan feature to ships to be built or reconditioned or improved, for the coastwise trade alone. Senators know that the Government has given a complete monopoly to those engaged in the coastwise trade. Our coastwise tonnage is very great and is adequate for present needs. With a monopoly enjoyed by those in the coastwise trade, it is highly improper, in any aspect of the case, to provide loans for the building of ships to be used in our intercoastal trade. It has been proclaimed that this bill is to provide ships for our foreign trade, not our coastwise trade, and yet the measure before us extends the same loan features for coastal ships as for those that are to sail the seas.

The subvention features of the bill are not sufficiently restricted and the subventions provided are the equivalent of subsidies.

Mr. President, the measure before us I regard as unwise, unjust to the Government and to the American people. The bill, in my opinion, fails to provide a merchant marine or accomplish anything of benefit to the American people. With my present views, I shall not support the motion to adopt the conference report.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, I am just beginning to awaken somewhat to the issue that is being presented to the Senate and to the country by this conference report. I remember back in 1922 we were convened in extra session on the 20th day of November for the purpose of enacting a ship subsidy bill. That question had been somewhat an issue in the election that year. Everywhere that a candidate had stood for ship subsidies he had been defeated in the election. The people did not approve of that policy.

In my platform during that campaign I stood in opposition to ship subsidy. After the election so many of those who favored the ship subsidies were found to have been defeated that it was absolutely certain a ship subsidy bill could not be passed if it went over to the new Congress. Thereupon the President convened Congress in extraordinary session for the purpose of passing that bill with a lame-duck Congress.

Mr. President, we were under a new economic theory in those days. It was President Harding who first announced the slogan of "Less government in business and more business in government." Since then we have had experiences of more business in government. We had the experience of Forbes with business in the government of the Veterans' Bureau, grabbing and corrupting the aid that the Government owed to the defenders of its life. That was one instance of business in government.

We had business in government with an Attorney General of the United States, Harry M. Daugherty, and Jess Smith conducting the business office just a few doors from the office of the Attorney General, an organized business of bribery in the Government of the United States.

We had business in government in the Department of the Interior, when Albert B. Fall bargained away the resources of the people of the United States to this business reaching out for the control of the Government, assisted, it now appears, by the head of the Post Office Department and the chairman of the Republican National Committee.

Are we going back to that old Harding slogan of more business in government and less government in business? I am not, for one. I am for the Government doing its own business and kicking this corrupt power of business clear out of the Government. If we are going back to that old theory, then I say that Will Hays ought to be the temporary chairman of the Republican National Convention, Harry M. Daugherty ought to be the permanent chairman, and Albert B. Fall ought to be the chairman of the resolutions committee.

They could set up this theory of business in government. They could tell us what it means and what it leads to. They could point to its glories and to its triumphs.

Now we are back here again putting business in government in the conference report now before us. I do not like the looks of the situation. I want to ask the chairman of the committee what are the differences between this bill and the bill over which we fought and which we successfully defeated by a filibuster in February of 1923?

Mr. JONES. There is a very material difference. The bill now before us does not go to any extent along the lines laid down in that bill. Of course, I do not shy at the word "subsidy" myself. This bill provides for what is called a mail subvention. I am perfectly willing myself to call it a subsidy, but it does not go any further than that; that is, it does not provide what is ordinarily termed a subsidy.

Mr. BROOKHART. It is an indirect instead of a direct subsidy, so far as mail contracts are concerned?

Mr. JONES. No; I would not put it that way. I think it is pretty direct, so far as I am concerned, but there is not what we ordinarily term a subsidy to induce the building of cargo ships.

Mr. BROOKHART. What does the Senator estimate will be the amount of the mail subsidy?

Mr. JONES. I understand if it is carried out to about the extent that we would like to see it and the ships are built that we hope will be built and the routes would be all that we hope will be established, it will probably be from $7,000,000 to $10,000,000. But it is estimated by the Post Office Department that the increase of business will bring about a great increase in the postal business, and the revenues from the Postal Service will very likely take care of the mail subvention.

Mr. BROOKHART. If the mail increases, the subsidy will increase in like proportion, will it not?

Mr. JONES. No.

Mr. BROOKHART. The subsidy is a definite fixed amount, is it not?

Mr. JONES. Yes, in a way. It is so much per nautical mile traveled by the ship.

Mr. BROOKHART. The bill which we defeated in 1923 provided about $50,000,000 of subsidy; did it not?

Mr. JONES. No; I think that was estimated to cost about $30,000,000.

Mr. BROOKHART. That is correct. This provides about $10,000,000.

Mr. JONES. Yes; from $7,000,000 to $10,000,000.

Mr. BROOKHART. So far as those two items are concerned, there is no difference in principle in the two bills?

Mr. JONES. Speaking for myself, I do not see any particular difference; but there are those who make a distinction between a mail subvention and a subsidy pure and simple.

Mr. HOWELL. Is it not a fact that the bill previously considered provided only for mail subventions?

Mr. JONES. Oh, no; the Senator is entirely wrong about that. The other bill to which the Senator referred provided for what we ordinarily and commonly call a subsidy for the building of cargo ships.

Mr. HOWELL. But it could not be paid to any ship except a ship which carried mail.

Mr. JONES. Oh, yes; it could.

Mr. HOWELL. Upon what theory?

Mr. JONES. We did not confine it to ships carrying mail. The bill was not framed on the theory that it only applied to those ships that carried mail. This bill is so framed. There is the real difference.

Mr. HOWELL. I would like to ask if it was not urged that the only theory upon which a subsidy could be granted to vessels was the fact that they carried United States mail?

Mr. JONES. No; I do not think so at all.

Mr. HOWELL. Then it was held that a subsidy or bounty was perfectly legal and lawful under the Constitution?

Mr. JONES. We tried to get a bill through on that theory, but we did not get it to a vote.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. BROOKHART. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. The bill the Senator was against was a bill proposing a subsidy on tonnage and had no reference to services rendered, as here. The distinction I make in my mind is that this is a payment for services rendered, while the other bill was a subsidy pure and simple.

Mr. BROOKHART. But this is a subsidy payment of more than the services are worth, and I see no difference between that kind of a subsidy and a direct payment out of the Treasury. What difference is there in principle?

Mr. COPELAND. I do not think the Senator is right, if he will permit me to say so. The Postmaster General under this bill is authorized to make contracts up to a maximum which is fixed in the bill, and what for? For services rendered in carrying the mail.

Mr. BROOKHART. And that maximum is deliberately fixed; as the Senator from Washington very frankly and honestly says it is fixed, so it amounts to a subsidy. It is more than the service is worth. I do not think the Senator from New York ought to try to camouflage or cover up that fact.

Mr. COPELAND. I do not wish to camouflage anything.

Mr. BROOKHART. That is not fair to the Senate.

Mr. COPELAND. I do not wish to camouflage anything, because there is an honest difference of opinion, and always has been, between the Senator from Washington and myself about the bill. My contention is that it provides for services rendered. The favorable thing about it and the thing that commends itself to the shipping interests and the thing which will encourage them to build the ships and operate under it is that they can make long-term contracts. They will know that for a period of 10 years they are going to have so much income. How much that income will be is a matter of adjustment between the shipping interests concerned, the Shipping Board, and the Postmaster General. My conviction is that it is a payment for services rendered; that the favor in it, if there is one, is that we consent to a long-term contract, which we did not before. No shipping interest, of course, will build a vessel when it has only one year of certainty as to the carriage of mail between New York and some point in South America; but under this arrangement there will be a contract agreement between the Shipping Board and the Postmaster General on the one hand, and the shipping interests on the other hand, that for a period of 10 years they shall receive so much for the carriage of the mail.

Mr. BROOKHART. That sounds very nice, but the Senator from Washington—and I have not any doubt about his fairness or about his accuracy in this matter—says that these contract prices are paid to the extent of about $10,000,000 in subsidy, and he was not even willing to say it was an indirect subsidy, a payment for services, as the Senator from New York said. It is so plain and he wants to be so fair about it and says it is a direct subsidy for that purpose. I myself think that it is.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. BROOKHART. I yield.

Mr. SIMMONS. I desire to ask the Senator in charge of the conference report a question. As I understand it, the $10,000,000 spoken of by the Senator from Iowa and the Senator from Washington means that the Federal Government will pay the American ships purchased from the Shipping Board or built outside, as it may be, floating the American flag, for carrying the mails $10,000,000 more than we would have to pay for the same service if the mails were carried under foreign flags. Is that true?

Mr. JONES. Oh, no; that is not what I meant at all.

Mr. SIMMONS. That is what I want to know, whether the Senator meant that.

Mr. JONES. That is not what I meant. That is the amount which it is estimated will have to be paid, if all the ships are built that we really expect to be built under the bill, for the mail that they carry. If they carry the mail which has heretofore been carried by foreign ships, of course we will have an offset to that extent.

Mr. SIMMONS. Can the Senator tell what that offset would amount to? I want to see how much we would be paying the American ships in excess of what we would pay the foreign ships rendering the same service.

Mr. JONES. We are paying the foreign ships now, I think, something over $3,000,000. If we should carry all of that mail on our own ships, of course that $3,000,000 would be an offset.

Mr. SIMMONS. That would reduce it to $7,000,000.

Mr. JONES. The estimate is from $7,000,000 to $10,000,000.

Mr. SIMMONS. The consideration, and the only consideration, the Government would receive for that $7,000,000 in excess of what we would pay foreign ships is that the American ships shall be so conditioned that they will be equipped as naval auxiliaries in time of war.

Mr. JONES. That is one of the conditions.

Mr. SIMMONS. Is not that a basic consideration?

Mr. JONES. It is a very material consideration.

Mr. SIMMONS. That is the only substantial consideration, and that is in itself a very substantial consideration.

Mr. JONES. It certainly is.

Mr. BROOKHART. In order to become a little more familiar with the facts and have a little more accurate information, I ask the chairman of the committee what other loan provisions are made with reference to private parties? I was not present when he probably explained that in presenting the conference report.

Mr. JONES. The loan provision in the bill is about as follows: I want the Senator to remember that under the act of 1920 we provided for a loan construction fund which might amount to $125,000,000. It was to be made up of receipts from the sale of ships during the first five years. It did not, in fact, amount to $125,000,000, but we have extended the time. The bill now provides for a loan construction fund up to $125,000,000 and also contains a further provision that appropriations are authorized to the extent of bringing that loan fund up to $250,000,000. That, of course, depends entirely upon whether or not Congress acts along that line. But we are authorized to make the appropriations to bring the fund up to $250,000,000, and then it is made a revolving fund.

The bill provides that loans may be made out of that fund up to three-fourths of the value of ships, and the rate of interest in brief is the lowest rate on Government obligations since a certain date in 1917.

Mr. BROOKHART. I would like to ask the Senator now if that is not putting the Government into the money-loaning business?

Mr. JONES. The Senator can construe that just the same as I can. We authorize the loans to be made to persons who will build ships of a certain class on certain approved plans.

Mr. BROOKHART. Is it any more putting the Government in the business to have it own and operate these ships than it is to go into the money-lending business or underwriting the shipbuilding business?

Mr. JONES. I do not know just what the Senator has in mind. I have stated frankly what are the provisions of the bill.

Mr. BROOKHART. Let us see. The conference report says in section 1 that "the policy and the primary purpose declared in section 1 of the merchant marine act are hereby confirmed."

Mr. JONES. That refers to the merchant marine act of 1920.

Mr. BROOKHART. That policy was to turn the ships back to private ownership, was it not?

Mr. JONES. The first provision of the act of 1920 provided that the Government should build those ships, and so on, with the ultimate aim of having them in private hands.

Mr. BROOKHART. When the present bill came up in the Senate we changed that policy and the Senate declared for Government ownership and operation of the ships as a policy.

Mr. JONES. Practically we changed it, and yet theoretically we did not, because in that bill we provided for the sale of the ships, but by unanimous vote of the Shipping Board.

Mr. BROOKHART. Only by unanimous vote, and that, we believed, would practically end the sale of the ships.

Mr. JONES. I myself did not think so, but a great many did.

Mr. BROOKHART. Then in the conference report we substantially abandon the policy for which the Senate declared in passing the bill.

Mr. JONES. I do not think so. We have provided, however, that a sale may be made upon a vote of five members of the Shipping Board.

Mr. BROOKHART. Are the provisions of the bill as it passed the Senate retained?

Mr. JONES. Substantially the provisions of the bill as it passed the Senate are retained, except in that one respect of the consent to the sale being by five members of the Shipping Board instead of by unanimous vote of the Shipping Board. All the other substantial provisions of the bill as it passed the Senate are retained, and the policy of the bill as it passed the Senate is simply supplemented by these other provisions, looking more directly to the private building, ownership, and operation of ships.

Mr. BROOKHART. Is there any provision in the bill as to where the new ships to be built by private parties through Government loans shall be constructed?

Mr. JONES. I do not believe there is an express provision with reference to that.

Mr. BROOKHART. Is there anything to prevent the building of ships in foreign yards at a lower expense than they can be built in the United States, and then, together with the subsidy, putting ships constructed in the United States out of business?

Mr. JONES. I was mistaken in the statement which I made a moment ago. I rather thought I was after I made it. This is the language of the bill as embodied in the conference report:

The board may use such fund—

That is, the loan fund—

to the extent it thinks proper, upon such terms as the board may prescribe, in making loans to aid persons citizens of the United States in the construction by them in private shipyards or navy yards in the United States of vessels of the best and most efficient type.

So that if we make a loan for the building of a ship the building must be done in domestic yards.

Mr. BROOKHART. In United States yards?

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. BROOKHART. In a private yard or in a Government yard?

Mr. JONES. It may be done in a private yard or it may be in a navy yard.

Mr. BROOKHART. There is no provision or regulation of the price at which the Shipping Board may sell these Government ships after they are built?

Mr. JONES. The ships which may be built through the loan fund will not be Government ships.

Mr. BROOKHART. I understand, but I am now talking about those that are either owned at present by the Government or built by the Government.

Mr. JONES. No. The only provision we have affecting their sale is the requirement that there shall be five concurring votes in the Shipping Board to effect a sale.

Mr. BROOKHART. Then ships could be built by the Government itself and could afterwards be sold to private parties at a lower price than the cost of construction, and in that way a subsidy be paid to private interests?

Mr. JONES. I can not conceive that five members of the Shipping Board would permit anything like that.

Mr. BROOKHART. Have not the Government ships that have been sold by the Shipping Board been uniformly sold at much less than their real value?

Mr. JONES. I would not say that they had been sold at less than their real value; they have been sold at much less than their real cost; but there is quite a difference between the real cost and real value of these ships for commercial purposes at the time they were sold.

Mr. HOWELL. I should like to ask if it is not a fact that the Mediterranean fleet was sold for $7.50 a ton?

Mr. JONES. I do not know. I know there were several sales made at very low figures, and yet I do not say the ships were sold at a lower price than they should have been sold. I do not know all the conditions that confronted the Shipping Board. I have had my opinion with reference to some of the sales that have been made, but the Senator must remember that as the law now stands, and as the law has been in the past, three members of the Shipping Board out of four could and can sell Government ships.

Mr. HOWELL. Yes; and did not the Senate provide that no ship could be sold without a vote of seven members of the Shipping Board, and now the Senate conferees propose to recede from that position?

Mr. JONES. That is true; I have just stated that we have cut it down to five; in other words, not three out of five, but there must be five votes out of a membership of seven. That is certainly much better than the law as it now is and as it will continue to be unless we agree to this conference report. Under the law as it now is, unless this conference report shall be adopted, three out of five members of the Shipping Board could sell the ships; in other words, four constitute a quorum and three a majority of it. I myself do not want that continued.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, I think now I have the general situation somewhat in mind. It seems to me that we have reached a point where we are perfectly willing to put the Government into business for the purpose of aiding in the creation of a new bunch of shipbuilding millionaires. It seems to me that we are ready at once when it is to serve some special or private interest to go into the Treasury of the United States for almost any amount. It is proposed to authorize the appropriation of $250,000,000 without batting an eye for the benefit of a few private millionaire shipbuilders of the United States; and yet with six and one-half million farmers in this country brought to the verge of bankruptcy by the adoption of such national policies as that relating to railroad transportation, that relating to banking questions, that relating to tariff legislation and to public utility and patent legislation, if we propose to adopt a similar policy with reference to agriculture it must be vetoed.

Mr. President, so far as I am concerned there will be no subsidy from the United States Treasury for any special private interest. I believe the Government itself ought to do its own business. I believe in a merchant marine; I should like to have merchant ships carrying our own products to the markets of the world, but I want the Government to do that thing itself if it can not be done by private parties without the aid of the Government.

There is no basic necessity for the action proposed; life and death do not depend upon Government subsidies to private shipbuilders. Therefore there is no reason of necessity for looting the Treasury in this way. I wish to say that the Senator who votes for this kind of a subsidy and votes against a measure for the relief of agriculture is unfair to every principle of Americanism, is unfair to every idea of equality as laid down in the very beginning of our Government and advocated in every age through which our Government has passed. But that is our situation here now. The Government is going into the money-lending business at the lowest possible interest rate to private parties for profiteering upon the whole country.

Mr. McMASTER. Mr. President——

Mr. BROOKHART. I yield to the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. McMASTER. I have not been able to hear all the discussion on the conference report. How much money does the Government propose to lend under the bill as now presented by the conferees?

Mr. BROOKHART. It is authorized to lend up to $250,000,000.

Mr. McMASTER. That is, loans may be made up to that amount to shipping companies for the purpose of building ships?

Mr. BROOKHART. If I understood the figures of the Senator from Washington correctly, $125,000,000 are provided, but the Government is authorized to lend up to $250,000,000.

Mr. McMASTER. What percentage of the value of the ships may be loaned?

Mr. BROOKHART. The Government may loan up to 75 per cent of the value of the ships.

Mr. McMASTER. At what rate of interest?

Mr. BROOKHART. At the lowest Government rate of interest. The Federal land banks can lend up to 50 per cent of the value of the farms of the United States.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. BROOKHART. I yield.

Mr. BLAINE. The Federal land banks can lend up to 50 per cent of the value of the real estate and 20 per cent of the value of the improvements.

Mr. BROOKHART. I should modify my statement to that extent. The Senator from Wisconsin is correct.

Now I desire to ask why it was that this bill was not presented in its full view in the first instance? Why did we not in the first instance have an opportunity to meet these vital questions and discuss this absolute change of front as to policy. The bill passed the Senate in a form satisfactory to every progressive mind in the Senate. It was a plain, straight Government construction and Government operation bill as it passed the Senate. The Government should transact its own business.

Let me digress, Mr. President, to say that the coming question is whether or not the Government will transact its own business or whether it will submit to be looted by private business and to having the resources of all the people placed at the command of private interests for greed and gain. Yet this great question was in no way presented to the Senate. We passed a bill with a different declaration of policy and framed on a different theory. It went to the House, and now it comes back here, and the first opportunity we have to consider the question of again putting the Government into business for the aid of private parties is on a conference report. It is unfair to the country.

I had my experience with the people of my State upon this issue in 1922. I was sustained by an overwhelming majority when I stood against subsidies of this kind. Other Senators running for reelection were defeated in many of the States because they stood for a ship subsidy. I do not think the sentiment of the people of this country has changed since those days. I think they see it now as they did then; and I think they will stand ready to defeat those who change this policy by a vote on this conference report.

So far as I am concerned, I am ready to fight this proposition to the same extent that I did in 1923. I think it ought to be defeated. If it can not be defeated by a vote, I think we should defeat it by debate until the end of the session. We did that before. So far as I am concerned, I do not believe in a filibuster without a just cause. I would not have filibustered the other bill; but after the issue had been made in the election, after those who favored this policy had been defeated, and when it was known that the new Congress would be against a ship subsidy bill of any kind, then the attempt was made even by an extra session of Congress to force that bill through by the votes of Senators and Representatives who had been defeated in the election. I counted that a filibuster against the people of the United States, and I was ready to meet it upon its own ground. I did meet it in that way; and, assisted by a considerable number on this side of the Chamber and by a large number on the other side of the Chamber, we defeated that bill by debate; and the debate did not end until the 22d day of February, 1923, beginning practically, as it were, on the 20th of November, in the extra session.

I am ready to debate this question now until after all these conventions. I am ready to debate it until after all these conventions. I am ready to debate it until this matter is defeated. I want the Boulder Dam bill to pass at this session, too; but I do not believe this is a fair way to dispose of the rights of the American people.

Unless the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. BLAINE] had started this discussion and called attention to what happened in this conference, almost without consideration this thing would have slipped over; and this policy, defeated and rejected by the American people, would have passed and become a part of the future triumphs of the Wall Street crowd that is destroying every interest of the common people in this country.

It is proposed to make a 75 per cent loan on these ships; and they will be built by a subsidiary, irresponsible corporation. No responsible party will sign that mortgage or that contract. The responsible party will be in the background, safe and sound, regardless of what may happen. There is no adequate security there. It is a looting of the Treasury. It is on a par with Teapot Dome itself. We have had enough of this Teapot Dome business in the United States; and I want to say to the Republican Party, as a final word, that you can not go forward with these policies; you can not go forward with the looting of the Treasury in the interest of the big financial crowd that rules this country, with a policy that denies equality to the farmers of the country and equality to the labor of the country, that denies equality to the little business concerns of the country, that sends 177,000 little corporations even to the verge of bankruptcy; you can not point to the prosperity of the few millionaires you are creating by this policy of the United States Treasury, and call that prosperity, and elect anybody President of the United States in the next general election.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOWELL in the chair). The Secretary will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Fletcher	McKellar	Shipstead
Barkley	George	McLean	Shortridge
Bayard	Gerry	McMaster	Simmons
Black	Gillett	McNary	Smoot
Blaine	Glass	Mayfield	Steck
Borah	Goff	Metcalf	Steiwer

Edge	King	Sackett	Wheeler
Edwards	La Follette	Schall
Fess	Locher	Sheppard

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BROOKHART in the chair). Eighty-two Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I move that the report be recommitted to the committee of conference with instructions to strike out all of that part of the report relating to the increased subvention for carrying the mails and also that part relating to the increase in the loan fund and the authorization for an appropriation; and upon that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I make the point of order that the motion is out of order. The committee of conference has really been dissolved. The report has been made to the House and acted upon by it, and there is no committee of conference to which the matter can be referred.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, it seems to me that the Senate possesses the prerogative to act upon a conference report transmitted to it. It may reject the report in its entirety; it may recommit, or approve it with modifications.

May I be pardoned for repeating my statement, because when I began the Senator from Iowa was in the Chair, and now the Vice President has returned.

I was observing, in response to the suggestion made by the Senator from Washington, that the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin was proper under the rules. We have before us a conference report. The Senator from Wisconsin has moved to recommit the report with instructions to eliminate therefrom the provision dealing with so-called subventions. In other words, his motion is that we disagree to the report, that is, that we approve of the report with the elimination of the provision to which I have just adverted, and desire further conference upon the matters of disagreement. The Senate, I submit, has control of the report when it is brought before it by the conferees. To say that the Senate may not express its disapproval of some provision of the report is to deny to a legislative body prerogatives which, it seems to me, it possesses inherently, and which it has the authority to assert. No one can deny the Senate's power to reject this conference report. May I not go further and send it back to the conferees, or at least, if there are no longer conferees, ask for a further conference? There may be some merit in the point made that the committee on conference has dissolved of its own motion before its duties were fully discharged; before its report was acted upon.

Conceding for the moment that the conference committee has voluntarily disintegrated, the Senate could, upon disagreeing to the report, appoint further conferees, and ask the House to name conferees, in order that the disagreements might, if possible, be removed. It seems to me that the Senate has the right to advise the House that the conference has not been accepted; that the Senate insists upon its disagreement, and requests a further conference. The motion of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. BLAINE] is tantamount to such action. And if the House signified its willingness to accord another conference, obviously the Presiding Officer of the Senate, under the usual practice, would have the right to name conferees.

We are really in a situation where the matter can be treated de novo. We are in a situation where the Senate disagrees to a conference report and asks for further consideration by a committee selected by the House and a committee named by the Senate, to see if the disagreements between the two bodies may be ironed out. So I respectfully insist that the mere fact that the conferees have dispersed does not cripple the Senate and deny it the right to act upon the conference report in any way it pleases.

Certainly, the Senator from Washington concedes that we have the right to disagree to the conference report. What would it mean we should disagree? It would mean that the House would be advised of the fact of disagreement, and either body could then initiate proceedings looking to the appointment of conferees with a view to reaching an agreement upon the disputed points.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, without conceding the right to make the motion, I am perfectly willing to withdraw the point of order and let the matter come to a vote.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. BLAINE].

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I would like to ask a question of the chairman of the committee. In the bill, as passed by the Senate, we made no provision for payment for the carrying of the mails; so that is new matter?

Mr. JONES. That is new matter, put in by the House.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Was it carried in the bill as passed by the House?

Mr. JONES. Yes; it was an amendment made by the House to the Senate bill.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The House measure is merely a substitute for the Senate bill?

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. It strikes out everything, and substitutes an entirely new bill?

Mr. JONES. In one sense it is an entirely new bill. It embodies all the provisions of the bill as passed by the Senate, and some additional provisions.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. So that really the Senate has never had an opportunity, except as the opportunity is now accorded it, to discuss the subject of this subvention for carrying the mail?

Mr. JONES. Except as it might have done so before the bill was sent to conference.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, what is the motion?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion of the Senator from Wisconsin is to recommit the conference report with certain instructions.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll, and Mr. ASHURST responded in the negative.

Mr. SIMMONS. I understand it is not only a motion to recommit, but it is a motion to recommit with instructions.

I want to know what the instructions are.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from Wisconsin restate the instructions?

Mr. BLAINE. The instructions are to strike out from the conference report those provisions relating to the increased subventions for carrying the mail, and also the provision relating to increasing the loan fund and the appropriation authorized—to strike out the subsidy and the additional loan feature.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. BLAINE. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. If the motion to recommit with the instructions referred should prevail, would it probably result in the prevention of the passage of the proposed legislation during the session?

Mr. BLAINE. My judgment is that it would not.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I ask the question because I have heard a number of Senators express the opinion that it would defeat the proposed legislation.

Mr. BLAINE. I think not. I think there would be no obstruction.

Mr. HOWELL addressed the Chair.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I make the point of order that the roll call is in progress and that debate is out of order, the Senator from Arizona having responded to his name.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is well taken, and the clerk will proceed with the roll call.

The legislative clerk resumed the calling of the roll.

Mr. BAYARD (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED]. In his absence, I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BRATTON. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON]. I understand that if he were present he would vote as I intend to vote, and therefore I shall vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. KENDRICK (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BINGHAM], who is absent. I am informed that if present he would vote as I have voted, and therefore I allow my vote to stand.

Mr. WHEELER. I have a general pair with the Senator from Idaho [Mr. GOODING], who is absent. Not knowing how he would vote if present, I withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I would vote "yea."

Mr. WATSON (after having voted in the negative). I have a pair with the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], who is absent. I am unable to secure a transfer, and therefore I withdraw my vote.

Mr. WALSH of Montana (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a pair with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DALE], which I transfer to the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. JONES. I desire to announce the following general pairs:

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] with the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL]; and

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER] with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BLEASE].

I also desire to announce that the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] is detained from the Senate on official business. If present, he would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 24, nays 54, as follows:

So the Senate refused to recommit the conference report with instructions.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, some 10 years or more ago the Government invested about $3,000,000,000 in a commercial shipping enterprise, under the control of the United States Shipping Board. It is reported that the assets of this board now do not exceed some $250,000,000. A greater portion of all this vast sum has vanished, a loss to the people of the country, and in my opinion a loss largely due to the policies adopted by the Shipping Board and the administration. Whereas we have been endeavoring to conduct a commercial business, we have flouted the primary principles of business in doing so. As soon as a shipping line became profitable it was sold. Lines that were unprofitable were operated. Whenever bids were made for lines that had been established, they were sold at ridiculously low prices.

I have in mind one particular case. The Government established and was operating a line from New York to Mediterranean ports. If I remember aright, it included in the neighborhood of 18 vessels. Undoubtedly those vessels at the time they were sold could not have been replaced for $50 a dead-weight ton.

They were sold for $7.50 a dead-weight ton, one-fourth down and the balance payable in 10 annual installments. What did that mean? It meant the Government received, from a corporation with little net assets, a contract to purchase the vessels at $7.50 a dead-weight ton, whose reproduction value could not have been less than $50 a dead-weight ton. That Senators may understand that I am not exaggerating: In July, 1924, the most ordinary specification freighter could not be purchased in British markets for less than about $38 a dead-weight ton. The ships in question were not ordinary specification freighters. Yet they sold them for $7.50 a ton—$1.87 down, the balance payable at the rate of 56 cents per ton per year. Yet the annual depreciation on these vessels was nearly $2 per annum per dead-weight ton.

It is such policies that largely have frittered away the $3,000,000,000 of the American people invested in our commercial shipping enterprise. I believe this is one of the most depressing episodes in the history of governmental business. It is asserted that the Government can not successfully conduct business. It can, in my opinion, if it is conducted for blood. But how has this business been conducted? A former head of the Shipping Board, when asked whether the reason the Shipping Board is losing money was not due to the fact that it is trying to run a commercial business without hurting its competitors, stated, "It is far worse than that. It is attempting to run a commercial business aiding its competitors." That statement typifies in a few words the policy that has guided the Shipping Board.

The chairman of the Commerce Committee came before the Senate with a report from his committee and stated in effect that he was satisfied the only way American shipping could be maintained on the seas was for the United States to continue in the business, but upon different terms. One of the principal changes he proposed was that the Shipping Board could not sell ships for a song unless a large proportion of the Shipping Board approved of the sale. The Senate finally amended the bill so that sacrifice of shipping could not be repeated without a unanimous vote of the Shipping Board. There are seven members, and it was provided in the Senate bill that if a vessel were sold there would have to be seven votes in favor of the transaction. The bill was opposed by the shipping interests. It went to the House and has been amended, and comes back to us now with a provision that ships can be sold upon a vote of five members.

Why did we make that provision? Do Senators realize that the Senate bill and the bill as it comes here now authorized an unlimited appropriation for the building of new vessels? It was felt, when the provision was made, that something should be done to prevent the new ships being sold, almost immediately, for a song. The anchor to leeward was the unanimous vote of the Shipping Board. That provision respecting appropriations is still in the bill, but the bill comes back with a provision that five members of the Shipping Board can sell the new vessels at any time, yes; within six months or less after completion, for one-half or one-quarter of what they cost.

The bill also provides for the reconditioning of vessels. The history of the Shipping Board shows that it has reconditioned vessels at great expense and then sold them for half, or less than half, the cost of repairs. Why? The policy of the Shipping Board seems to have been to give to the shipping interests of the country a subsidy notwithstanding Congress had refused it. How? By selling them ships at bargain prices. In my opinion it is little less than robbery of the American public that has been indulged in.

Mr. President, the bill also provides for the loaning of $250,000,000 or more to shipping interests—upon what terms? Upon terms that no private interest would consider for a moment; upon terms that the United States Government will not grant to farmers. When the Federal Farm Loan Board was created and a Government loan was placed in its hands, initially, for the establishment of land banks, it was provided that if any farmer borrowed money he must join an association, and that every member of that association had to guarantee every loan made; furthermore, that there should be 12 banks in the country, and that each of the 12 banks should reciprocally guarantee the loans of every other bank.

Now it is proposed to place in the hands of the Shipping Board, to be loaned to the private shipping interests of the country, more than $250,000,000, to be loaned how? Are shipping corporations to be called upon to form associations and guarantee each other's loans? Oh, no; they would not want it that way. Why? Because corporations with little capital will be formed for each contract. They will proceed to borrow from the Government and if an enterprise succeeds the Government will be repaid, but if an enterprise fails the Government, of course, will hold the sack. They are to be able to borrow three-quarters of the cost of new vessels or the cost of reconditioning of an old vessel. If we think best to loan money to the shipping interests, we should compel them to form associations just as borrowing farmers are required to form associations.

Not only that, but it is proposed to let them have money at rates that only the best security can command, and that is United States Government obligations, tax free. The bill provides that these relatively large sums of money can be loaned to shipping interests at the rate, in effect at the time of application, upon any Government obligation outstanding, issued subsequent to 1917.

Prior to 1917 we issued Government securities at rates as low as 2 per cent. Seldom has the country been so prosperous as it is to-day. Seldom has money been so plentiful as to-day, and hence we can expect that possibly Government securities may be issued at rates as low as 2 per cent, and then the shipping companies will get Government money at 2 per cent.

But how about the farmer? A farmer must have the guarantee of all his neighbors. He has to pay not less than 5 per cent at the present time for his money. What is the Government paying to-day? Upon about $12,000,000,000 of Liberty bonds it is paying 4¼ per cent, and yet we propose to let shipping institutions, without adequate security, without guaranteeing each other's loans, have Government money for from 3 to 3⅛ per cent and possibly down as low as 2 or 2½ per cent. Is there any wonder that our agricultural interests feel that they are continually discriminated against, that industry and every other line of endeavor is to have protection, is to have consideration, but not the farmer?

Mr. President, this conference report should not be adopted. I presume I am speaking to no purpose, but nevertheless I can not but say we are forgetting, in connection with a great business the Government is carrying on, the primordial principles that govern private business, and that render such business successful. It may be that those who advocate these provisions and that the Government should get out of business, believe that thereby they will ultimately get the Government out of the shipping business; however, in so doing they will be putting the Government into the loaning business, and putting it in the loaning business upon about the same indefensible, losing basis whereon our shipping business has been conducted. They will be putting the Government into the loaning business upon such a basis that the Government will not, can not, get its money back.

Then, what more will we be doing? We will provide a bounty also to the very interests that will borrow this money, practically without security. True, in so doing we will be giving them but the same privilege which the manufacturing interests of the country are enjoying through the tariff.

Senators will recall that Hamilton held that a tariff and a bounty were practically the same thing, and that he thought a bounty the more desirable of the two. So we are proposing to do for the shipping interests exactly what we are doing for our manufacturing interests. We propose to give them a bounty, a subsidy, a subvention, in addition to these huge loans and low interest rates. However, when we have contemplated giving the farmers of the country a bounty, we have been assured by the administration that it is opposed not only to an equalization fee but also to a bounty. In short, we are adopting a policy for shipping that we are assured can not be adopted—nor anything comparable therewith—for the farmer, and we are doing it right out offhand.

Yes; we are providing for a subvention in the way of mail contracts for the very interests to which we are to loan our money that will cost the Government as estimated from seven to ten million dollars annually, but there is no limit to what it may be.

The proponents of this legislation will tell us about similar subventions which are granted by Great Britain in connection with its shipping; but, Mr. President, the total of these do not exceed $4,000,000 a year, as I understand. It is urged that we shall get this money back in the form of additional business for the post office, but, in my opinion, this suggestion is but cheerful optimism.

What we will also be doing, Mr. President, is to create another great interest to influence Congress that will be here on the ground constantly. We shall be taking a backward step. Under no circumstances, in my opinion, ought this conference report be adopted in its present form. The Senate should insist upon the safeguards it threw around the measure when it went to the House, and accept nothing less.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ODDIE in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, it seems to me that the time has come when the Government should cease contributing out of the public funds to the transportation companies engaged in the shipping business. I have taken the trouble and the time to ascertain how much money Congress has appropriated for shipping projects. As I understand, the maximum shipping program, as of October, 1918, provided for 3,148 ships, of 17,493,286 tons. In 1918, after the armistice was signed, orders for the building of 963 ships, of 4,808,365 tons, were canceled. That left 2,185 ships, of 12,684,921 tons.

I understand that the active fleet under the control of the Shipping Board as of 1924 was made up of vessels aggregating 2,712,877 tons, and that there was under the control of the Shipping Board at the same time an inactive fleet of over 6,000,000 tons.

Under the jurisdiction of the Emergency Fleet Corporation, whose functions were later taken over by the Shipping Board, 2,185 ships, of 12,684,921 tons, were actually constructed, while to-day the Shipping Board has an active fleet of only 2,712,877 tons. The ships represented by the difference between the two figures have gone somewhere. The tonnage has been lost to ocean transportation. Herein lies another subvention, another subsidy that has been granted to private shipping interests.

Professor Van Dorn, of Columbia University, in discussing the Emergency Fleet Corporation, states that on July 1, 1924, the total fleet still under the control of the corporation consisted of 1,294 vessels, aggregating 8,907,326 deadweight tons. That information is taken from the Eighth Annual Report of the United States Shipping Board of June 20, 1924, and the quotation will be found on page 94.

He further says:

> Deducting from this the active fleet of 2,712,877 tons, we have left a total inactive fleet of approximately 6,000,000 tons. In other words, seven years after the war two-thirds of our Government fleet is still inactive.

Then, sir, why should the American people be called upon to pay a subvention or a subsidy of over $15,000,000 a year, when there are 6,000,000 tons in capacity of an inactive fleet, ships owned by the Government of the United States, not in operation—ships many of which, no doubt, could be reconditioned and placed in foreign service? Why, then, call upon the American people to extend this gratuity of $15,000,000 a year to private shipping interests when the Government of the United States has the equipment or may obtain the equipment to carry every ton of freight, inbound or outbound, to and from every American port, and over which ships would fly the American flag?

There need then be no subvention, no subsidy. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. BROOKHART] has discussed this problem of "getting the Government out of business," the slogan of the past. Well, it depends upon what kind of business the Government gets into whether or not it should get out. When the Government got into the business of almost giving away to the R. Stanley Dollar shipping interests five of the finest ships that ever sailed to the Orient, that is the kind of business the Government should get out of.

Five of these splendid American ships, built by the American Government out of funds taken from the pockets of the taxpayers of America, were purchased by R. Stanley Dollar at a price of only $1,125,000 apiece. The Dollar Line paid but one-third in cash, and the balance of the purchase price is owing by the Dollar Line at a rate of interest of only 4½ per cent, and the Dollar Line agrees to operate those ships for a period of only five years. Members of the Shipping Board have testified that those five splendid ships sold to the Dollar Line would cost about $25,000,000 if they were reproduced new. In other words, these five ships were sold at $1,125,000 apiece when their original construction cost would be over $25,000,000.

Professor Van Dorn, of Columbia University, quoting a part of the testimony given by Commissioner Thompson, said:

> The price paid was only one-fourth of, or $15,000,000 less than, the amount it would cost to build the vessels at this time—

Referring to the time when he was making his statement—> and one-sixth of, or $25,000,000 less than, the original cost of the vessels.

He further stated:

> The San Francisco-Orient Line is showing no money loss in operation, therefore not necessitating any sale at this time at sacrifice value to stop any losses requiring moneys from the Treasury of the United States.

Professor Van Dorn, in analyzing the sale of these ships and the consequences that arose because of that sale, says:

> A further argument made against the sale of these ships to the Dollar interests was that it created a monopoly of American passenger lines in the Pacific. The Dollar Steamship Co. is already the owner of seven of the President type of vessel, purchased from the Shipping Board in 1923. With these it operates a round-the-world service from San Francisco, part of the route parelleling the Pacific Mail Line. In addition, the Dollar Steamship Co. is the managing operator of the Admiral Oriental Line, whose ships ply from Seattle to the Far East. The acquisition of the Pacific Mail ships thus gives it complete control of all American passenger lines to the Orient.

Those are statements of facts; and the American people have been called upon to pay and have paid by way of a gratuity, a gift, a subsidy in favor of the Dollar Line, at least $15,000,000.

Professor Van Dorn, in discussing the policy involved and the price America paid, says:

> The factors which have produced this situation are twofold: First of all, the enormous building program undertaken during the war created a world surplus of shipping, even after deducting the huge war losses. World commerce was unable to absorb the excess tonnage.

There is no doubt but there were quantities of ships sufficient to take care of the foreign commerce of America; and in discussing the sale of the American ships to the Dollar Corporation Mr. Van Dorn makes these conclusions:

> Whatever advantages and economies may be achieved by giving to one company a monopoly of the Pacific passenger trade, this much seems clear, that for these benefits the Shipping Board paid an extremely high price.

The result was not only that the American taxpayer gave to the Stanley-Dollar Line $15,000,000 in value but as well that transaction resulted in the creation of a monopoly—a monopoly controlled by one single organization of the shipping interests in the ocean transportation of the Pacific. This conference report, if adopted, is going to result in additional payments to the Dollar Line, which has already profited to the extent of $15,000,000 at the expense of the American people.

I do not believe that this conference report is defensible, and I am not surprised that scarcely a voice is raised in defense of it. I am not surprised that Members of this body who will support the report remain silent. The apology for it is that shipping in American bottoms has been driven from the seas. I can not agree with that statement, and if it were true, I could not bring myself to the conclusion that the American people are to be taxed for the benefit of private industry or private transportation in order to induce them to engage in foreign commerce. If that is the theory of government, if the policy indicated by this bill is to prevail, why not buy farms for the million or two million farmers who were driven from the farms because of the depression in 1920? Why not loan them money at 3 per cent interest for the purchase of farms and equipment of the farms, and then offer them a gratuity, a subvention, a subsidy, that would absorb the other 25 per cent, assuming that the loan is made on the basis of three-fourths of the value of the property purchased? That is what this bill does for the private shipping interests.

If it is right, if it is the function of government, to make these contributions to private transportation agencies, then it is the duty of government to make a similar contribution to everyone who may be driven from his business because of trade depression or an economic necessity. The same reason prevails for the giving of gratuities to the smaller manufacturers, a large percentage of whom have failed in the last few years; for giving gratuities to the grocers, who are constantly being driven out of business by the chain store; for giving a gratuity to the 4,000,000 unemployed in this country—unemployed because the machines and the improvements of the machines have displaced them in industry.

If this policy is to be pursued, then, Mr. President, we owe to everyone, when he is driven from his occupation, a gratuity which will mean a sufficient income for his prosperity, whether he is engaged in farming, in merchandising, manufacturing, in labor, or in professional services. That is the policy proposed by this conference report.

I do not understand that American shipping in American bottoms, in vessels of American registry, has been driven from the seas. An examination of the facts does not justify such a statement. These transportation agencies have been more successful, on the whole, than have been the agricultural workers of America—the farmers of America. Shipping companies have been as successful, on the whole, as has been industry.

There is no demand from the country for a subsidy and a subvention for the shipping interests. I find that in the years 1921 to 1926 there has been a considerable amount of inbound and outbound foreign cargo tonnage. I have here the report of the American merchant marine, volume 2, an independent report made by Mr. Lawrie, economist of the Bureau of Operations, United States Shipping Board. I find from an analysis of that report—and I shall quote from the report—that American bottoms are carrying a considerable portion of American commerce. Of course, there is no one who will contend that all the commerce from all the foreign countries, the inbound commerce, must be carried in American vessels flying the American flag. If that is the contention, then the British Government can make the same contention, that all inbound foreign tonnage destined for Great Britain should be carried in British ships, and the Italian Government, with as good reason, would contend that all inbound foreign commerce to all the Italian ports should be carried in Italian bottoms, vessels flying the Italian flag. What Great Britain and Italy, therefore, would demand if that were to determine the natural flow of commerce or rather the arbitrary flow of commerce—every other nation would demand—France, Germany, Holland, the Scandinavian countries, Spain, Portugal, all of the maritime countries, European, Asiatic and South American.

That is not the basis upon which to calculate the amount of tonnage that rightfully belongs to the vessels of the respective nations. America can not expect to monopolize the commerce of the seas, and for one I hope she does not monopolize the commerce of the seas, for the very moment that time would come then, sir, the nations of the world would join together against America in a defensive, commercial compact and that would mean war. I believe that American vessels are entitled to their reasonable share of the commerce upon the seas.

The very suggestion that there should be a subsidy, the very suggestion that there should be a subvention or gratuity to American ships, is an acknowledgment of their incompetency to meet the commerce competition of the world.

Here in America ships can be built more rapidly than in any other nation. American ingenuity, American invention, American skilled labor in the building of modern ships capable of carrying the maximum tonnage to-day can produce finished vessels with a rapidity undreamed of by any foreign nation.

I do not believe that American industry and American transportation interests are incompetent, but when they ask for this subsidy, this subvention, this gratuity, they are demanding that to which they have no right.

This development in America of the shipyards industry is of only recent origin. Professor Van Dorn briefly discusses the problem. The Federal department having in charge investigations with respect to safety in occupations and safety in engineering has gone into the question and gives some of the factors that make American industry efficient. The question of industrial accidents is one of the factors that enters into the problem. The mere matter of enhanced wages to American mechanics is not a factor, because the machine has made it possible to displace human labor, and therefore the labor element instead of increasing in the aggregate cost decreases in the aggregate cost—true, increasing as to the individual employee but decreasing in the aggregate cost of industry on account of labor. In other words, the labor factor in industry is becoming less and less as human labor is being displaced by the machine.

The senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] a few days ago gave an illustration along that very line. Let me recite some of the factors, as given by Professor Van Dorn, which enter into the efficiency of American industry that make it possible to build ships that compete with foreign industry.

The Federal department found certain defects. They were known, it is true, but they were catalogued by the department. They found that certain injuries were most frequent, such as eye injuries caused by flying particles of steel, and that placed a tremendous burden upon industry. A constant danger arising from riveting, reaming, clipping, caulking, and drilling was a factor. I give these two only for illustration. Industry has found a way by which substantially all of these casualties may be avoided—simple ways, inexpensive ways—such as the protection of the eye by the wearing of goggles, the protection of flywheels and emery wheels, by simple and inexpensive devices tremendously reducing cost. They also found that the physical welfare of the worker affects his productivity. Not only the physical welfare, but as well the mental attitude of the worker affects his productivity. Means were sought to avoid these accidents. In investigating the question of workmen's compensation in order to draft a bill suitable for the employees of the District of Columbia, I found that industry, due to the installation of safety and protective devices, had to a large extent reduced the cost of their operations by the prevention of accidents.

We have in the past few years developed a tremendous efficiency. It is this efficiency of American workers and American industries that enables it to meet foreign competition. In this spirit of rivalry that was developed, the mechanic and the machinist became interested in their own development; and there at once entered into their work the very human element of competition, human contest, just as there enters into a game of football or baseball the desire to win, to excel, to be swifter than some one else. This is what happened. Professor Van Dorn uses this as an illustration:

Word was sent out—

This was in the shipping yards, it was not in industry generally, but the illustration is taken from the shipping yards—

Word was sent out that a man in Baltimore had driven 685 rivets in a day.

An unknown and almost unbelievable number.

A few days later a man in the same yard drove 1,414 rivets in eight hours. The first man then came back with a record of 2,720 rivets in nine hours. This was soon surpassed by a New Jersey worker who drove 2,919 rivets in eight hours.

The Englishmen heard about this and they entered the contest—

And word was sent back that an Englishman in a London shipyard had hammered 4,267 rivets in nine hours.

Then prizes were offered.

The prize was won by a negro in a Baltimore yard, but his record was broken the following day by a worker in Oakland, Calif., who drove 5,620 rivets in nine hours.

That merely illustrates how America excels.

Before the war—

Doctor Van Dorn says—

it required from nine months to a year and a half to build a modern steel vessel of from 3,500 to 9,000 tons. During the war the same vessels were built in from one to four months. In one yard the average time from keel laying to delivery was less than 70 days. One steel ship, the Crawl Keys, a vessel of 3,350 tons, was constructed at Ecorse, Mich.—

In the State of the distinguished Presiding Officer at this time [Mr. COUZENS in the chair]— in 29 days. The record among wooden ships is held by the Aberdeen, a 4,000-ton vessel, built at Grays Harbor, Wash., in 27 days.

* * * * * * *

The record month was September, 1919, during which 145 ships, of 788,053 tons, were delivered. Thus in one month we completed more than twice the tonnage produced in this country during the whole of 1916.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me in order that I may make a request for unanimous consent?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. BLAINE. I yield.

ORDER FOR CONSIDERATION OF CONFERENCE REPORTS

Mr. CURTIS. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed immediately to the consideration of the conference report on the so-called McNary-Haugen bill and vote on it without further debate, and that, at the conclusion of the vote on that measure, the Senate vote, without further debate, on the conference report upon the shipping bill that is now pending.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the agreement is entered into.

FARM RELIEF—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President——

Mr. McNARY. I understood the Senator had yielded the floor.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I do not know the parliamentary status. I presume that I yielded for the Senator from Kansas to make a request for unanimous consent. I understand that the agreement proposed by the Senator from Kansas has been entered into.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The agreement has been entered into.

Mr. BLAINE. Then, I yield the floor.

Mr. McNARY. I submit the conference report on the so-called McNary-Haugen bill, being Senate bill 3555, and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under the unanimous-consent agreement, the consideration of the conference report is in order. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 3555) to establish a Federal farm board to aid in the orderly marketing and in the control and disposition of the surplus of agricultural commodities in interstate and foreign commerce, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the House amendment insert the following:

"DECLARATION OF POLICY

"SECTION 1. In order to stabilize the current of interstate and foreign commerce in the marketing of agricultural commodities and prevent suppression of commerce with foreign nations in such commodities and unjust discrimination against such foreign commerce, it is hereby declared to be the policy of the Congress to promote the orderly marketing of agricultural commodities in interstate and foreign commerce, and to that end, through the execution of the provisions of this act, to provide for the control and disposition of surpluses of such commodities, to preserve advantageous domestic markets for such commodities, to prevent such surpluses from unduly depressing the prices obtained for such commodities and from causing undue and excessive fluctuations in the markets for such commodities, to minimize speculation and waste in marketing such commodities, and to further the organization of producers of such commodities into cooperative associations.

"FEDERAL FARM BOARD

"SEC. 2. (a) A Federal Farm Board is hereby created which shall consist of the Secretary of Agriculture, who shall be a member ex officio, and twelve members, one from each of the twelve Federal land-bank districts, who shall be appointed by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

"(b) The terms of office of the appointed members of the board first taking office after the approval of this Act, shall expire, as designated by the President at the time of nomination, four at the end of the second year, four at the end of the fourth year, and four at the end of the sixth year, after the date of the approval of this act. A successor to an appointed member of the board shall be appointed in the same manner as the original appointed members, and shall have a term of office expiring six years from the date of the expiration of the term for which his predecessor was appointed.

"(c) Any person appointed to fill a vacancy in the board occurring prior to the expiration of the term for which his predecessor was appointed shall be appointed for the remainder of such term.

"(d) Any member of the board in office at the expiration of the term for which he was appointed, may continue in office until his successor takes office.

"(e) Vacancies in the board shall not impair the powers of the remaining members to execute the functions of the board, and a majority of the appointed members in office shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of the business of the board.

"(f) Each of the appointed members of the board shall be a citizen of the United States, shall be the producer of some one or more agricultural products or shall be interested in and truly representative of agriculture, shall not actively engage in any other business, vocation, or employment than that of serving as a member of the board, and shall receive a salary of $10,000 a year, together with necessary traveling expenses and expenses incurred for subsistence or per diem allowance in lieu thereof, within the limitations prescribed by law, while away from the principal office of the board on business required by this act, or if assigned to any other office established by the board, then while away from such office on business required by this act.

"GENERAL POWERS

"SEC. 3. The board—

"(a) Shall annually designate an appointed member to act as chairman of the board.

"(b) Shall maintain its principal office in the District of Columbia, and such other offices in the United States as it deems necessary.

"(c) Shall have an official seal which shall be judicially noticed.

"(d) Shall make an annual report to Congress.

"(e) May make such regulations as are necessary to execute the functions vested in it by this Act.

"(f) May (1) appoint and fix the salaries of a secretary and such experts, and, in accordance with the classification act of 1923 and subject to the provisions of the civil service laws, such other officers and employees, and (2) make such expenditures (including expenditures for rent and personal services at the seat of government and elsewhere, for law books, periodicals, and books of reference, and for printing and binding) as may be necessary for the execution of the functions vested in the board.

"(g) Shall meet at the call of the chairman, or of the Secretary of Agriculture, or of a majority of its members.

"(h) Shall keep advised, from any available sources, of crop prices, prospects, supply, and demand, at home and abroad, with especial attention to the existence or the probability of the existence of a surplus of any agricultural commodity or any of its food products, and it may advise producers through their organizations or otherwise in matters connected with the adjustment of production, distribution, and marketing of any such commodity, in order that they may secure the maximum benefits under this act.

"(i) Shall advise producers through their organizations or otherwise in the development of suitable programs of planting or breeding, so that burdensome crop surpluses may be avoided or minimized, in order that they may secure such benefits.

"COMMODITY ADVISORY COUNCILS

"SEC. 4. (a) Prior to the commencement of a marketing period in respect of any agricultural commodity the board is directed to create for such commodity an advisory council, which shall be a governmental agency composed of seven members fairly representative of the producers of such commodity. Members of each commodity advisory council shall be selected annually by the board only from lists submitted by the cooperative associations and by other organizations representative of the producers of the commodity in each State that produced in the preceding five crop years, according to the estimates of the United States Department of Agriculture, an average of three per cent or more of the average anuual total domestic production of the commodity, and from lists submitted by the governors and by the heads of the agricultural departments of such States. Members of each commodity advisory council shall serve without salary but may be paid by the board a per diem compensation not exceeding $20 for attending meetings of the council and for time devoted to other business of the council and authorized by the board. Each council member shall be paid by the board his necessary traveling expenses to and from meetings of the council and his expenses incurred for subsistence, or per diem allowance in lieu thereof, within the limitations prescribed by law, while engaged upon the business of the council. Each commodity advisory council shall be designated by the name of the commodity it represents, as, for example, 'The Cotton Advisory Council.'

"(b) Each commodity advisory council shall meet as soon as practicable after its selection at a time and place designated by the board and select a chairman. The board may designate a secretary of the council, subject to the approval of the council.

"(c) Each commodity advisory council shall meet thereafter at least twice in each year at a time and place designated by the board, or upon call of a majority of its members at a time and place designated in the call, notice of such call being sent by registered mail at least 10 days before the date of the meeting.

"(d) Each commodity advisory council shall have power, by itself or through its officers, (1) to confer directly with the board, to call for information from it, or to make oral or written representations to it, concerning matters within the jurisdiction of the board and relating to the agricultural commodity, including the amount and method of collection of the equalization fee, and (2) to cooperate with the board in advising the producers through their organizations or otherwise in the development of suitable programs of planting or breeding so that burdensome crop surpluses may be avoided or minimized, in order to secure the maximum benefits under this act.

"(e) Prior to the commencement or termination of a marketing period with respect to any agricultural commodity and prior to the publication of the amount of any equalization fee with respect to any agricultural commodity, the board shall submit to the advisory council for the commodity a statement of the respective findings or estimate which the board is required to make and of the evidence and facts considered by the board in making such findings or estimate. Within 15 days after receiving such statement, the advisory council shall consider such findings or estimate and shall notify the board of its determination made with respect thereto. No marketing period with respect to any agricultural commodity shall be commenced or terminated and no equalization fee with respect to the commodity shall be collected, unless the advisory council for such commodity has determined (1) that the findings or estimate which the board is required to make are supported by the evidence and facts considered by the board, and (2) that the board has considered substantially all the material facts and evidence available for making the findings or estimate.

"LOANS

"SEC. 5. (a) The board is authorized to make loans, out of the revolving fund hereinafter created, to any cooperative association or corporation created and controlled by one or more cooperative associations, upon such terms and conditions as, in the judgment of the board, will afford adequate assurance of repayment and carry out the policy declared in section 1, and upon such other terms and conditions as the board deems necessary. Such loans shall be for one of the following purposes:

"(1) For the purpose of assisting the cooperative association or corporation created and controlled by one or more cooperative associations, in controlling a seasonal or year's total surplus, produced in the United States and either local or national in extent, that is in excess of the requirements for the orderly marketing of any agricultural commodity or in excess of the domestic requirements for such commodity.

"(2) For the purpose of developing continuity of cooperative services from the point of production to and including the point of terminal marketing services, if the proceeds of the loan are to be used either (A) for working capital for the cooperative association or corporation created and controlled by one or more cooperative associations, or (B) for assisting the cooperative association or corporation created and controlled by one or more cooperative associations, in the acquisition, by purchase, construction, or otherwise, of facilities and equipment, including terminal marketing facilities and equipment, for the preparing, handling, storing, processing, or sale or other disposition of agricultural commodities, or (C) for furnishing funds to the cooperative association or corporation created and controlled by one or more cooperative associations for use as capital for any agricultural credit corporation eligible to receive discounts under section 202 of the Federal farm loan act, as amended, or (D) for furnishing funds to the cooperative association or corporation created and controlled by one or more cooperative associations for necessary expenditures in federating, consolidating, merging, or extending the membership of cooperative associations or corporations created and controlled by one or more cooperative associations. The cooperative association, or corporation created and controlled by one or more cooperative associations, shall repay the loan, together with the interest thereon, within a period of not more than 20 years, by means of a charge to be deducted from the proceeds of the sale or other disposition of each unit of the agricultural commodity handled by the association or corporation, unless some other method of repayment is agreed upon by the board and the association or corporation.

"(b) Any loan under this section shall bear interest at the rate of 4 per cent per annum. The aggregate amount of loans under this section, outstanding and unpaid at any one time, shall not exceed $200,000,000, but—

"(1) The aggregate amount of loans for all purposes under paragraph (2) of subdivision (a), outstanding and unpaid at any one time, shall not exceed $25,000,000; and

"(2) The aggregate amount of loans for the purpose of expenditures in federating, consolidating, merging, or extending the membership of cooperative associations or corporations created and controlled by one or more cooperative associations, outstanding and unpaid at any one time, shall not exceed $1,000,000.

"INCREASED PRODUCTION

"SEC. 6. If the board finds that its advice as to a program of planting or breeding of any agricultural commodity as hereinbefore provided has been substantially disregarded by the producers of the commodity, or that the planting or breeding of any agricultural commodity for any year is substantially greater than a normal increase, as determined by the board, over the average planting or breeding of such commodity or the preceding 5 years, the board may refuse to make loans for the purchase of such commodity.

"CLEARING HOUSE AND TERMINAL MARKET ASSOCIATIONS

"SEC. 7. The board may assist in the establishment of and provide for the registration of, in accordance with such regulations as it may prescribe, (1) clearing-house associations adapted, in the opinion of the board, to effect the more orderly production, distribution, and marketing of any agricultural commodity, to prevent gluts or famines in any market for such commodity, and to reduce waste incident to the marketing of such commodity, and (2) terminal market associations adapted, in the opinion of the board, to maintain public markets in distribution centers for the more orderly distribution and marketing of any agricultural commodity. Only cooperative associations or corporations created or controlled by one or more cooperative associations shall be eligible for membership in any clearing-house association or terminal market association registered under this section. Rules for the governance of any such association shall be adopted by the members thereof with the approval of the board.

"MARKETING AGREEMENTS

"SEC. 8. (a) From time to time upon request of the advisory council for any agricultural commodity, or upon request of leading cooperative associations or other organizations of producers of any agricultural commodity, or upon its own motion, the board shall investigate the supply and marketing situation in respect of such agricultural commodity.

"(b) Whenever upon such investigation the board finds—

"First. That there is or may be during the ensuing year a seasonal or year's total surplus, produced in the United States and national in extent, that is in excess of the requirements for the orderly marketing of any agricultural commodity or in excess of the domestic requirements for the commodity;

"Second. That the operation of the provisions of section 5 (relating to loans to cooperative associations or corporations created and controlled by one or more cooperative associations) will not be effective to control such surplus because of the inability or unwillingness of the cooperative associations engaged in handling the commodity, or corporations created and controlled by one or more such cooperative associations, to control such surplus with the assistance of such loans; and

"Third. That the durability, the conditions of preparation, processing, and preserving, and the methods of marketing of the commodity are such that the commodity is adapted to marketing as authorized by this section;—

then the board, after publicly declaring its findings, shall arrange for marketing any part of the commodity by means of marketing agreements with cooperative associations engaged in handling the commodity or corporations created and controlled by one or more cooperative associations. Such marketing shall continue during a marketing period which shall terminate at such time as the board finds that such arrangements are no longer necessary or advisable for carrying out the policy declared by section 1.

"(c) A marketing agreement shall provide either—

"(1) For the withholding by a cooperative association, or corporation created and controlled by one or more cooperative associations, during such period as shall be provided in the agreement, of any part of the commodity delivered to such cooperative association or associations by its members. Any such agreement shall provide for the payment from the stabilization fund for the commodity of the costs arising out of such withholding; or

"(2) For the purchase by a cooperative association, or corporation created and controlled by one or more cooperative associations, of any part of the commodity not delivered to such cooperative association or associations by its members, and for the withholding and disposal of the commodity so purchased. Any such marketing agreement shall provide for the payment from the stabilization fund for the commodity of the amount of the losses, costs, and charges arising out of the purchase, withholding, and disposal, or out of contracts therefor, and for the payment into the stabilization fund for the commodity of profits (after repaying all advances from the stabilization fund and deducting all costs and charges, provided for in the agreement) arising out of the purchase, withholding, and disposal, or out of contracts therefor.

"(d) The board may, in its discretion, provide in any such marketing agreement for financing any withholding, purchase, or disposal under such agreement, through advances from the stabilization found for the commodity. Such financing shall be upon such terms as the board may prescribe, but no such advance shall bear interest.

"(e) If the board is of the opinion that there are two or more cooperative associations or corporations created and controlled by one or more cooperative associations capable of carrying out any marketing agreement, the board in entering into the agreement shall not unreasonably discriminate against any such association or corporation in favor of any other such association or corporation. If the board is of the opinion that there is no such cooperative association or corporation created and controlled by one or more cooperative associations capable of carrying out any marketing agreement for purchase, withholding, and disposal, then the board may enter into the agreement with other agencies but shall not unreasonably discriminate between such other agencies.

"(f) During a marketing period fixed by the board for any commodity, the board may enter into marketing agreements for the purchase, withholding, and disposal of the food products of such commodity, and all provisions of this section applicable to marketing agreements for the purchase, withholding, and disposal of the commodity, shall apply to the agreements in respect of its food products.

"(g) Any decision of the board relating to the commencement, extension, or termination of a marketing period shall require the affirmative vote of a majority of the appointed members in office.

"(h) The powers of the board under this section in respect of any agricultural commodity shall be exercised in such manner, and the marketing agreements entered into by the board during any marketing period shall be upon such terms, as will, in the judgment of the board, carry out the policy declared by section 1.

"(i) The United States shall not be liable, directly or indirectly, upon agreements under this act in respect of agricultural commodities, in excess of the amounts available in the stabilization, premium insurance, and revolving funds.

"EQUALIZATION FEE

"SEC. 9. (a) In order to carry out marketing and nonpremium insurance agreements in respect of any agricultural commodity without loss to the revolving fund, each marketed unit of such agricultural commodity produced in the United States shall, throughout any marketing period in respect of such commodity, contribute ratably its equitable share of the losses, costs, and charges arising out of such agreements. Such contributions shall be made by means of an equalization fee apportioned and paid as a regulation of interstate and foreign commerce in the commodity. It shall be the duty of the board to apportion and collect such fee in respect of such commodity as hereinafter provided.

"(b) Prior to the commencement of any marketing period in respect of any agricultural commodity, and thereafter from time to time during such marketing period, the board shall estimate the probable losses, costs, and charges to be paid under marketing agreements in respect of such commodity and under nonpremium insurance agreements in respect of such commodity as hereinafter provided. Upon the basis of such estimates, the board shall from time to time determine and publish the amount of the equalization fee (if any is required under such estimates) for each unit of weight, measure, or value designated by the board, to be collected upon such unit of such agricultural commodity during any part of the marketing period for the commodity. Such amount is referred to in this Act as the 'equalization fee.' At the time of determining and publishing any equalization fee the board shall specify the time during which the particular fee shall remain in effect and the place and manner of its payment and collection.

"(c) Under such regulations as the board may prescribe, any equalization fee determined upon by the board shall be paid, in respect of each marketed unit of such commodity, upon one of the following: The transportation, processing, or sale of such unit. The equalization fee shall not be collected more than once in respect of any unit. The board shall determine, in the case of each class of transactions in the commodity, whether the equalization fee shall be paid upon transportation, processing, or sale. The board shall make such determination upon the basis of the most effective and economical means of collecting the fee with respect to each unit of the commodity marketed during the marketing period.

"(d) When any equalization fee is collected with respect to cattle or swine, an equalization fee equivalent in amount, as nearly as may be, shall be collected, under such regulations as the board may prescribe, upon the first sale or other disposition of any food product derived in whole or in part from cattle or swine, respectively, if the food product was on hand and owned at the time of the commencement of the marketing period: Provided, That any food product owned in good faith by retail dealers at the time of the commencement of the marketing period shall be exempt from the operation of this subdivision.

"(e) Under such regulations as the board may prescribe, the equalization fee determined under this section for any agricultural commodity produced in the United States shall in addition be collected upon the importation of each designated unit of the agricultural commodity imported into the United States for consumption therein, and an equalization fee, in an amount equivalent as nearly as may be, shall be collected upon the importation of any food product derived in whole or in part from the agricultural commodity and imported into the United States for consumption therein.

"(f) The board may by regulation require any person engaged in the transportation, processing, or acquisition by purchase of any agricultural commodity produced in the United States, or in the importation of any agricultural commodity or food product thereof—

"(1) To file returns under oath and to report, in respect of his transportation, processing, or acquisition of such commodity produced in the United States or in respect of his importation of the commodity or food product thereof, the amount of equalization fees payable thereon and such other facts as may be necessary for their payment or collection.

"(2) To collect the equalization fee as directed by the board and to account therefor.

"(g) The board, under regulations prescribed by it, is authorized to pay to any such person required to collect such fees a reasonable charge for his services.

"(h) Every person who, in violation of the regulations prescribed by the board, fails to collect or account for any equalization fee shall be liable for its amount and to a penalty equal to one-half its amount. Such amount and penalty may be recovered together in a civil suit brought by the board in the name of the United States.

"(i) As used in this section—

"(1) In the case of grain the term 'processing' means milling of grain for market or the first processing in any manner for market (other than cleaning or drying) of grain not so milled, and the term 'sale' means a sale or other disposition in the United States of grain for milling or other processing for market, for resale, or for delivery by a common carrier—occurring during a marketing period in respect of grain.

"(2) In the case of cotton the term 'processing' means spinning, milling, or any manufacturing of cotton other than ginning; the term 'sale' means a sale or other disposition in the United States of cotton for spinning, milling, or any manufacturing other than ginning, or for delivery outside the United States; and the term 'transportation' means the acceptance of cotton by a common carrier for delivery to any person for spinning, milling, or any manufacturing of cotton other than ginning, or for delivery outside the United States—occurring during a marketing period in respect of cotton.

"(3) In the case of livestock, the term 'processing' means slaughter for market by a purchaser of livestock, and the term 'sale' means a sale or other disposition in the United States of livestock destined for slaughter for market without intervening holding for feeding (other than feeding in transit) or fattening—occurring during a marketing period in respect of livestock.

"(4) In the case of tobacco, the term 'sale' means a sale or other disposition to any dealer in leaf tobacco or to any registered manufacturer of the products of tobacco. The term 'tobacco' means leaf tobacco, stemmed or unstemmed.

"(5) In the case of grain, livestock, and tobacco, the term 'transportation' means the acceptance of the commodity by a common carrier for delivery.

"(6) In the case of any agricultural commodity other than grain, cotton, livestock, or tobacco, the board shall, in connection with its specification of the place and manner of payment and collection of the equalization fee, further specify the particular type of processing, sale, or transportation in respect of which the equalization fee is to be paid and collected.

"(7) The term 'sale' does not include a transfer to a cooperative association for the purpose of sale or other disposition by such association on account of the transferor; nor a transfer of title in pursuance of a contract entered into before, and at a specified price determined before, the commencement of a marketing period in respect of the agricultural commodity. In case of the transfer of title in pursuance of a contract entered into after the commencement of a marketing period in respect of the agricultural commodity, but entered into at a time when, and at a specified price determined at a time during which a particular equalization fee is in effect, then the equalization fee applicable in respect of such transfer of title shall be the equalization fee in effect at the time when such specified price was determined.

"STABILIZATION FUNDS

"SEC. 10. (a) For each agricultural commodity as to which marketing agreements are made by the board there shall be established, in accordance with regulations prescribed by the board, a stabilization fund. Such fund shall be administered by and exclusively under the control of the board, and the board shall have the exclusive power of expending the moneys in such fund.

"(b) There shall be deposited to the credit of the stabilization fund for any agricultural commodity (1) advances from the revolving fund as hereinafter authorized, (2) profits arising out of marketing agreements in respect of the commodity, (3) repayments of advances for financing the purchase, withholding, or disposal of the commodity, and (4) equalization fees collected in respect of the commodity and its imported food products.

"(c) In order to make the payments required by a marketing or nonpremium insurance agreement in respect of any agricultural commodity, and in order to pay the salaries and expenses of experts, the board may, in its discretion, advance to the stabilization fund for such commodity out of the revolving fund such amounts as may be necessary.

"(d) The deposits to the credit of a stabilization fund shall be made in a public depositary of the United States. All general laws relating to the embezzlement, conversion, or to the improper handling, retention, use, or disposal of public moneys of the United States shall apply to the profits and equalization fees payable to the credit of the stabilization fund and to moneys deposited to the credit of the fund or withdrawn therefrom but in the custody of any officer or employee of the United States.

"(e) There shall be withdrawn from the stabilization fund for any agricultural commodity (1) the payments required by marketing or nonpremium insurance agreements in respect of the commodity, (2) the salaries and expenses of such experts as the board determines shall be payable from such fund, (3) repayments into the revolving fund of advances made from the revolving fund to the stabilization fund, together with interest on such amounts at the rate of 4 per cent per annum, and (4) service charges payable for the collection of equalization fees.

"INSURANCE

"SEC. 11. (a) In order that a cooperative association handling any staple agricultural commodity may with reasonable security make payments to its members at the time of delivery of such commodity by the members, fairly reflecting the current market value of such agricultural commodity, the board is authorized to enter into an agreement, upon such terms and conditions as it may prescribe, for the insurance of such cooperative association against price decline as hereinafter provided. Such insurance agreement may be entered into by the board only with respect to any such agricultural commodity which, in the judgment of the board, is regularly traded in upon an exchange in sufficient volume to establish a recognized basic price for the market grades of such commodity, and then only when such exchange has accurate price records for the commodity covering a period of years of sufficient length, in the judgment of the board, to serve as a basis upon which to calculate the risks of the insurance.

"(b) Any such agreement for insurance against price decline shall provide for the insurance of the cooperative association for any twelve months' period commencing with the delivery season for the commodity against loss to such association or its members due to decline in the average market price for the commodity during the time of sale by the association from the average market price for the commodity during the time of delivery to the association. The measure of such decline, where a decline occurs, shall be the difference between the average market price weighted for the days and volume of delivery to the association by its members, and the average market price weighted for the days and volume of sales by the association. In computing such average market prices the board shall use the daily average cash prices paid for the basic grade of such commodity in the exchange designated in the agreement. Any such agreement shall cover only so much of the commodity delivered to the association as is produced by the members of the association and as is reported by the association for coverage under the agreement.

"(c) Whenever in the judgment of the board the use of such insurance agreements in respect of any commodity will stabilize the market substantially in the interest of the producers of the commodity whether or not members of a cooperative association dealing in the commodity, then the board, during the continuance of any marketing period for the commodity as provided in section 8, may enter into nonpremium, or if the board deems it advisable, premium insurance agreements with cooperative associations dealing in the commodity. Whenever in the judgment of the board the use of such insurance agreements will not so stabilize the market, then the board may enter into premium insurance agreements only with the cooperative associations.

"(d) Payments required under nonpremium insurance agreements in respect of any commodity shall be made out of the stabilization fund for the commodity. Payments under premium insurance agreements in respect of any commodity shall be made out of the premium insurance fund for the commodity to be established by the board under such regulations as it may prescribe.

"(e) For insurance under a premium insurance agreement the cooperative association shall pay a premium, to be determined by the board prior to the making of the insurance agreement, upon each unit of the commodity reported by the association for coverage under the insurance agreement. Such premium shall be calculated with due regard to the past price records in established markets for the commodity. The premiums applicable to the commodity in the successive twelve months' periods shall be adjusted with due regard to the experience of the board under preceding insurance agreements. There shall be deposited in the premium insurance fund for any commodity the premiums paid by cooperative associations under premium insurance agreements in respect of the commodity, and advances from the revolving fund in such amounts as the board deems necessary for the operation of the fund. There shall be disbursed from the premium insurance fund for any commodity (1) the payments required by any premium insurance agreement in respect of the commodity, and (2) repayments into the revolving fund of advances made from the revolving fund to such premium insurance fund, together with interest on such advances at the rate of 4 per cent per annum.

"REVOLVING FUND

"SEC. 12 (a). There is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $400,000,000: Provided, That at least $200,000,000 of such sum shall be made available by the board solely for use in making advances to the stabilization funds for agricultural commodities in respect of which marketing periods are commenced; and in the allocation of such amount among the stabilization funds of the several commodities, the board shall take into consideration the values of the respective commodities.

"(b) All moneys appropriated in pursuance of the authorization made by this section shall be administered by the board and used as a revolving fund in accordance with the provisions of this Act. The Secretary of the Treasury shall deposit in the revolving fund such portions of the amounts appropriated therefor as the board from time to time deems necessary.

"EXAMINATIONS OF BOOKS AND ACCOUNTS OF BOARD

"SEC. 13. Expenditures by the board from the stabilization or premium insurance funds shall be made by the authorized officers or agents of the board upon receipt of itemized vouchers therefor, approved by such officers as the board may designate. All other expenditures by the board, including expenditures for loans and advances from the revolving fund, shall be allowed and paid upon the presentation of itemized vouchers therefor, approved by the chairman of the board. Vouchers so made for expenditures from the revolving fund or from any stabilization or premium insurance fund shall be final and conclusive upon all officers of the Government; except that all financial transactions of the board (including the payments required by any marketing or insurance agreement) shall, subject to the above limitations, be examined by the General Accounting Office, at such times and in such manner as the Comptroller General of the United States may by regulation prescribe. Such examination in respect of expenditures from the revolving fund or from any stabilization or premium insurance fund shall be for the sole purpose of making a report to the Congress and to the board of expenditures and agreements in violation of law, together with such recommendations as the Comptroller General deems advisable concerning the receipts, disbursements, and application of the funds administered by the board.

"COOPERATION WITH EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS

"SEC. 14. (a) It shall be the duty of any governmental establishment in the executive branch of the Government, upon request by the board, or upon Executive order, to cooperate with and render assistance to the board in carrying out any of the provisions of this act and the regulations of the board. The board shall, in cooperation with any such governmental establishment, avail itself of the services and facilities of such governmental establishment in order to avoid preventable expense or duplication of effort.

"(b) Upon request by the board the President, by Executive order, (1) may transfer any officer or employee from any department or independent establishment in the executive branch of the Government, irrespective of his length of service in such department or independent establishment, to the service of the board, and (2) may direct any governmental establishment to furnish the board with such information and data pertaining to the functions of the board as may be contained in the records of the governmental establishment; except that the President shall not direct that the board be furnished with any information or data supplied by any person in confidence to any governmental establishment, in pursuance of any provision of law or of any agreement with the governmental establishment.

"(c) The board may cooperate with any State or Territory, or department, agency, or political subdivision thereof, or with any person.

"GENERAL DEFINITIONS

"SEC. 15. (a) As used in this act—

"(1) The term 'person' means individual, partnership, corporation, or association.

"(2) The term 'United States,' when used in a geographical sense, means continental United States and the Territory of Hawaii.

"(3) The term 'cooperative association' means an association of persons engaged in the production of agricultural products, as farmers, planters, ranchers, dairymen, or nut or fruit growers, organized to carry out any purpose specified in section 1 of the act entitled 'An act to authorize association of producers of agricultural products,' approved February 18, 1922, if such association is qualified under such act.

"(b) The provisions of sections 8, 9, and 10 shall not apply to perishable fruits and vegetables.

"(c) Whenever any agricultural commodity has regional or market classifications or types which in the judgment of the board are so different from each other in use or marketing methods as to require their treatment as separate commodities under this act, the board may determine upon and designate one or more such classifications or types for such treatment.

"ADMINISTRATIVE APPROPRIATION

"SEC. 16. For expenses in the administration of the functions vested in the board by this act, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $500,000, to be available to the board for such expenses (including salaries and expenses of the members, officers, and employees of the board and the per diem compensation and expenses of members of the commodity advisory councils) incurred prior to July 1, 1929.

"SEPARABILITY OF PROVISIONS

"SEC. 17. If any provision of this act is declared unconstitutional or the applicability thereof to any person, circumstance, commodity, or class of transactions in respect of any commodity, is held invalid, the validity of the remainder of the act and the applicability of such provision to other persons, circumstances, commodities, and classes of transactions shall not be affected thereby.

"COOPERATIVE ASSOCIATIONS ACT

"SEC. 18. (a) Nothing in this act is intended or shall be construed to repeal or modify any provision of the act entitled 'An act to authorize association of producers of agricultural products,' approved February 18, 1922.

"PENALTIES

"SEC. 19. (a) The provisions of sections 123 and 124 of the Penal Code, approved March 4, 1909, as amended, shall apply to any member, officer, or employee of the board; and, in addition, it shall be held a violation of section 123 of such code if any member, officer, or employee of the board at any time speculates, directly or indirectly, in any agricultural commodity.

"(b) It shall be unlawful (1) for any cooperative association, or corporation created and controlled by one or more cooperative associations or other agency if such agency is acting for or on behalf of the board under any marketing agreement, or (2) for any director, officer, or employee of any such association, corporation, or agency, to which information has been imparted in confidence by the board, to disclose such information in violation of any regulation of the board. Any such association, corporation, or agency, or director, officer, or employee thereof, violating any provision of this subdivision, shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than 10 years, or both.

"SHORT TITLE

"SEC. 20. This act may be cited as the 'surplus control act.'"

And the House agree to the same.

ARTHUR CAPPER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

G. N. HAUGEN,
FRED S. PURNELL,
T. S. WILLIAMS,
D. H. KINCHELOE,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Is debate on the conference report precluded by the agreement which has been entered into?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The agreement entered into, on the request of the Senator from Kansas, provides that the conference report shall be voted on without further debate.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. That is my understanding.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I should like to ask a question. What became of the provision with respect to perishable fruits and vegetables?

Mr. MCNARY. They were removed from the operation of the equalization fee, comformable to the statement I made to the Senator some time ago.

Mr. DILL. Just what does that mean?

Mr. MCNARY. It means that the equalization fee will not apply to perishable fruits and vegetables, but the producers of such commodities may have access to the loan features of the bill, if they so desire.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

THE MERCHANT MARINE

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 744) to further develop an American merchant marine, to insure its permanency in the transportation of the foreign trade of the United States, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. BROOKHART. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BRATTON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON]. I am informed that if he were present he would vote as I intend to vote. I am therefore at liberty to vote, and vote "yea."

Mr. WHEELER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Idaho [Mr. GOODING], and therefore withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. KENDRICK. On this question I have a pair with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BINGHAM]. I am informed that if present he would vote as I am about to vote, so I will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. EDWARDS. I have a pair with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL], and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. JONES. I desire to announce that the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] is paired with the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL].

Mr. WATSON (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a pair with the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], which I transfer to the junior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BINGHAM], and will permit my vote to stand.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Maine [Mr. GOULD] and will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. MCKELLAR (after having voted in the negative). I inquire if the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. FESS] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. That Senator has not voted.

Mr. MCKELLAR. I have a pair with the senior Senator from Ohio. In his absence I withdraw my vote.

Mr. BLAINE. I was requested by the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE] to announce that his colleague the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER] has a general pair with the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BLEASE, and that if the senior Senator from North Dakota were privileged to vote he would vote "nay."

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DALE]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. BROUSSARD. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. RANSDELL] is necessarily detained in attendance upon the sessions of the subcommittee of the Committee on Agriculture. If present, he would vote "yea" on the adoption of this conference report.

The result was announced—yeas 51, nays 20, as follows:

YEAS—51

SENATORIAL NOMINATION AND ELECTION IN NEW JERSEY

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, I send to the desk and ask to have read and adopted a resolution to which I wish to call the attention of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE].

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 232), as follows:

Resolved, That the special committee of five, consisting of three Members selected from the majority political party, of whom one is a Progressive Republican, and of two Members from the minority political party appointed by the President of the Senate, and which special committee was created by the adoption of Senate Resolution 195 on May 19, 1926, and January 11, 1927, of Senate Resolution 324, by the first and second sessions of Congress (Sixty-ninth), is hereby authorized and instructed immediately to investigate what moneys, emoluments, rewards, or things of value, including agreements or understandings of support for appointment or election to office, have been promised, contributed, made, or expended, or shall hereafter be promised, contributed, expended, or made, by any person, firm, corporation, or committee, organization, or association, to influence the nomination of any person as a candidate of any political party or organization for membership in the United States Senate, or to contribute to or promote the election of any person as a Member of the United States Senate from the State of New Jersey at the general election to be held in November, 1928. Said committee shall report the names of the persons, firms, or corporations, or committees, organizations, or associations, that have made or shall hereafter make such promises, subscriptions, advancements, or payments, and the amount of them severally contributed or promised as aforesaid, including the method of expenditure of said sums or the method of performance of said agreements, together with all facts in relation thereto.

Said committee is hereby empowered to sit and act at such time or times and at such place or places as it may deem necessary; to require by subpœna or otherwise the attendance of witnesses, the production of books, papers, and documents; and to do such other acts as may be necessary in the matter of said investigation.

The chairman of the committee or any member thereof may administer oaths to witnesses. Every person who, having been summoned as a witness by authority of said committee, willfully makes default, or who, having appeared, refuses to answer any question pertinent to the investigation heretofore authorized, shall be held to the penalties provided by section 102 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

Said committee shall promptly report to the Senate the facts by it ascertained.

Mr. CARAWAY obtained the floor.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CARAWAY. I yield.

Mr. EDGE. Did I understand correctly from the reading that this resolution is confined to the one State of New Jersey, which I have the honor of representing in part?

Mr. CARAWAY. Yes, sir.

Mr. EDGE. No doubt the Senator will develop later the charges, or allegations, or whatever they may be, which in his judgment necessitate offering the resolution. As I understand, the resolution revives the so-called Reed committee, or, rather, extends their scope of activity, if I may put it that way.

Mr. CARAWAY. That is it; yes, sir.

Mr. EDGE. I am wondering why the resolution should be confined to any one State.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, the resolution under which the committee was created directed it to investigate the elections in some particular States only. Its power was extended for that purpose. It was charged at one time that the committee wanted to go on a fishing expedition. In refutation of that charge, the committee was only authorized and empowered to go into those States in which some charge was made.

I do not know how accurate this information about the State of New Jersey may be; but it is contained in news stories and editorials of leading Republican papers in the State of New Jersey, a number of which are included in the statement which I handed to the clerk. I expected to have to read some of those editorials. I will ask the clerk just to read the headlines of the editorials, unless the Senate should decide that they want the entire editorials read; and I ask that the editorials be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the clerk will read the headlines, and the articles will be printed in full in the RECORD.

The Chief Clerk read the headlines of the following articles:

ATLANTIC ASKS LOOSENING OF KEAN DOUGH BAG—SENATE ASPIRANT HASN'T COME THROUGH AND NO PROMISES ARE MADE—LARSON SUFFERS, TOO.

(This is the first of several articles dealing with preprimary activities around the State. Most of the campaigning is for the Republican nomination for United States Senate and governor. The Democrats, having no major contests, are holding back for the general-election campaign.)

(Staff correspondent)

ATLANTIC CITY, April 26.—This is the spring of Republican discontent in Atlantic County. To put it bluntly, Hamilton F. Kean, candidate for the United States senatorial nomination, counted upon to supply a plentiful war chest for the primary campaign, is not meeting expectations.

There may be injustice in the attitude developing toward Mr. Kean in Atlantic County. So far as can be learned, Mr. Kean never said publicly he would give Enoch L. Johnson or anyone else $200,000, or any other amount, to handle his interests in the county. Also, it is possible that Mr. Kean, frightened by all this talk of dough bags and glittering gold, has suddenly discovered there are strings on his purse and has tightened them.

But the Atlantic County Republicans are not interested in causes. It is the effect that is causing an anti-Kean reaction, and word has been, or will be, carried to Mr. Kean that a bogey man will get him if he don't watch out; that there is considerable sentiment for Edward C. Stokes, and that the chief drawback of the former governor is his campaign alliance with Senator EDGE, a condition that may be forgotten unless Mr. Kean sees the light. In other words, the Atlantic Republicans want some money, and they want it quick.

LARSON SUFFERS, TOO

Likewise, the situation is disappointing some of the boosters of Senator Morgan F. Larson, one of the quartet seeking the gubernatorial nomination. The Kean money was expected to finance the Larson campaign here. As a result, the Middlesex solon is getting a lot of lip service but little more, and the Kean stock is slipping.

In the meantime, Robert Carey is making inroads on the Larson strength. The former judge has the support of the Committee of One Hundred, a reform organization that believes Atlantic City can be an attractive resort without a redlight district and gambling. The churches are not actively identified with the crusaders for cleanliness, but they are not unsympathetic. Also, Mr. Carey here, as in some other parts of the State, has been given the indorsement of a considerable element of organized labor.

The Stokes movement, like that for J. Henry Harrison for governor, is suffering by lack of organization. Both Stokes and Harrison are likely to benefit by the indorsement of Clarence E. Cole, former Democratic judge, has given them, but Mr. Harrison must share this with Mr. Carey, and coming in the midst of Mr. Carey's epistolary row with Common Pleas Judge William H. Smathers, defender of the Hague Democratic organization, it probably will be most effective in the case of the Hudson man.

CITY COMMISSION FIGHT ON

The senatorial and gubernatorial situation and Enoch Johnson's part in them may be interesting to the rest of the State, but so far as the Republican organization in this city is concerned, it is doing a lot of concentrating on the city commission election May 8, one week before the primaries. Involved in this to a very large extent is the supposedly red-hot fight between Senator Emerson L. Richards and Robert M. Johnston for the Republican senatorial nomination.

Mr. Richards and Mr. Johnston insist that their scrap is on the up and up, their scrap is a regular knockdown and drag-out row, with the future of each at stake, but there are some folks down this way who profess to smell a mouse, or, to change the metaphor, who believe they detect a large red herring being drawn across the city commission trail. If it is possible, they say, to get the voting populace sufficiently excited over the Richards-Johnston row, the present commission will glide into office without serious opposition.

The Republican organization version of the situation differs, however. It is admitted that "Noch" Johnson and Charles I. Lafferty, the county's Democratic boss, have a working agreement by which the latter is willing to again accept one place of the city commission's five through the reelection of Harry T. Headley, now director of streets and public improvements, but it is held that this was a matter of expediency on the part of the astute Mr. Johnson.

OTHER VIEW

As Mr. Johnson's friends explain it, he couldn't afford to have two fights on his hands at once and that, fearful of the debilitating effect of the Richards-Johnston contretempts, he went into a huddle with Mr. Lafferty and made concessions, a development that under any circumstances should prove interesting to that steadily decreasing portion of the electorate that takes seriously recurrent talk of sworn enmities between Republican and Democratic politicians.

Mr. Richards, getting a standing start following the David Baird conference at Camden that virtually ushered him out of the race for the gubernatorial nomination, now has the backing of Mr. Johnson—"Noch"—and a large part of the Republican organization, as declared by a vote of 58 of the 60 members of the county committee. Likewise, he is getting the support of the ward and township committees and clubs throughout the county, which to the minds of some of the Republicans who think for themselves, means that at the propitious moment—after the city commission election, of course—a quiet word will be whispered by Mr. Johnson into the ear of Mr. Johnston and the latter will calmly retire from the senatorial race in the interests of party harmony.

It is this mouse-smelling, red-herring discerning, thinking element of the party that may cause Mr. Johnson and Mr. Lafferty some trouble in their city commission coalition. It is concentrating on Louis Steinbrecker, Republican, for one of the commission places, and, despite the indorsements given Mr. Headley by most of the city's Republican ward organizations, it may win. It is a long shot, but reverting to the present lack of financial assistance from Mr. Kean, things have been known to happen that were not reckoned upon even by men of the political astuteness of Mr. Johnson.

STOKES ASKS OPPONENTS TO BARE CAMPAIGN PAY ROLLS

(Special to Jersey Observer)

TRENTON, May 10.—Listing of pay rolls and contributions to politicians or political enterprises by Saturday next is urged by former Gov. E. C. Stokes in an open letter to-day to Hamilton F. Kean and former United States Senator Joseph S. Frelinghuysen, his opponents for the Republican senatorial nomination.

The letter was not addressed to Mrs. Lillian F. Feickert, president of the New Jersey Women's Republican Club, and Edward W. Gray, also candidates for the nomination.

The suggestion is offered for the protection of the honor of the State and to avoid scandals such as occurred in Illinois and Pennsylvania, said Stokes.

Following are the Stokes suggestions:

"First, a list of all of the workers on our respective pay rolls. The amount of their compensation and of any who are receiving money for disbursements of any kind whatsoever, and the amount of money they are receiving.

"Second, the amount of contributions that have been received by any of us during the last four years that would affect or influence our senatorial prospects, or given to organizations or candidates with the understanding implied or expressed that their support was to follow, and the names of any and all on our respective pay rolls, together with the amount severally paid them during this period."

Stokes asserted that the public was entitled to the information and added that several of the active participants in the campaign are well known as persons who "are not altruists." He then inferred that he had reference to several politicians active in support of candidates or seekers of the nomination.

PAY ROLL PUBLICITY REQUEST PERTINENT

Interesting reading will be provided for the voters of New Jersey if the urge by Edward C. Stokes leads the other four candidates for the Republican nomination for United States Senator to join him in giving full publicity to their campaign pay rolls. The figures would not be dry ones under the Stokes plan. There might be a touch of high finance, a bit of low-life manipulation, some scenes usually confined behind closed doors, a sketch of employment-bureau methods, and an act dealing with a four-year-long game of politics.

The former governor mentions no names, but his descriptive powers are so graphic that many a discerning citizen will be able to recognize the features of the portraits limned by the political artist. In fact, the pictures might be distinct enough to provide the basis for issuance of subpœnas by the Senate committee investigating campaign expenditures. Under certain circumstances that committee is surely going to be deeply interested in the New Jersey senatorial campaign outlay in cash and credit.

The campaign for the Republican nomination has not been confined to this year or last. Some of the figures in the struggle began their activities four years ago, and they have kept going right up to the present, sometimes behind the scenes and sometimes in the spot light. Mr. Stokes wants to know whether these actors worked for love or money, for the public welfare or for private gain. Mr. Stokes's questions are fair and pertinent. There is still time for the filing of answers.

[From the Newark Evening News]

CAMPAIGN COST REPORTS SEEM TOO CONSERVATIVE

Expense accounts filed before primary day by the Republican aspirants for the gubernatorial and United States senatorial nominations would be more enlightening if they covered a longer campaigning period. All of the candidates were practically in the field much earlier than the date when they named their campaign managers and began to keep accounts of money received and expended.

In the senatorial race the leading spender, as officially reported, is Hamilton F. Kean. Mr. Kean's figures show he spent some $39,000, or more than five times the total reported by Mr. Stokes and $2,000 more than Mr. Frelinghuysen. The expense accounts rendered by the other two candidates, Edward W. Gray and Mrs. Lillian F. Feickert, are comparatively negligible. Nobody familiar with the campaign activities in the senatorial race this year can be convinced that the totals represent the full investment.

For instance, Mr. Kean has been actively on the job for at least four years, and he has put in a lot of valuable time and has had many "willing workers," who usually demand remuneration for their services. Mr. Stokes, on the other hand, has been reproached by some of his supporters because he has not been more liberal in his campaign outlay. Mr. Frelinghuysen, like Mr. Kean, has spent his own money, refusing to accept outside assistance.

Under the provisions of the corrupt practices act the five Republican senatorial candidates might have spent $250,000 to win the nomination. The fact that their total of expenses reaches only to $88,769, according to the official statements, indicates a monetary restraint for which some of them are not notable. Their outlay is quite in contrast with the fact asserted by United States Senator EDWARD I. EDWARDS that he has not put a penny out in seeking for renomination.

The four candidates for the Republican gubernatorial nomination averaged higher in their declared expenditures. Robert Carey led with $32,000 plus, or nearly $1,000 more than J. Henry Harrison, with Cornelius Doremus third on the cash list and Senator Morgan F. Larson low man at $22,769. The total outlay by the four, as reported, was $112,097, which is quite a considerable amount compared with William L. Dill's paltry $417 outlay to land the uncontested and Hague-promised Democratic gubernatorial nomination, but it is not so large as was indicated by the activities of the seekers after the nomination.

It may be pointed out that the grand total of the expenditures of the five Republican senatorial aspirants and the four seekers after the gubernatorial prize was a bit over $200,800, but this will not dispel the doubts that this sum really covers the actual outlay.

Mr. CARAWAY. These editorials are from Republican papers in New Jersey. Mr. Stokes, one of the candidates for the Senate on the Republican ticket in that State, asked his opponents to bare their pay rolls, to disclose how much they had collected, and from whom and to whom money had been paid.

It was the charge and is the charge in New Jersey, whether false or not, that one candidate for the Senate there on the Republican ticket has carried on for four years a very expensive campaign looking to his nomination. The charge was made, as I understand, that at one time he offered one person $200,000 for his influence in this race.

Going back as far as April 2, there appeared in the Newark Evening News of that date—which I am informed is, I started to say, a very reputable Republican newspaper, but at least I will say a very influential Republican newspaper published in New Jersey—the following headline:

Stokes's candidacy is menace to "auctioneers."

"Auctioneers" is in quotations. The substance of the editorial is that Stokes was trying to conduct a campaign of argument and reason, that his opponents were conducting a campaign of purchase, and his campaign was becoming a menace to those who tried to buy.

Under date of April 10, 1928—and I am reading only the headlines of the editorial—there appears an editorial in the same paper entitled "Friends fall out before primaries," which deals with the same question.

Under date of Saturday, April 21, 1928, is a headline, "Aroused voters able to rebuke corruption." The editorial insists that there ought to be some legislation to define and limit campaign expenditures.

Under date of May 11, 1928, is a headline, "Pay-roll publicity request pertinent." That is in the same paper, and the editorial reads:

[From the Newark Evening News, May 11, 1928]

Mr. Stokes wants to know whether these actors worked for love or money, for the public welfare or for private gain. Mr. Stokes's questions are fair and pertinent. There is still time for the filing of answers.

No answers were filed. It is not worth while that I should state to the Senate that Mr. Stokes is a former Governor of New Jersey, a man of high character, a man who tried to wage a fight for nomination to the United States Senate based solely upon the merits of the respective candidates. He thought, and evidently this journal thought, that the election was being corrupted, and he wanted the other candidates to tell what they expended and what promises they made. They did not see fit to answer him, and it is thought that it would be pertinent and wise that the Senate should make inquiry, and the resolution is introduced for that purpose, and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, I am quite sure every Senator will admit that the allegations, or charges, or warnings, or whatever term should be used, as they have appeared in the newspaper articles referred to are, indeed, very, very vague. Generally speaking, I believe I would be absolutely justified in resisting a suggestion for an investigation or an inquiry based on the type of information that has been put into the RECORD by the Senator from Arkansas.

However, I am positive that the people of New Jersey will welcome any fair and impartial inquiry. It would be absolutely impossible to have any actual charges of any illegal act occurring in the election, because it has been only 12 or 15 hours since the polls closed. This inquiry is therefore apparently asked on the basis of more or less factional or partisan suggestions made in the heat of a warmly contested campaign with four men and one woman running for the senatorial nomination.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. EDGE. I yield.

Mr. CARAWAY. I was sure the Senator would take the position that he has taken, that if it is the belief that there was any corrupt use of money he would want that fact developed.

Mr. EDGE. There is no question about that. With my willingness to have the investigation, however, I am simply drawing attention, as I feel it is my duty to draw attention, to some of the facts which can not be disputed.

Any contest between five active aspirants in a party primary, whether in New Jersey, or Arkansas, or any other State of the Union, will undoubtedly develop much criticism, many things will be said, many insinuations will be made, and many innuendoes and inferences suggested that have absolutely no basis in fact.

I repeat, however, that I am positive the people of New Jersey do not for one moment want even vague charges to go unchallenged or without an investigation, if carried on in a fair and impartial manner. If these allegations or suggestions are found unwarranted—which I am positive will be the result of such an inquiry—then it will simply make doubly assured the election in New Jersey of the entire Republican ticket.

The people of New Jersey will not only welcome the committee but will do everything they possibly can to make their work easy, and I am sure will give them all the information desired or possible to secure.

PROHIBITION ENFORCEMENT

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, yesterday I had a friendly bout with the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK] in which he contrasted the drink morals of the State of Alabama with those of the State of New York, very much to the disadvantage of the latter. It so happens that some statistics bearing upon that contrast have been brought to my attention to-day, and I desire to bring them to the attention of the Senate.

Last year in the city of New York there were 20 arrests for drunkenness per 10,000 population, and the publication which I am holding in my hand, a copy of an issue of the Periscope, in addition to stating that, gives certain very interesting statistics with reference to the number of arrests for drunkenness in three of the leading cities of Alabama in the year 1925. The publication says:

> The Moderation League could obtain the statistics of only three cities in Alabama.

Presumably the conditions were so bad in the other cities and towns of Alabama that the police chiefs of those cities and towns were unwilling to give the statistics relating to arrests for drunkenness.

The average for the three, that is to say, for these three cities in Alabama from which the Moderation League was able to get reports of chiefs of police, is 231 arrests per 10,000. Think of that; 20 arrests per 10,000 in the great city of New York and an average of 231 arrests per 10,000 in those three cities in the State of Alabama from which the Moderation League was able to obtain statistics. Then this publication proceeds to give in detail the number of arrests per 10,000 in each of the three cities, Birmingham, Troy, and Mobile, as follows:

	1920 population	1925 arrests for drunkenness	Arrests per 10,000
ALABAMA
Birmingham	178,806	4,706	264
Troy	5,696	55	98
Mobile	60,777	923	152
Total	245,279	5,684	231

Mr. BLACK obtained the floor.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Alabama yield just a moment?

Mr. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. CARAWAY. Will not the Senator permit the resolution to be adopted? I think there is no opposition to it.

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President——

Mr. BLACK. I only yielded on the supposition that the question was to be voted upon.

Mr. CARAWAY. I told the Senator from Alabama that the resolution would be adopted without debate.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I will state my reason for rising, and then the Senator can use his judgment.

Mr. HEFLIN. I think the Senator from Missouri had better let the matter go over until my colleague shall have concluded.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I would like to speak now. Since this question has been brought up—it has already consumed too much of the time of the Senate—it makes it necessary for me to make two or three statements.

In the first place, I want to apologize to the Senate for having felt called upon at all on yesterday to consume any of the time which should be spent in legislation in replying to charges made by the Senator from Maryland, who seems, for some reason, to have a particular antagonism for the South. He showed that several months ago, when the question of the fourteenth amendment came up. The lone voice raised against the South was that of the Senator from Maryland, born in the State of Virginia. He has taken occasion a great many times to repeat his charges, and therefore, and for that reason only, did I rise on yesterday, and do I rise to-day. So far as I am concerned, when I shall have finished, I will be through. It is my judgment that this is not the place to decide the prohibition question, except when we have a measure involving that question on which to vote. We ought to be attending to the business of the people, not wasting and frittering away the time with useless speeches for campaign purposes. So much for that.

In the first place, Senators have had experience in their home communities, and they know that when saloons were in existence in this country it was customary to send a man who was drunk home. It was the custom in my town; it was the custom in other places; and several years ago I read an article in the Saturday Evening Post from an observer who had been in Scotland, stating that there they made it an invariable rule never to arrest a drunk unless it was impossible to get him in a cab and send him home. That was true also in the United States under the saloon régime.

When prohibition came into effect in the South we arrested persons who were drunk. Up to that time, from my own experience and knowledge, they were arrested only when they were so boisterously drunk that it was impossible to do anything with them.

The State of New York, as all of us know, has never accepted the prohibition law as the law of America. Neither has the State of Maryland. A few weeks ago some ladies coming through Maryland stopped at a hotel, which served, without question, as a part of the menu, liquors prohibited by the Constitution of the United States of America. That is because of the fact that New York and Maryland are in a practical state of rebellion to-day against the Constitution of the United States.

Carrying out that idea, we know that policemen in New York do not arrest for drunkenness. I have been there, and other Senators have been there. I have talked with the policemen.

Mr. COPELAND. Was not the Senator arrested?

Mr. BLACK. I was not, Senator. Even if I had been drunk I would not have been arrested. Perhaps the Senator knows more about that than I do, and he may be better qualified to speak on that than I. I know, as everybody knows who has been there and talked with the policemen there, that it is common talk that they not only do not arrest for drunkenness but, carrying out the policies of the administration that believes in and preaches nullification of the Constitution, they do not arrest either for drunkenness or for selling liquor.

It is foolish to attempt to compare statistics in the city of New York with statistics in the State of Alabama, where they attempt to enforce the law. Away with your statistics of which you seem to be so fond. When nothing else can be done the Senator from Maryland rises in his place to interrupt the business of the people of the Nation to give statistics gathered by the Moderation League, a league which has as its basic principle the platform of the inalienable right of people to get drunk, to shoot up the community, to kill the members of their own family, and absolutely destroy the morality of the Nation. And then he quotes from the Minute Men, or the League for Moderation, which has for its aim and purpose the moderate carrying on of the drinking of liquor, as he terms it.

I just wanted to say these things and this with reference to what the Senator said yesterday. Not content with statistics, he delves into rumor and charges Alabama, the State in which I live, with certain crimes—at least, I presume he calls them crimes. I did not reply to this and had not intended to do so if he had not brought it up again. He says that he heard that somebody said that somebody else said that the Minute Men said that the Moderation League had reported that a drunkard had said that down in Alabama a Catholic man had married a Protestant girl and the father had killed the Catholic man, and that the father was acquitted.

I have been living in Alabama all my life. Never, until that was mentioned on the floor of the Senate, have I heard of such a thing being true, and I do not believe it now. Even if the father had killed the man, by what right does the spokesman for States' rights dare to stand on this floor and invite rumor and say that Alabama is to be castigated and condemned because an honest jury of honest men may, under the evidence in the case, acquit a man of the charge of murder? I say to the Senator from Maryland or anybody else that when he or any other member of the Moderation League or the Minute Men, or any of the organizations which he seems to represent, condemns Alabama on account of the fact that a jury in an orderly court has acquitted a man, he is stepping beyond his rights either as a citizen or as a Senator. Alabama is not responsible to the Senator for its action. Alabama does not kneel at his shrine to ask whether or not a man shall be acquitted before a jury. Alabama has never yet gone to Maryland and attempted to tell them that they must be held up to public contumely and shame because of the fact that an honest jury in its honest belief should have seen fit to acquit a man of the charge of murder, or any other charge.

How a man who claims to be a living exponent of State rights can claim that he has even the remotest privilege to stand on the floor of the Senate and condemn a State for the acquittal of a man charged with murder is more than a plain, ordinary citizen, who is not versed in scholastic lore and historical facts and literary epigrams, can understand.

Then, again, the Senator from Maryland said that Alabama, next to Indiana, is the worst klan-ridden State in the Nation. I do not know whether the Senator has ever been in Alabama or not. Maybe he has been. We welcome him there if he wants to come. We hold nothing against Maryland.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Alabama assure me of my personal safety if I go?

Mr. BLACK. Is that all the Senator wanted to ask? I think, gentlemen of the Senate, that in spite of the fact that the Senator from Maryland has seen fit to hurl unfounded charges, based on rumor, and has stooped to rumors with reference to charging the people of Alabama with things which he can not prove, that he will be as safe in Alabama as he was down in Virginia and other Southern States at the time when he, in budding innocence, perhaps loved the South. I think the Senator from Maryland—and he knows it as well as he knows he is living—would be as safe in Alabama as he was in his mother's arms when he nursed at her breast. When he gets up on the floor of the Senate and makes insinuations of that kind simply because of some kind of hatred that rankles in his breast for that section of the Nation which gave him birth, that section to which he owes his life, that section in which rest the ashes of his parents, it is more than a plain ordinary Senator from Alabama can understand.

The next charge the Senator from Maryland makes is that a Catholic priest had to come all the way from Alabama to Maryland to ask him for protection. He said a man had been charged with a crime and that he could not get protection by going to the officers of his State. I desire to say to the Senator from Maryland that there is no man in Alabama, high or low, rich or poor, priest or preacher, Catholic or Baptist or Methodist, Jew or Gentile, who can not come to this Senator from Alabama and present his case and have it weighed as impartially and as fairly as though he belonged to the church to which I have vowed my allegiance.

I deny that the Senator from Maryland had any right to place any such unfounded and baseless charge upon the records of the United States Senate. I deny further that any man in Alabama can not get a fair trial before a jury. For 20 years I have stood and looked in the faces of jurors of that State. My time has not been spent altogether in the musty pages of musty books. I have sought, so far as I could, to study that greatest of all things, human nature and human life.

I believe that I understand the sentiment of the people in Alabama, who born with the spirit of the old South, nurtured in its cradle, loving and affectionate for the things which they cherish, are true to those noble traditions which made Virginia, the native State of the Senator from Maryland, noble long before he was born. Alabamians are still loyal to the old-fashioned principles of old-fashioned Americanism. These principles may not suit the fastidious and learned knowledge of the Senator from Maryland. It is his privilege to dislike them if he sees fit. But I do claim that in the name of common decency, in the name of common justice, in the name of common honesty, no man has a right to rise on the floor of the United States Senate and on unfounded rumors charge that Alabama is composed of a citizenship of scalawags and scoundrels.

I make no charge of that kind against Maryland. I believe Maryland is composed of good, honest people and citizens in the main, just as any other State. True, they have their crimes, and we have them in Alabama; but I want to say that in Alabama, notwithstanding the abuse of the officials by the Senator from Maryland, those officials do not go around the State preaching anarchy and lawlessness. When the Constitution of these United States was amended and certain duties were placed upon the States of the Nation, Alabama came up like a law-abiding State, as did her governor, irrespective of his own convictions, and stood behind the law. Instead of the officials of Alabama spending their time attempting to batter down the fortress of good citizenship and law and order, and instead of attempting to break down the law by insidious propaganda, they have stood for the enforcement of the law.

The Senator from Maryland may place in the RECORD all he wants to place there, but so far as I am concerned I am through when I say this: I am not going to be engaged in any more controversy with a man who places in the RECORD vague and unfounded rumors and who is willing to indict a whole State without any evidence to support the statements he makes.

It is an easy thing for a Senator from one State to get up and make an unfounded blanket charge against citizens who do not have to vote to see whether or not he remains here. But the brave and courageous man is the man who looks in the face of his own constituents and, if he has any charges to hurl at anybody, makes them against those who have a right to pass on whether he is right or whether he is wrong.

I regret that I have found it necessary to respond in this manner to these baseless charges against my native State, the State I love with all my heart, but I can not do otherwise, since I am one of Alabama's spokesmen.

I say to the Senate, without going into statistics, because I do not care to go into statistics of liquor organizations—I do not care anything about them—that Alabama is proud of her record. I say to the Senator from Maryland, sir, if you can go back to Maryland and look into the faces of men who are as honest, as patriotic, as loyal, as law abiding as the citizens of the State which you seem to hate, then you can well take pride in representing the citizenship of Maryland. But in the name of fairness and honesty I do ask that the next time you make a charge against Alabama or any other Southern State, you at least do yourself and the people the justice of knowing first whether that charge is true or false.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, one thing at any rate is perfectly obvious, and that is that the bolt I shot went home. Never since I was a boy in south side Virginia, and occasionally happened to shoot a partridge through the head, did I ever see anything that I have shot go so completely and confusedly up into the air as the junior Senator from Alabama. I gave about two minutes to figures of arithmetic, and the Senator from Alabama has given about half an hour to figures of rhetoric. And yet in all that time he has not undertaken to deny the truth of the one statement I made; that is to say, that notwithstanding his effort yesterday to blacken the fair name of the State of Maryland and of the city of New York, for every 20 arrests for drunkenness per 10,000 population in the city of New York last year there were 231 arrests for drunkenness per 10,000 inhabitants in the only three cities in the State of Alabama that dared to give to the Moderation League statistics with respect to arrests for drunkenness at all.

The irresponsive manner in which the Senator from Alabama referred to me reminded me of a ludicrous incident that happened a great many years ago in the city of Baltimore. One of our estimable mayors went up to Maine when prohibition was supposed to prevail there, though, of course, it did not. When he came back he was charged by one of his factional enemies with having taken a drink while he was in Maine.

If he was really innocent, it was the simplest thing in the world for him to come out and deny that he took a drink while he was in Maine and had violated the obligations of comity which he owed to a sister State of Maryland. It would have been possible for him, perhaps, if he had been innocent, to have gotten some friends who were in Maine with him to deny that he had taken a drink while he was there, but nothing of the sort was done. What he did was to induce some of his friends in Baltimore to publish a card in the Baltimore newspapers, stating not that he had not taken a drink when he was in Maine, but that from their knowledge of his general character they were certain that it was simply impossible for him to have violated the respect which he owed to a sister State of Maryland by taking a drink in that State when its constitution prohibited the sale or the use of liquor within its borders. Just as irresponsive I say as that card was to the accusation against that mayor is the inflammatory and incoherent speech which has just been made by the Senator from Alabama in reply to me.

He undertook to contrast unfavorably the morals of the city of New York and the State of Maryland with the morals of the State of Alabama to the great advantage of the latter State. I have said nothing upon mere hearsay in relation to Alabama.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, let us see if he knows this to be true:

As I am informed, a year or so ago when the daughter of a resident of Alabama married a young Catholic——

Mr. BRUCE. Do not go any further. I have had that statement made to me upon authority that I think is as good as yours.

Mr. BLACK. You say you know it?

Mr. BRUCE. How can I in one sense know anything except what I know of my own personal knowledge?

Mr. BLACK. I do not think you can.

Mr. BRUCE. That statement was made to me upon what I believe to be absolutely credible testimony; and so far as that priest having been dealt with as he was, I know that of my own personal knowledge, because Father Eaton, of Mobile, and Bishop Toolen, of Alabama, feeling that it was impossible for them to secure any representation in public life for the protection of the good name of their church in Alabama did come to me in the State of Maryland and asked me to do everything in my power, which I most cheerfully did, to see that that priest had a fair trial.

Mr. BLACK. If the Senator will yield there, did they ask him to see that he had a fair trial or to keep him from coming back to Alabama?

Mr. BRUCE. To see that he had a fair trial.

Mr. BLACK. In Alabama?

Mr. BRUCE. In my opinion, if he had gone back to Alabama in the Ku-Klux community where he had been he could not have hoped to have a fair trial.

Mr. BLACK. Do you know what community he was in? Do you know whether it was a Ku-Klux community, or do you just assume that it was?

Mr. BRUCE. It was alleged that it was.

Mr. BLACK. Who alleged it?

Mr. BRUCE. A large part of Alabama is a Ku-Klux community; indeed, it is such a Ku-Klux community, though this may be mere hearsay, that I have heard it said that the junior Senator from Alabama owes his seat in the Senate to the Ku-Klux vote.

Mr. BLACK. If the Senator will let me reply to that, that statement, like the others he made, is absolutely untrue. I got all the Ku-Klux votes I could get——

Mr. BRUCE. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. And all the Catholic votes I could get, and all the Jew votes I could get, and all the Baptist votes I could get, and all the others, and I have no apology to make for it, and I am here representing them.

Mr. BRUCE. I understood you were ready to resort to any expedient to get them.

Mr. BLACK. I am sorry I can not state here exactly what I think about that statement, and so I suppose the best thing to do is to let it go.

Mr. BRUCE. I think so. I think you show to better advantage when you keep your seat than when you rise to your feet.

I know, as I have said, whereof I am speaking. Those Catholic ecclesiastics did not say that that priest was innocent; they did not know they said whether he was innocent or guilty. All that they asked was that he should have a fair trial, which they did not believe he could obtain in the State of Alabama or in a Ku-Klux infested portion of the State of Alabama.

Mr. BLACK. If the Senator will yield again, where does the Senator want to try him—in Maryland—for a crime he committed in Alabama? I presume you wanted to take him to your town and defend him there.

Mr. BRUCE. No State in this country can hold itself as justly exempt from the criticism of other States when it comes to flagitious crimes or detestable scandals committed or existing in that State. Think of the Senator from Alabama imputing to the State of Maryland or to the State of New York lawlessness or a disposition to nullify the Federal Constitution. No such condition or disposition exists in the State of New York and the State of Maryland. Certainly, if the eighteenth amendment is nullified, which is not the case, in the State of Maryland, it is equally true that the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments are nullified in the State of Alabama, otherwise surely the vast negro population which exists in that State would be represented by some mayor or some governor or by some Member of the United States Senate or the House.

Mr. BLACK. Am I to understand that the Senator wants to let the negroes vote down there? Is that what he is talking for?

Mr. BRUCE. I have gone over that.

Mr. BLACK. The Senator seems gradually to be going over that way.

Mr. BRUCE. It is impossible for you to subject me to any misunderstanding in that relation. I wish you to know that, while I am of southern birth and as loyal to all the best traditions and principles of conduct of the South as any man who can be found within its borders, I have no word of palliation for either the sumptuary intolerance, the sectarian intolerance, or the racial intolerance that have in recent years become such painful features of the public life of some of the States of the South as well as of States in other parts of the Union.

Ah, in no forum could you find it more difficult to support the proposition that everything in Alabama is as it should be than in the Senate of the United States, because we recall that only a short time ago Alabama was represented in this Chamber by a man worthy to hold a seat in any parliamentary assembly in the world—Senator Oscar W. Underwood. He gave up his seat because in his own State he had been subjected to such an ignoble proscription at the hands of public opinion as it was impossible for anyone in any other State of the Union to understand. There, I say, was a true statesman, a man with all the breadth of vision, with all the stainless integrity, with all the statesmanlike qualities that characterize a true statesman.

There were, perhaps, other men in this Chamber who were held in a higher degree of esteem than he on one side or the other of this Chamber; but I venture to say that there was not a solitary man in it who was held in the same high esteem that he was on both sides of it. It would have been an honor to the State of Maryland to have been represented by him——

Mr. BLACK. I agree with that statement.

Mr. BRUCE. It would have been an honor to the State of New York to be represented by him in the Senate; it would have been an honor to any State of the Union to have been represented by him in the Senate. Ah, but he did not suit the political genius of latter-day Alabama, the State where in three cities alone there were in 1925, 231 arrests for drunkenness per 10,000 of population, and where the Ku-Klux Klan and its outrages are in full flower—in such full flower that the attorney general of Alabama only a short time ago resigned from the klan, saying that it had become such an instrument of lawlessness that he could no longer remain a member of it.

I should like the junior Senator from Alabama to tell me how many of the indictments which were obtained against midnight prowlers and marauders for flogging innocent men, women, and children were thrown out of the courts of Alabama. I have seen it stated that Attorney General McCall, of Alabama, abandoned some 100 indictments because he felt that the influence of the klan made it impossible for him successfully to prosecute them.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

Mr. BLACK. I understood the Senator from Maryland to ask me a question.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, a point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Kansas will state the point of order.

Mr. CURTIS. I understand that under the rules of debate it is out of order for a Senator to refer to a State of the Union in an offensive way; and I hope the Senators will observe that rule.

Mr. BRUCE. I shall be very glad to observe it; but I did not violate it until it had been violated, and grossly violated, by the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. CURTIS. I did not hear the Senator's speech.

Mr. BLACK. I have not violated it at all. I was replying to what the Senator said about Alabama yesterday when I was out of the Chamber.

Mr. BRUCE. Well, I have practically completed all I wanted to say. I merely want to add that I am not undertaking to frame an indictment against the whole people of the State of Alabama, because the enlightened press of that State is doing its very best at the present time to shake off the Ku Klux incubus which rests upon the breast of Alabama; and the enlightened elements of its population are giving all the aid and comfort to it that they can.

SENATORIAL NOMINATION AND ELECTION IN NEW JERSEY

The Senate resumed the consideration of Senate Resolution 232, submitted by Mr. CARAWAY.

Mr. CARAWAY. I ask that the question be put on the adoption of the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, I do not want to object to a vote on the resolution. I simply want to make a statement.

This resolution, as drawn, proposes to delegate the work referred to in the resolution to the special committee that has been engaged in similar work, of which I have the honor to be chairman.

Speaking for myself, I do not want this job. I should like to be excepted from the resolution if it is to go to the committee.

I have spoken to two other members of the committee, and they have expressed themselves to me as not wanting to undertake this work. We want to wind up the work we have, and to be properly discharged.

I hope that clause of the resolution will be stricken out. At least I want the Senate to understand that I do not want to be ordered to go on with the work mentioned in the resolution.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President——

Mr. CARAWAY. Will the Senator from Alabama let us see if we can not get a vote on the resolution? It will not take more than a second.

Mr. HEFLIN. I understand that we have to come back here at 8 o'clock.

Mr. CARAWAY. I know it. Therefore let us get the resolution passed.

Mr. HEFLIN. If we can vote on it right now, very well.

Mr. CARAWAY. There is not to be any further discussion of it.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, does the Senator from Missouri say he will not serve on the committee if the resolution is agreed to?

Mr. CARAWAY. No; he did not say that.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I say I do not want to do it. I am not going to say that I will not do anything that the Senate commands me to do; but I am saying now that if the resolution goes through I shall ask in some way to be relieved.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, I ask for a vote on the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

PROHIBITION ENFORCEMENT

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I am going to detain the Senate for only a moment.

I was not here on yesterday when my colleague [Mr. BLACK] had a colloquy with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. BRUCE]. I concur in what my colleague has said to-day. He has very ably replied to the unwarranted attacks of the Senator from Maryland.

It seems, from the general conduct of the Senator from Maryland in speaking in season and out upon the whisky question in this body, that he has come to represent that question in the country, and that they come to him with all of the hatched-out statistics they can find, and he belches them forth upon the Senate and the country, consuming time on such a topic, as my colleague has well and ably said, when we should be going on with legislative matters. Now he has gone out of his way to reflect upon our State. The Senator from Alabama, my colleague, did not start that controversy. The Senator from Maryland started it; and he is viciously attacking people everywhere who do not agree with him upon the whisky question.

The Senator from Maryland has also shown beyond question by his own statement that the Roman Catholic machine of my State have selected him to be their leader and mouthpiece in matters here. When a priest was indicted down there for a felony—one of the worst crimes ever committed in the State, an attack on a member of his own church, the wife of a soldier—when he was indicted down there where the crime was committed, the Senator opposed our getting that Catholic priest back from Canada to try him for his crime in Alabama.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield.

Mr. BRUCE. The Senator knows, however, that the Federal grand jury in the State of Alabama refused to return a true bill against him.

Mr. HEFLIN. Yes; I referred to that once before and stated that the chairman of the Republican National Committee in the State was a lawyer in the case, that he controls the Republican patronage in the State, and that the district attorney was recommended for appointment by him; and he secured his appointment through this chairman who represented Priest O'Connor, and got a good fee for his services here at the Capital. Not only that, Mr. President, but this priest, Eaton, of Mobile, that the Senator talks about, and the Catholic bishop, and other Catholics got together and decided that man, Priest O'Connor, must not go back to Alabama. They said that the Catholic Church in Alabama would use all the power it had to keep him from coming back; that they had investigated the matter, and that he was innocent. Think of that! They had not heard the evidence in the case. They took the priest's side. So the Senator was defending a Catholic Church court trial, and trying to keep this priest from being tried in an American court of justice. So when this priest and bishop went to him in Maryland they seemed to know where to go to get somebody who claimed to be a Protestant to speak for them in this body, for the purpose of interfering with the instrumentalities of justice in other States—where a Catholic was involved.

Mr. President, the Senator talks about my former able colleague who used to sit here, and whom I have always been fond of personally. If you ask me for my candid opinion, I will tell you that when Senator Underwood lined up the Alabama delegation for the Al Smith program in the Democratic National Convention of 1924, at New York, he hurt himself greatly with the Democrats of Alabama.

The Senator from Maryland every day is giving the people of his State additional reasons for being irritated and offended at his conduct. He seems to be attacking every Protestant institution than he can lay his hands on. He is always ready to stand up and champion the cause of the Roman Catholic political machine that he seems to be doing obeisance to in Baltimore and elsewhere. He does not seem to remember that in Baltimore City, a Democratic city, they beat the Democratic nominee, a Roman Catholic, for mayor last year by 17,000 votes, and that in the city of Boston they beat the Catholic candidate, and in Chicago they beat the Catholic nominee; and in Detroit, Mich., where a Roman Catholic mayor had machine guns leveled on Ku-Klux Klan paraders, men, women, and children, the Protestants and Jews outside joined with the klansmen and they defeated that mayor and drove him into ignominious defeat.

The Senator from Maryland stands here hurling these slurs and insults in the face of the South, attacking the great secret orders of the Protestant organization; but you never hear him say anything against the lawless liquor interests of the Nation, or against the Knights of Columbus and the Roman Catholic political machine, who tried to involve us in war with Mexico.

He says nothing against these; but he seems to have become the mouthpiece of the other element. Let him hug these things to his heart and get all the consolation he can out of them. If he keeps this up, when it is all over he will say what Joe Brown, of Georgia, said after his debate in the Senate with John J. Ingalls, when Ingalls had romped on him as my colleague did to-day on the Senator from Maryland. The Georgia delegation asked him what he was going to do about it; they thought he ought to have a personal encounter with Ingalls. Senator Brown swelled out his chest and said, "Do? Do nothing. He brought it all on himself." [Laughter.]

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, I present the conference report on the Civil War widows' pension bill. The bill now carries considerably less than when it passed the Senate. The Senate receded to some extent.

I ask for the immediate consideration of the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. VANDENBERG in the chair). The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10159) entitled "An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to widows and former widows of certain soldiers, sailors, and marines of the Civil War, and for other purposes," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2 and agree to the same.

PETER NORBECK,
PORTER H. DALE,
DANIEL F. STECK,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
W. T. FITZGERALD,
R. N. ELLIOTT,
E. M. BEERS,
MELL G. UNDERWOOD,
RALPH F. LOZIER,
Managers on the part of the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the report?

There being no objection, the report was considered by the Senate and agreed to.

NAVAL APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. HALE. I ask that the Chair lay before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives on the amendments of the Senate to the naval appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives, which was read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, UNITED STATES,
May 15, 1928.

Resolved, That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate Nos. 45 and 50 to the bill (H. R. 12286) entitled "An act making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929, and for other purposes," and concur therein.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 46, and concur therein with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "Naval fuel depot, Melville, R. I.: Toward replacement of boiler plant (limit of cost $150,000), $65,000."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 52, and concur therein with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum inserted by said amendment insert "$31,956,000."

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, was the conference agreement unanimous?

Mr. HALE. The conference report was agreed to yesterday. Under the rules of the House certain matters had to be voted on over there; that is all.

I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House to the amendments of the Senate Nos. 46 and 52.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Maine.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, announced that the House had adopted a concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 36) requesting the President to return to the House of Representatives the bill (H. R. 9568) to authorize the purchase at private sale of a tract of land in Louisiana, and for other purposes, so as to permit the correction of an error in the enrolled bill, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

LAND IN LOUISIANA—RETURN OF ENROLLED BILL

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, referring to the concurrent resolution that just came over from the House, the bill is now in the hands of the President; and the author of the bill tells me a mistake has been incorporated in it which will affect the title to a piece of land. I have been requested by the author of the bill in the House to ask for the immediate consideration of the concurrent resolution, in order that the bill may be recalled before the President affixes his signature to it, containing, as it does, the error to which I have referred.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 36) from the House of Representatives, which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the President is requested to return to the House of Representatives the bill (H. R. 9568) entitled "An act to authorize the purchase at private sale of a tract of land in Louisiana, and for other purposes," for the purpose of permitting the correction of an error in the enrolled bill.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After three minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

RECESS

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate take a recess until 8 o'clock p. m.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 43 minutes p. m.) the Senate, under the order previously entered, took a recess until 8 o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION

The Senate reassembled at 8 o'clock p. m., on the expiration of the recess.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under the unanimous-consent order for this evening's session the clerk will call the calendar for the consideration of unobjected bills.

ORDER FOR RECESS AT CLOSE OF EVENING SESSION

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate concludes its business for to-day it shall take a recess until 12 o'clock to-morrow.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

THE CALENDAR

The bill (S. 2447) for the relief of the stockholders of the First National Bank of Newton, Mass., was announced as first in order on the calendar.

Mr. BRATTON. Over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

RECOMMITTAL OF PENSION BILL

The bill (S. 1939) granting pensions and increase of pensions to widows and former widows of certain soldiers, sailors, and marines of the Civil War, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, I ask that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Pensions.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2787) providing for the appointment of governors of the non-Christian Provinces in the Philippine Islands by the Governor General without the consent of the Philippine Senate was announced as next in order.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 1) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States prohibiting war was announced as next in order, and that it had been reported adversely from the Committee on the Judiciary.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be passed over.

INVESTIGATION OF ALL PHASES OF CROP INSURANCE

The bill (S. 2149) authorizing and directing the Secretary of Agriculture to investigate all phases of crop insurance was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized and directed to establish a unit with suitable personnel in the Bureau of Agricultural Economics of the Department of Agriculture for studying and investigating all phases of crop insurance and for making the results thereof available.

SEC. 2. This unit is authorized—

(1) To acquire, analyze, and disseminate economic, statistical, and historical information regarding the progress, organization, and methods of writing crop insurance in this country and abroad.

(2) To gather, tabulate, and analyze all available data pertaining to crop insurance, such as crop yields, crop damage, climatic, and/or other data needed and useful in measuring the natural and economic hazards incident to the growing of farm crops in the various sections of the country.

(3) To study and devise plans and methods for writing crop insurance.

(4) To promote the knowledge of crop-insurance principles and practices, and to cooperate in promoting such knowledge with educational, cooperative, commercial, and other agencies, whether governmental or private.

(5) To publish and disseminate information the acquisition of which is authorized hereby.

SEC. 3. The Secretary of Agriculture may make such rules and regulations as may be deemed advisable to carry out the provisions of this act, and may cooperate with any department or agency of the Government, any State, Territory, District, or possession, or department, agency, or political subdivision thereof, or any person; and may call upon any other Federal department, board, or commission for assistance in carrying out the purposes of this act; and shall have the power to appoint, remove, and fix the compensation of such officers and employees not in conflict with existing laws, and make such expenditure for rent, outside the District of Columbia, printing, telegrams, telephones, books of reference, books of law, publications, newspapers, furniture, stationery, office equipment, travel, and other supplies and expenses as shall be necessary to the administration of this act in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, and there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $50,000, to be available for expenditure during the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1928, and the appropriation of such additional sums as may be necessary thereafter for carrying out the purposes of this act is hereby authorized.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 1414) for the prevention and removal of obstructions and burdens upon interstate commerce in cottonseed oil by regulating transactions on future exchanges, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, we have an understanding regarding this bill, and I ask that it may go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1728) placing service postmasters in the classified service was announced as next in order.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1940) to divest goods, wares, and merchandise manufactured, produced, or mined by convicts or prisoners of their interstate character in certain cases was announced as next in order.

Mr. PHIPPS and Mr. METCALF. Over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

COLUMBIA BASIN RECLAMATION PROJECT

The bill (S. 1462) for the adoption of the Columbia Basin reclamation project and for other purposes was announced as next in order.

Mr. PHIPPS. Mr. President, I desire to perfect the pending amendment. In rereading it, it was found that it was wise to modify it. I ask to have the amendment perfected. I do not think there will be any objection to the bill with the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator's modified amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 1, line 7, after the word "Interior," strike out the balance of the line, all of lines 8, 9, and 10, and on page 2, all of lines 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6, and insert the following: "be investigated as to feasibility and cost, and the appropriation of funds to make such surveys, investigations, and studies as may be necessary to enable the Secretary of the Interior to determine the economic feasibility of this project, and the best method for prosecuting the same, is hereby authorized from funds in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated."

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Colorado if the amendment is agreeable to the Senator from Washington [Mr. DILL]?

Mr. PHIPPS. I thought the Senator from Washington was on the floor.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I ask that the bill may go over for the present.

Mr. PHIPPS. I ask that the amendment in the form in which I have modified it may be the pending amendment.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The Senator has a right to modify his amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

DIVISION OF SAFETY, DEPARTMENT OF LABOR

The bill (S. 1266) to create in the Bureau of Labor Statistics of the Department of Labor a division of safety was announced as next in order.

Mr. METCALF. Over.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, I rise merely to remark that I hope when this measure is called again those who as of now object will have looked into the report of the committee and will agree with me and the committee that the bill should pass. It is in the interest of men and women and children who toil in factories and mines and elsewhere and is designed to reduce the hazards inherent in industry resulting in loss of life and limb and health. I do earnestly hope that there will be no objection when it comes up again.

Mr. METCALF. I only ask for a Senator who is now absent that it go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2292) providing for the employment of certain civilian assistants in the office of the Governor General of the Philippine Islands, and fixing salaries of certain officials, was announced as next in order.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1831) to authorize the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy to class as secret certain material, apparatus, or equipment for military and naval use, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 759) to give the Supreme Court of the United States authority to make and publish rules in common-law actions, was announced as next in order.

Mr. DENEEN. Over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

CHARLES R. SIES

The bill (S. 151) for the relief of Charles R. Sies was announced as next in order.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, I ask that House bill 4012, Calendar 959, be substituted for the Senate bill.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Is the House bill identical with the Senate bill?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Exactly.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The Senate as in Committee of the Whole proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 4012) for the relief of Charles R. Sies, and it was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Chief Pay Clerk Charles R. Sies, United States Navy, retired, shall be advanced on the retired list to passed assistant paymaster with the rank and retired pay and allowances of a lieutenant on the retired list of the Navy. Such rank shall take effect on March 4, 1925, and such pay and allowances shall be paid from and after such date.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, Senate bill 151 is indefinitely postponed.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2859) for the relief of Francis J. Young was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2864) to establish the standard of weights and measures for the following wheat-mill, rye-mill, and corn-mill products—namely, flours, semolina, hominy, grits, and meals, and all commercial feeding stuffs, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. TYSON. I ask that the bill may go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1093) to prevent the sale of cotton and grain in future markets was announced as next in order.

Mr. METCALF. Over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 57) requesting the President to immediately withdraw the armed forces of the United States from Nicaragua was announced as next in order, and as having been reported adversely from the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. METCALF and Mr. PHIPPS. Over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

ADJUSTMENT IN RATE STRUCTURE OF COMMON CARRIERS

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 99) to amend joint resolution directing the Interstate Commerce Commission to take action relative to adjustments in the rate structure of common carriers subject to the interstate commerce act, and the fixing of rates and charges, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That S. J. Res. 107, approved January 30, 1925 (Public Resolution No. 46, 68th Cong.), directing the Interstate Commerce Commission to take action relative to adjustments in the rate structure of common carriers subject to the interstate commerce act, and the fixing of rates and charges, be amended by inserting in the last paragraph after the words "including livestock" the words "and of fisheries."

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2532) to provide for the designation of clerks or employees of the Department of the Interior to serve as registers and receivers in the land offices in Alaska was announced as next in order.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2679) to limit the period for which an officer appointed with the advice and consent of the Senate may hold over after his term shall have expired was announced as next in order.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 728) to provide for the construction of works for the protection and development of the lower Colorado River Basin, for the approval of the Colorado River compact, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. ASHURST. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1263) to amend section 4 of the interstate commerce act was announced as next in order.

Mr. JONES. Over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The resolution (S. Res. 173) expressing it as the sense of the Senate that Andrew W. Mellon should resign as Secretary of the Treasury was announced as next in order.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1748) relating to the qualifications of jurors in the Federal courts was announced as next in order.

Mr. BRATTON. Over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 3151) to limit the jurisdiction of district courts of the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1794) establishing additional land offices in the States of Montana, Oregon, Idaho, and South Dakota was announced as next in order.

Mr. PHIPPS. Over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 279) to amend section 8 of an act entitled "An act to incorporate the Howard University in the District of Columbia," approved March 2, 1867, was announced as next in order.

Mr. FLETCHER. Over.

Mr. PHIPPS. Is there objection to the bill, may I inquire?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Florida objected.

Mr. FLETCHER. Several Senators are absent just now who wish to have the bill go over.

Mr. PHIPPS. I would like to have it go over without prejudice. It is a case where we have been for years appropriating by items in the Senate.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I understand the bill has gone over. I shall have to call for the regular order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over, and the clerk will state the next bill on the calendar.

The bill (H. R. 8298) authorizing the acquisition of a site for the farmers' produce market, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. BRATTON. Over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

AMENDMENT OF GENERAL LEASING ACT

A bill (H. R. 10885) to amend sections 23 and 24 of the general leasing act approved February 25, 1920 (41 Stat. L. 437), was announced as next in order.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I observe that the bill has not been referred to a committee. I ask for an explanation of it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is informed that an identical bill was reported from the committee, and that this bill was passed once before and reconsidered.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Under the circumstances, inasmuch as there does not seem to be any member of the committee here to explain it, I ask that it may go over without prejudice.

Mr. BRATTON. I think I can state to the Senator what the bill does.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I withhold my request.

Mr. BRATTON. I have not made a careful examination of the bill, but I am assured that what it actually does is to take soda of potash out of the general leasing act and put it under this special act, thereby placing it in the same classification with other minerals of a similar nature.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I would like to have the bill go over until I can get a chance to look into it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

MAY GORDON RODES AND SARA LOUISE RODES

The bill (S. 126) for the relief of May Gordon Rodes and Sara Louise Rodes, heirs at law of Tyree Rodes, deceased, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Over.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, will the Senator be good enough to withhold his objection?

Mr. KING. Very well.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. The bill is for the relief of the widow and daughter of a citizen. It was carefully considered by the Committee on Claims. Our Government made use of the patent of the deceased, whereby the committee finds that the Government saved perhaps some $17,000,000. It is true that the claim was for $142,000; but after a thorough examination and study of the case—and days were devoted to the subject—the committee reported in favor of allowing $35,750. I think I am warranted in saying that the committee was unanimous in believing it to be a just claim against our Government.

I express the hope that the bill may pass the Senate, to be considered by the House. My advice is that the House committee has reported or will report as did the Senate committee as to the merits of the case and as to the amount to be awarded the widow and daughter of the citizen.

Mr. STEPHENS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a moment?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Certainly.

Mr. STEPHENS. I do not know whether the Senator has called attention to this fact, but it is in evidence in the case that, due to this process, the Government saved the sum of about $17,000,000. I am on the committee and I am very familiar with the case. I know the facts. I have talked with several lumber people about the matter who are very familiar with the entire transaction; and I am very sure it is a meritorious case. The entire committee favored the passage of the bill in the sum mentioned in the amendment, and I hope it will pass.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 126) for the relief of May Gordon Rodes and Sara Louise Rodes, heirs at law of Tyree Rodes, deceased.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, in line 7, to strike out "$143,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$35,750," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to May Gordon Rodes and Sara Louise Rodes, heirs at law of Tyree Rodes, deceased, the sum of $35,750, in full compensation for damages sustained by said Tyree Rodes, deceased.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2505) granting increase of pension under the general law to soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and their dependents, for disability incurred in service in line of duty, and authorizing that the records of the War and Navy Departments be accepted as to incurrence of a disability in service in line of duty, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I would like to ask the Senator from South Dakota if this is the bill we had up for consideration the other evening?

Mr. NORBECK. No; this bill has never been discussed on the floor of the Senate. It has been considered by the committee. The purpose is to change some rates that apply to those who are regular soldiers, or of the Regular Establishment, we might say. Some forty-odd years ago these rates were fixed by law. For instance, the pension of a minor child is $2 a month. If the child's father was in the Spanish War, it gets $4 a month, and if he was in the World War, it gets $6 or $8 a month. This bill changes the rate from $2 to $4 a month. It makes several changes along that line. The bill carries about $670,000 in increases.

But I want to move to strike out section 3. I would like to perfect that amendment. Then I am willing to have the bill go over if I may do that. I want to strike out section 3 because it provides that the records of the War Department and Navy Department shall be taken as to injuries and disabilities, and that really is taking it out of the Pension Bureau.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator pass it over until to-morrow? To-morrow evening I shall join with him in asking to have the bill taken up.

Mr. NORBECK. Let me have the amendment agreed to, striking out section 3, if I may, and then I am willing that that course shall be taken.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Pensions, with amendments.

Mr. NORBECK. I move that section 3 be stricken out and section 4 renumbered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. Strike out section 3, as follows:

SEC. 3. That a record of the War or Navy Departments stating that a wound or injury was incurred, or disease contracted, in line of duty shall be accepted as sufficient proof of origin in service in line of duty, provided that said disability was not the result of the person's vicious habits.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NORBECK. Then I move to add the following words to section 4: "Provided, That said disability shall not be the result of the person's vicious habits."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 3, line 13, after the word "pensions," add the words "Provided, That said disability shall not be the result of the person's vicious habits," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 4. That the increase of pension under this act to all persons whose names are now on the roll shall commence at the rates herein provided on the 4th day of the month next after the approval of this act, and any further increase of pension other than for permanent disability shall commence from the date of the official medical examination made after formal application for increase has been filed in the Bureau of Pensions: Provided, That said disability shall not be the result of the person's vicious habits.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill as amended will be passed over.

CELEBRATION OF ARMISTICE DAY

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 25) to declare the 11th day of November, celebrated and known as Armistice Day, a legal holiday was announced as next in order.

Mr. BORAH. Let that joint resolution go over.

Mr. MAYFIELD. Mr. President, was objection made to the consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 25?

Mr. KING. The joint resolution has been adversely reported.

Mr. MAYFIELD. Sometimes we consider measures which have been adversely reported.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection was made, and the joint resolution will go over.

Mr. MAYFIELD. I ask the Senator from Idaho not to object to the joint resolution, which proposes to declare the 11th day of November, celebrated and known as Armistice Day, a legal holiday. I do not think the joint resolution will bring about any discussion, and all I ask on it is merely a yea-and-nay vote. I ask the Senator to withdraw his objection and give us a vote on the joint resolution.

Mr. BORAH. The joint resolution has been reported adversely and would lead to some discussion. If proper discussion should be had on the joint resolution, I should not object to voting on it, but I shall have to object to its consideration to-night.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Being objected to, the joint resolution will go over.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 1720) extending the classified civil service to include postmasters of the third class, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 742) to provide for the establishment, operation, and maintenance of foreign-trade zones in ports of entry of the United States, to expedite and encourage foreign commerce, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. BRATTON. Let the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 6669) fixing the salary of the Public Printer and of the Deputy Public Printer was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

CROMWELL L. BARSLEY

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6152) for the relief of Cromwell L. Barsley, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment on page 2, line 2, after the word "shall," to strike out the words "be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act" and to insert "accrue or be allowed on account of the passage of this act," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, Cromwell L. Barsley, who was a member of Company D, Fifth Regiment United States Volunteers, and Thirty-fourth Regiment United States Volunteer Infantry, and Company D, Nineteenth Regiment Infantry, United States Army, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a private of Company I, Nineteenth Regiment Infantry, United States Army, on the 23d day of December, 1907: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall accrue or be allowed on account of the passage of this act.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EMPLOYEES OF PROHIBITION BUREAU

The bill (S. 1995) placing certain employees of the Bureau of Prohibition in the classified civil service, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. BRATTON. Let that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

REGULATION OF THE PRACTICE OF THE HEALING ART IN THE DISTRICT

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3936) to regulate the practice of the healing art to protect the public health in the District of Columbia.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill has heretofore been considered. The pending amendment is that proposed by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. BRUCE], which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 25, following line 11, it is proposed to insert the following:

Any person who was engaged in the practice of chiropractic in the District of Columbia on or before January 1, 1928, may deliver to the commission within 90 days after the approval of this act a written application for a license to practice chiropractic in the District of Columbia, together with satisfactory proof that the applicant is not less than 21 years of age and of good moral character, and had previously obtained a diploma from some legally incorporated school or college of chiropractic, and had been actively engaged in the practice of chiropractic for the past 10 years, or had previously obtained a diploma from some legally incorporated school or college of chiropractic recognized by the International Congress of Chiropractic Examining Boards.

When the commission is satisfied as to the qualifications of the applicant as aforesaid, it shall issue to him a license to practice chiropractic. Each license so to do shall show that it was issued on the basis of years of practice in the District of Columbia and without examination.

Also to amend by adding the word "other" at end of line 14, page 25.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, was the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. BRUCE] adopted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DILL. Then, I object to the further consideration of the bill.

Mr. COPELAND. I ask the Senator from Washington, does he object to the passage of the bill because of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. DILL. I object to the bill because of the amendment. If the amendment shall not be adopted, I will not object to the bill, but if the amendment is adopted I shall object to it.

Mr. BRUCE. We can not possibly discuss the bill to-night.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under objection the bill will go over.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 1215) for the relief of Helen F. Griffin was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that bill go over.

THOMAS J. ROFF

The bill (S. 1552) for the relief of Thomas J. Roff was announced as next in order. The bill had been reported from the Committee on Claims adversely.

Mr. KING.. I move that the bill be indefinitely postponed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the bill is indefinitely postponed.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2901) to amend the national prohibition act, as amended and supplemented, was announced as next in order.

Mr. PHIPPS. Let that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 117) authorizing an investigation and survey for a Nicaraguan canal was announced as next in order.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask that the joint resolution go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2097) to provide for the protection of municipal watersheds within the national forests was announced as next in order.

Mr. BRATTON. Let that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

RESERVE DIVISION OF THE WAR DEPARTMENT

The bill (S. 3458) to create the reserve division of the War Department, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] a question. The last time this measure came up the Senator stated that he had an amendment to propose which I understood him to say would eliminate citizens' military training camps and the Reserve Officers' Training Corps from the provisions of this bill.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, the National Guard and the Reserve Officers' Association have not yet been able to agree upon a recommendation in regard to this bill. So far as I am concerned, I stand for the bill as it came from the committee; but I am bound to say that the National Guard officers object to the bill as it stands.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. As I understand, they would not object to the bill if the amendment which the Senator from Pennsylvania said he intended to propose were adopted.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. No. Frankly, I think they would be wise to allow the bill to go through with the elimination of the Reserve Officers' Training Corps and the citizens' military training camps, but they have not been willing to do that. The committee has reported the bill in the form in which it stands, and so I am not authorized to offer those amendments.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I have been receiving a number of letters from National Guard officers protesting against the passage of the bill. Evidently there is no agreement as yet about any amendment.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. No; and none of us wish to take sides between the National Guard and the reserve officers. I am very hopeful that they will work out an agreement, but until they do so, perhaps the Senate will want to reserve its judgment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

ASSISTANTS TO DISTRICT ENGINEER COMMISSIONER

The bill (S. 1624) to authorize the payment of additional compensation to the assistants to the engineer commissioner of the District of Columbia was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Over.

Mr. PHIPPS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator to withhold his objection for a moment?

Mr. KING. Very well.

Mr. PHIPPS. I merely wish to say, for the information of the Senator who made the objection, that this would apply to two majors in the service who are assigned as assistants to the Engineer Commissioner of the District of Columbia. Those officers are exceedingly well equipped for the duties which they perform, and are practically indispensable in the matter of arranging about the paving and opening of streets and other municipal work.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. What is their present compensation?

Mr. PHIPPS. Their compensation at the present time is about $4,500.

Mr. CAPPER. It is $4,400.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. What increase is proposed?

Mr. PHIPPS. This bill proposes to increase their compensation to $6,000.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I wish to say to the Senator that I have given examination and some little thought to this bill. Of course, I appreciate the importance of the work of these officers, and it is not because of a lack of appreciation of the value of their services that I have interposed the objection; but there is a principle involved which I think should be determined before we pass any more laws which permit officers of the Army, or of the Navy, for that matter, who are receiving the compensation provided by law to be assigned to other positions and receive additional compensation. It creates feeling and friction, and recriminations result. It may be that it is wise to permit officers to be employed in other branches of the service while they are still holding their commissions in the Army and still receiving the benefits which appertain to their office and give to them additional compensation for work which they perform for the Government; but until we establish that as a policy I am opposed to the selection of a few and granting to them additional compensation. So I renew the objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

SALARIES OF DISTRICT COMMISSIONERS

The bill (S. 1625) to fix the salaries of the members of the Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I ask that that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

PRISON-MADE GOODS

Mr. HAWES. Mr. President, during my temporary absence from the Chamber, Order of Business 355, being the bill (S. 1940) to divest goods, wares, and merchandise manufactured, produced, or mined by convicts or prisoners of their interstate character in certain cases, was reached and objection was made. I should like to inquire where the objection came from.

The VICE PRESIDENT. As the Chair recalls, the Senator from Colorado [Mr. PHIPPS] made objection to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. HAWES. Mr. President, I should like to ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered at this time.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, I object. I ask that that bill go over. I am very sorry to have to make the objection, but I think there ought to be some explanation of the purposes of that bill.

Mr. HAWES. Mr. President, the best explanation I can give of the bill is that it has been very heartily approved by the Senator from Maryland. He voted for it in the committee.

Mr. BRUCE. Yes.

Mr. HAWES. He heard the full discussion and approved of the bill very heartily.

Mr. BRUCE. And the Senator from Maryland reserves the right to change his mind whenever additional arguments and facts are presented which may make him feel that he is justified in doing so. I may vote for this bill, but there are some points I desire to have cleared up about it, and until that can be done I ask that the bill go over.

Mr. PHIPPS. Mr. President, I objected to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. HAWES. I think I still have the floor; I did not lose it, I think.

Mr. BRUCE. I object to the consideration of the bill, Mr. President, and ask that it go over.

Mr. HAWES. Mr. President, I ask the courtesy of the Senator from Maryland to proceed for not more than five minutes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the Senator from Missouri proceeding for not more than five minutes?

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, I really think after the reference the Senator made to me a few moments ago that he is hardly in a position to appeal to my sense of courtesy. At the same time, I am very placable, and while I may be quick to resent injuries at times, I am also very quick to forgive them, and I will be glad, so far as I am concerned, if the Senator may have five minutes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. HAWES. Mr. President, this bill was presented to the Interstate Commerce Committee of the Senate in January. Thirty days' notice of a hearing was given; extensive hearings were held on the 7th day of February; additional hearings were held on the 17th of February, and the bill was reported to the Senate by the committee on the 28th day of February without opposition. On yesterday the House passed a similar bill by a vote of 304 to 40.

The bill is supported by the American Federation of Labor, it is supported by the independent manufacturers, and it is supported by the Federation of Woman's Clubs. It is the only bill, Mr. President, in which union labor has any interest that has a possible chance of passing Congress at this session, and I can not understand why the Senator from Maryland, who voted for the bill in the committee, should object to its consideration now.

May I ask the Senator from Colorado on what he bases his objection?

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, if I may interrupt the Senator for a moment, with his permission, in the first place, some constitutional objections to the validity of this bill have been presented to me which were not brought to my attention at that time when the bill was under consideration by the committee. As I have said, I may vote for this bill; my prepossessions have been in favor of the bill from the beginning; but I do desire an opportunity to consider not only certain constitutional objections but other objections which have been urged upon me since the bill was in the committee. Surely there is nothing very unreasonable about that. I should like to gratify the Senator, if it were not for the circumstances I have stated.

Mr. HAWES. Mr. President, will the Senator from Colorado tell me if his objections to the bill are fundamental?

Mr. PHIPPS. I should like to ask the Senator from Missouri if it is not the purpose of the bill to prevent or at least to restrict the shipment of prison-made goods from one State into another State?

Mr. HAWES. No, sir.

Mr. PHIPPS. That is my understanding of the bill.

Mr. HAWES. No, sir; the bill provides—but I am afraid I can not enter into a discussion of it now.

Mr. PHIPPS. May I ask the Senator to permit me to give the bill a little further study. I may have been misinformed or I may not have studied it as carefully as I should. If the bill shall go over, I will be glad to look into it further.

Mr. HAWES. I am sure if the Senator will look into it he will approve of it, as the Senator from Maryland approved of it in the committee.

SALARIES OF COMMISSIONERS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, when order of business 797, being Senate bill 1625, was reached, some Senator made objection. I wish he would withhold his objection for a moment. The bill relates to the salaries of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia. The bill did not originate with the commissioners; it originated with the civic and business organizations of the city, and I am sure that if Senators will give thought to the matter they will realize that it is not possible for a full-time commissioner to live decently in the city of Washington on a salary of $7,500. The purpose of this bill——

Mr. JOHNSON. May I inquire what the salary is?

Mr. COPELAND. Seven thousand five hundred dollars.

Mr. JOHNSON. Let us concern ourselves with some $1,200 people first. [Manifestations of applause in the galleries.]

The VICE PRESIDENT. The occupants of the galleries will be in order.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I am in the fullest accord with the Senator in desiring to take care of the $1,200 employees and every other underpaid employee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. FESS. When a bill is objected to, and the regular order is called for, is debate in order?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Debate is not in order, unless some Senator has the floor.

Mr. FESS. I am making the parliamentary inquiry in the interest of expedition to-night. If an objection is made, and then the regular order is called for, is debate in order?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Debate is not in order.

The Secretary will state the next bill on the calendar.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 1945) to amend the act entitled "An act to provide that the United States shall aid the States in the construction of rural post roads, and for other purposes," approved July 11, 1916, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. METCALF. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

CURE FOR CANCER

The bill (S. 3554) to authorize the Public Health Service and the National Academy of Sciences to investigate the means and methods for affording Federal aid in discovering a cure for cancer, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] has informed me that he objects to this bill. But he and I have agreed upon certain amendments which I shall at the proper time propose, and the adoption of which will in my opinion make the bill acceptable to him.

I now give notice that I shall address the Senate to-morrow as soon as I can obtain recognition on the subject: "Cancer, humanity's most deadly scourge."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 1718) to authorize the President to detail engineers of the Bureau of Public Roads of the Department of Agriculture to assist the Governments of the Latin American Republics in highway matters was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let that go over.

Mr. PHIPPS. Mr. President, this bill went over once before on an objection that was charged to me, I think by mistake. I should like to ask the Senator if he will withhold his objection for a few minutes?

Mr. McKELLAR. I think we had better legislate about American roads first. Somebody objected to the road bill, Senate bill 1945.

Mr. PHIPPS. I do not want to waste the time of the Senate, Mr. President.

MARKETING OF PERISHABLE AGRICULTURAL COMMODITIES

The bill (S. 1294) to suppress unfair and fraudulent practices in the marketing of perishable agricultural commodities in interstate and foreign commerce, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, before any Senator objects to the consideration of this bill I desire to perfect the bill by offering an amendment.

I will say, in explanation of the amendment, that there has been an effort upon the part of those interested on both sides of the controversy to agree upon amendments. I have incorporated all of those amendments in one amendment, and have offered it as a substitute for the original bill. The amendment is satisfactory to everyone, as I understand, except the author; but, as I said, being unable to secure anything more, I desire to offer this amendment for the purpose of perfecting the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment, in the nature of a substitute, will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. As a substitute amendment, the Senator from Idaho offers the following:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"(1) The term 'person' includes individuals, partnerships, corporations, and associations;

"(2) The term 'Secretary' means the Secretary of Agriculture;

"(3) The term 'interstate or foreign commerce' means commerce between any State or Territory, or the District of Columbia and any place outside thereof; or between points within the same State or Territory, or the District of Columbia but through any place outside thereof; or within any Territory or the District of Columbia;

"(4) The term 'perishable agricultural commodity' means fresh fruits and fresh vegetables of every kind and character;

"(5) The term 'commission merchant' means any person engaged in the business of receiving in interstate or foreign commerce any perishable agricultural commodity for sale, on commission, or for or on behalf of another;

"(6) The term 'dealer' means any person engaged in the business of buying or selling, other than at retail, any perishable agricultural commodity in interstate or foreign commerce: Provided, That this act shall not apply to producers selling products of their own raising in less than carload quantities, or to retailers buying in less than carload quantities, but does include producers selling and retailers buying any such commodity in such commerce in carload quantities or the equivalent thereof;

"(7) The term 'broker' means any person engaged in the business of negotiating sales and purchases of any perishable agricultural commodity in interstate or foreign commerce for or on behalf of the vendor or the purchaser, respectively.

"APPLICATION TO COOPERATIVE ASSOCIATIONS

"SEC. 2. This act shall not apply to any agricultural cooperative association in its dealings with its members.

"UNFAIR CONDUCT

"SEC. 3. It shall be unlawful—

"(1) For any commission merchant or broker to make any fraudulent charge in respect of any perishable agricultural commodity received in interstate or foreign commerce;

"(2) For any dealer to reject or fail to deliver in accordance with the terms of the contract without reasonable cause any perishable agricultural commodity bought or sold or contracted to be bought or sold in interstate or foreign commerce by such dealer;

"(3) For any commission merchant to discard, dump, or destroy without reasonable cause any perishable agricultural commodity received by such commission merchant in interstate or foreign commerce;

"(4) For any commission merchant, dealer, or broker to make, for a fraudulent purpose, any false or misleading statement concerning the condition, quality, quantity, or disposition of, or the condition of the market for, any perishable agricultural commodity which is received in interstate or foreign commerce by such commission merchant, or bought or sold or contracted to be bought or sold in such commerce by such dealer; or the purchase or sale of which in such commerce is negotiated by such broker; or to fail or refuse truly and correctly to account promptly in respect of any such transaction in any such commodity to the person with whom such transaction is had.

"LICENSES

"SEC. 4. (a) After the expiration of six months after the approval of this act no person shall at any time carry on the business of a commission merchant, dealer, or broker without a license valid and effective at such time. Any person who violates any provision of this subdivision shall be liable to a penalty of not more than $500 for each such offense and not more than $25 for each day it continues, which shall accrue to the United States and may be recovered in a civil suit brought by the United States.

"(b) Any person desiring any such license shall make application to the Secretary. The Secretary may by regulation prescribe the information to be contained in such application. Upon the filing of the application, and annually thereafter, the applicant shall pay a fee of $10.

"SEC. 5. (a) Whenever an applicant has paid the prescribed fee the Secretary, except as provided in subdivision (b) of this section, shall issue to such applicant a license, which shall entitle the licensee to do business as a commission merchant and/or dealer and/or broker unless and until it is suspended or revoked by the Secretary in accordance with the provisions of this act, but said license shall automatically terminate unless the annual fee is paid within 30 days after notice has been mailed that payment is due.

"(b) The Secretary may refuse to issue a license to an applicant if after notice and hearing he is of the opinion (1) that the applicant has previously been responsible in whole or in part for any violation of the provisions of section 3 for which a license of the applicant, or the license of any partnership, association, or corporation in which the applicant held any office or had any share or interest, was revoked, or (2) in case the applicant is a partnership, association, or corporation, that any individual holding any office or having any substantial interest or share in the applicant has previously been responsible in whole or in part for any violation of the provisions of section 3 for which the license of such individual, or of any partnership, association, or corporation in which such person held any office, or had any share or interest, was revoked.

"(c) The Secretary shall require that each licensee display on his stationery his license number.

"LIABILITY TO PERSON DAMAGED

"SEC. 6. (a) If any commission merchant, dealer, or broker violates any provision of section 3 he shall be liable to the person or persons injured thereby for the full amount of damages sustained in consequence of such violation.

"(b) Such liability may be enforced either (1) by complaint to the Secretary as hereinafter provided, or (2) by suit in any district court of the United States of competent jurisdiction; but this section shall not in any way abridge or alter the remedies now existing at common law or by statute, and the provisions of this act are in addition to such remedies.

"COMPLAINT AND INVESTIGATION

"SEC. 7. (a) Any person complaining of any violation of any provision of section 3 by any commission merchant, dealer, or broker may, at any time within nine months after the cause of action accrues, apply to the Secretary by petition, which shall briefly state the facts, whereupon, if, in the opinion of the Secretary, the facts therein contained warrant such action, a copy of the complaint thus made shall be forwarded by the Secretary to the commission merchant, dealer, or broker, who shall be called upon to satisfy the complaint, or to answer it in writing, within a reasonable time to be prescribed by the Secretary.

"(b) Any officer or agency of any State or Territory, having jurisdiction over commission merchants, dealers, or brokers in such State or Territory, and any employee of the United States Department of Agriculture or any interested person, may file, in accordance with rules and regulations of the Secretary, a complaint of any violation of any provision of section 3 by any commission merchant, dealer, or broker, and may request an investigation of such complaint by the Secretary.

"(c) If there appears to be, in the opinion of the Secretary, any reasonable grounds for investigating any complaint made under this section, the Secretary shall investigate such complaint; and may, if in his opinion the facts warrant such action, have said complaint served by registered mail or otherwise on the person concerned and afford such person an opportunity for a hearing thereon.

"(d) After an opportunity for a hearing on a complaint, the Secretary shall determine whether or not the commission merchant, dealer, or broker has violated any provision of section 3.

"SUSPENSION AND REVOCATION OF LICENSE

"SEC. 8. Whenever the Secretary determines, as provided in section 7, that any commission merchant, dealer, or broker has violated any of the provisions of section 3—

"(1) If such violation is the first violation the Secretary shall reprimand the offender and may also publish the facts and circumstances of such violation and/or suspend the license of the offender for a period not to exceed 10 days; or

"(2) If such violation is not the first violation, the Secretary may publish the facts and circumstances of such violation and/or suspend the license of such offender for a period not to exceed 90 days, except that if the violation is a flagrant and repeated violation of such provisions, the Secretary may revoke the license of the offender.

"ACCOUNTS AND RECORDS

"SEC. 9. Every commission merchant, dealer, and broker shall keep such accounts, records, and memoranda as fully and correctly disclose all transactions involved in his business, including the true ownership of such business by stockholding or otherwise; and if such accounts, records, and memoranda are not so kept after the time prescribed by the Secretary, the person concerned shall be liable for a penalty of $500, which shall be recovered by civil action in the name of the United States in the circuit or district court holden within the district where the violation may have been committed or the person resides or carries on business.

"EFFECTIVE DATE AND FINALITY OF ORDER

"SEC. 10. (a) Any order of the Secretary under this act other than an order for the payment of money shall take effect within such reasonable time, not less than 10 days, as is prescribed in the order, and shall continue in force until his further order, or for a specified period of time, accordingly as it is prescribed in the order, unless such order is suspended, modified, or set aside by the Secretary or is suspended or set aside by a court of competent jurisdiction. Any such order, of the Secretary, if regularly made, shall be final unless before the date prescribed for its taking effect application is made to a court of competent jurisdiction by the commission merchant, dealer, or broker against whom such order is directed to have such order set aside or its enforcement, operation, or execution suspended or restrained.

"(b) If any commission merchant, dealer, or broker does not comply with an order for the payment of money within the time limit in such order, the complainant, or any person for whose benefit such order was made, may within one year of the date of the order file in the district court of the United States for the district in which he resides or in which is located the principal place of business of the commission merchant, dealer, or broker, or in any State court having general jurisdiction of the parties, a petition setting forth briefly the causes for which he claims damages and the order of the Secretary in the premises. Such suit in the district court shall proceed in all respects like other civil suits for damages except that the findings and orders of the Secretary shall be prima facie evidence of the facts therein stated, and the petitioner shall not be liable for costs in the district court nor for costs at any subsequent state of the proceedings unless they accrue upon his appeal. If the petitioner finally prevails, he shall be allowed a reasonable attorney's fee, to be taxed and collected as a part of the costs of the suit.

"INJUNCTIONS

"SEC. 11. For the purposes of this act the provisions of all laws relating to the suspending or restraining of the enforcement, operation, or execution, or the setting aside in whole or in part of the orders of the Interstate Commerce Commission are made applicable to orders of the Secretary under this act and to any person subject to the provisions of this act.

"GENERAL PROVISIONS

"SEC. 12. The Secretary may report any violation of this act for which a civil or criminal forfeiture or penalty is provided to the Attorney General of the United States, who shall cause appropriate proceedings to be commenced and prosecuted in the proper courts of the United States without delay. The costs and expenses of such proceedings shall be paid out of the appropriation for the expenses of the courts of the United States.

"SEC. 13. For the efficient execution of the provisions of this act, the provisions (including penalties) of section 9 of the act entitled 'An act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes,' approved September 26, 1914, are made applicable to the jurisdiction, powers, and duties of the Secretary in enforcing the provisions of this act and to any person subject to the provisions of this act, whether or not a corporation. The Secretary, in person or by such agents as he may designate, may prosecute any inquiry or investigation necessary to his duties under this act in any part of the United States.

"SEC. 14. The Secretary may make such rules, regulations, and orders, including reparation in appropriate cases as may be necessary, and may cooperate with any department or agency of the Government, any State, Territory, District, or possession, or department, agency, or political subdivision thereof, or any person; and shall have the power to appoint, remove, and fix the compensation of such officers and employees not in conflict with existing law, and make such expenditures for rent outside the District of Columbia, printing, binding, telegrams, telephones, law books, books of reference, publications, furniture, stationery, office equipment, travel, and other supplies and expenses as shall be necessary to the administration of this act in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, and as may be appropriated for by Congress; and there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sums as may be necessary for such purpose. This act shall not abrogate nor nullify any other statute, whether State or Federal, dealing with the same subjects as this act; but it is intended that all such statutes shall remain in full force and effect except in so far only as they are inconsistent herewith or repugnant hereto.

"SEC. 15. In construing and enforcing the provisions of this act the act, omission, or failure of any agent, officer, or other person acting for or employed by any commission merchant, dealer, or broker, within the scope of his employment or office, shall in every case be deemed the act, omission, or failure of such commission merchant, dealer, or broker as that of such agent, officer, or other person.

"SHORT TITLE

"SEC. 16. This act may be cited as the 'Fresh fruit and vegetable licensing act.'"

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I object to this bill. It is a very important one. I shall be glad to take it up a little later.

Mr. BORAH. I am not asking to take up the bill to-night. I am simply asking that the substitute be accepted, and then that the bill may go over.

Mr. KING. I have no objection to that.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I have no objection to the adoption of the substitute, in order that it may be printed; but, as the Senator from Idaho knows, I have some objections to certain provisions of the bill. I understand that the Senator from Utah has objected to the consideration of the bill anyhow.

Mr. BORAH. I did not understand that the Senator from Utah had objected to acting upon the amendment.

Mr. KING. No.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Senator now offers the amendment in the nature of a substitute, and then the matter will go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment in the nature of a substitute, will be agreed to; and the bill will be passed over.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 1762) granting consent to the city and county of San Francisco, State of California, its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Bay of San Francisco from Rincon Hill to a point near the South Mole of San Antonio Estuary, in the county of Alameda, in said State, was announced as next in order.

Mr. METCALF. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 391) to regulate the use of the Capitol Building and Grounds was announced as next in order.

Mr. BLAINE. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2475) to create a prosperity reserve and to stabilize industry and employment by the expansion of public works during periods of unemployment and industrial depression, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 11074) to promote the agriculture of the United States by expanding in the foreign field the service now rendered by the United States Department of Agriculture in acquiring and diffusing useful information regarding agriculture, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

EMPLOYMENT OF MINORS WITHIN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The bill (H. R. 6685) to regulate the employment of minors within the District of Columbia, was announced as next in order.

Mr. BRATTON. Let that go over.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, did some one object to the consideration of this bill?

Mr. BRATTON. The Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] was unavoidably detained from the Chamber to-night, and requested me to object on his behalf.

Mr. COPELAND. To House bill 6685?

Mr. BRATTON. Yes. The objection that I made was on his behalf solely.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I understand that objection has been raised to the consideration of House bill 6685.

Mr. BRATTON. Yes; an objection was made at the request of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD], who is unavoidably detained from the Chamber. It was made solely on his behalf. Personally, I have no objection to the bill.

Mr. CAPPER. I have been trying for more than a month to get action on this bill. There is a unanimous demand for it from the District of Columbia. The labor organizations, the citizens' associations, the civic associations are all asking for the passage of this bill. We have had no legislation on child labor in the District of Columbia for over 20 years.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CAPPER. Yes.

Mr. COPELAND. I may say to the Senator that I have every reason to believe that to-morrow night we can pass this bill. The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BRATTON] is under obligation to interpose the objection because the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] is absent; but I have talked with the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] and with others who have been in opposition to the bill, and I have every reason to believe that if the Senator will let it go over until to-morrow night we can pass the bill at that time.

Mr. CAPPER. With that understanding, I will not press the matter to-night.

REARRANGEMENT, ETC., OF SENATE WING OF THE CAPITOL

The bill (S. 814) to rearrange and reconstruct the Senate wing of the Capitol was announced as next in order.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I ask that this bill be indefinitely postponed. I am happy to say that provision has been made for rearranging and reconstructing the Chamber, so that this bill is no longer necessary.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the bill will be indefinitely postponed.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 3089) to increase the efficiency of the Military Establishment, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I ask that that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2274) for the relief of William H. Chambliss was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have asked the State Department and also the Shipping Board for certain information with regard to this bill. As soon as that is obtained I shall not interpose an objection to its consideration; but for the present I do object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 4174) to establish a woman's bureau in the Metropolitan police department of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1749) providing for the development of hydroelectric energy at Great Falls for the benefit of the United States Government and the District of Columbia was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over. I do not mean by that that I have any objection; but there are some amendments, and the measure is one of considerable importance, and could not be discussed under the five-minute rule.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

EDWARD A. BLAIR

The bill (S. 1633) for the relief of Edward A. Blair was considered as in Committe of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President is authorized to appoint Edward A. Blair a second lieutenant of the United States Marine Corps and to retire him and place him upon the retired list of the Marine Corps with the retired pay and emoluments of that grade.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 3874) authorizing appropriations of funds for construction of a highway from Red Lodge, Mont., to the boundary of the Yellowstone National Park near Cooke City, Mont., was announced as next in order.

Mr. PHIPPS. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

CONSTRUCTION AT MILITARY POSTS

The bill (H. R. 11134) to authorize appropriations for construction at military posts, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, before objection is made to the consideration of this bill, I should like to explain that it is the necessary usual authorization which must be made in order that next year's Budget shall take account of the proper housing of the enlisted and noncommissioned personnel of the Army, and take account of the increase in the Air Corps which the Congress has already authorized. Every item in the bill, as reported by the committee, meets with the approval of the Budget. Most of the items have to be met out of sales of surplus real estate of the War Department.

There is nothing unusual in the bill excepting the action of our committee in striking out the authorization for Scott Field, Ill., which would authorize the Army to continue in the lighter-than-air experimentation. The committee is not in favor of that expenditure, and therefore amended the House bill so as to strike that out. In every other respect the bill meets with the approval of the department and of the Budget.

Mr. PHIPPS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator if that amendment and the amendment on the bottom of page 3 have been adopted?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I do not believe that any amendments have been adopted.

Mr. PHIPPS. I would suggest the adoption of the amendments. The Senator need not anticipate objection to the bill.

Mr. DENEEN. Mr. President, I object.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I hope the Senator from Illinois will not object.

Mr. DENEEN. There is a difference of opinion about Scott Field. We would like to have that matter further considered.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. We can discuss that by itself; but if the Senator objects to the consideration of this bill it means that all progress in housing of the Army has to go over for another year.

Mr. DENEEN. We will be able to take it up to-morrow night and discuss it more in detail at that time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection being made, the bill will be passed over.

Mr. FLETCHER. One minute, please. The Senator realizes that if the committee amendment eliminating Scott Field is adopted the matter will go to conference, and there is a chance to have it adjusted there.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I call for the regular order.

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not think the Senator will get the bill passed with Scott Field in it. It will go to conference, if the amendment is adopted, with the effect that I have stated. It is a very important bill, and we ought to act on it. It is a matter that covers the entire country.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask for the regular order.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, will the Senator bear with us for a minute? I simply want to carry on what the Senator from Florida started to say. If the bill is passed in the form in which it is reported out, the amendment——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Has not an objection been interposed to the consideration of this bill?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It has. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, speaking on the next bill, I want to say that no greater injury can be done to the Army of the United States than to prevent the authorization of these new buildings, nor can any greater injury be done to American labor than to prevent their opportunity for carrying these contracts into effect.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I call for the regular order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 4179) to amend the corrupt practices act by extending the same to candidates for nomination and election to the offices of Representative and Senator in the Congress of the United States, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. ODDIE. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. COPELAND subsequently said: Mr. President, what became of Senate bill 4179, to amend the corrupt practices act?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It was objected to.

Mr. COPELAND. I hope the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] will follow up that matter, so that we can have a vote on it.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, was there an objection to Senate bill 4179?

The VICE PRESIDENT. There was.

Mr. McKELLAR. Who objected to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. ODDIE. I objected. I desire an opportunity to study the bill further.

The bill (S. 2069) to extend the provisions of section 1814 of the Revised Statutes to the Territories of Hawaii and Alaska was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 3770) authorizing the Federal Power Commission to issue permits and licenses on Fort Apache and White Mountain Indian Reservations, Ariz., was announced as next in order.

Mr. PHIPPS. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2330) authorizing reconstruction and improvement of a public road in Wind River Indian Reservation, Wyo., was announced as next in order.

Mr. WHEELER. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

MICHEAL ILITZ

The bill (H. R. 6908) for the relief of Micheal Ilitz was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment reported by the Committee on Military Affairs has heretofore been agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

HARLIE O. HACKER

The bill (S. 3690) to correct the military record of Harlie O. Hacker was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I have the attention of the Senator from Wisconsin? Is this a case of a person seeking to have a charge of desertion removed in order that he may obtain a pension?

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I will say that the records of the War Department show, I think conclusively, that the person seeking the relief was at the time he was charged with desertion mentally incapable of exercising any choice. In other words, the department reports that he was a constitutional psychopath, an inadequate personality, and that condition arose in the line of duty. Therefore his desertion was such as not to be held against him.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments, on page 1, line 5, to strike out "Harley" and insert "Harlie"; on line 6, to strike out "Infantry" and insert "Tank Battalion"; and on line 9, to strike out "company" and insert "battalion," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, Harlie O. Hacker, late of Company B, Sixteenth Tank Battalion, United States Army, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been discharged honorably from the military service of the United States as a member of said battalion and regiment on the 7th day of May, 1923: Provided, That no bounty, pay, or allowance shall accrue by virtue of the passage of this act.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of Harlie O. Hacker."

TAX REDUCTION

The bill (H. R. 1) to reduce and equalize taxation, provide revenue, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

PAY OF OFFICERS IN THE REGULAR ARMY

The bill (S. 3569) to equalize the pay of certain classes of officers of the Regular Army was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I would like to have the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD], who reported this bill, make an explanation of it.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, the Army base pay bill of 1922 established the principle of one increase in pay for every officer after a certain period of service following appointment or promotion in rank. The theory of the bill was that on account of the long periods elapsing for most officers between promotions in rank, principally majors and captains, an increase in pay would form the only recognition which could be expected by many officers for long and faithful service.

By an oversight the bill failed to give certain emergency World War officers who had come into the Army under the act of 1920 the benefit of these periodical increases when they do not receive a promotion in rank. Under the law of 1920 these officers had to be over 48 years old to be colonels, over 45 to be lieutenant colonels, over 36 to be majors. The average age of those officers appointed majors was about 43 years, while hundreds of officers already in the Army became majors at 26, 27, 28, and 29 years of age; 1,200 under 36 years. Their omission, however, from the privilege of period increase in pay, added to the fact that on account of age they can never expect promotion, makes their present condition hopeless. About 1,200 officers are in this situation.

About 1,200 officers would be affected by this measure. The bill simply gives them the period increase which the pay bill of 1922 intended that they should have.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I yield.

Mr. KING. I notice in the report, on page 6, the recommendation is adverse from Mr. Dwight F. Davis, Secretary of War.

Mr. SHEPPARD. He adds, however, that unless strong reasons are given to the contrary, he will oppose it. He is not unqualifiedly opposed to the bill.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. And the Senator is giving the strong reasons.

Mr. KING. He states:

I do not favor the enactment of Senate bill 3569 for the following reasons.

Then he assigns a number of reasons.

Mr. SHEPPARD. But he goes ahead and states that unless strong reasons are given to the contrary he will oppose the bill.

Mr. METCALF. Mr. President, the Senator from Connecticut, who is absent, asked me to present an amendment to this bill; but I am not familiar enough with it, so I will ask that the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 8988) for the relief of Milton Longsdorf was announced as next in order.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 3241) for the relief of Seymour Buckley was announced as next in order.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

SATURDAY HALF HOLIDAYS FOR GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE

The bill (S. 2440) to provide that four hours shall constitute a day's work on Saturdays throughout the year for all employees in the Government Printing Office was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That four hours shall constitute a day's work on Saturday throughout the year for all employees under the supervision of the Public Printer, and that when the needs of the service require work in excess of four hours all per hour employees shall be granted compensatory wages and all other employees compensatory time.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TEACHERS' SALARIES

The bill (S. 4063) to amend certain sections of the teachers' salary act, approved June 4, 1924, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following quoted provisions of Article I covering salary class 2, teachers in junior high schools, are hereby repealed.

"CLASS 2.—TEACHERS IN JUNIOR HIGH SCHOOLS

"A teacher in the junior high schools who possesses the eligibility requirements of teachers in the elementary schools and who in addition has met the higher eligibility requirements established by the Board of Education for teachers in junior high schools shall be paid in accordance with the following schedules:

"A teacher in the junior high school who possesses the eligibility requirements of teachers in the senior high and normal schools shall be paid in accordance with the following schedules," so that the salary schedule as amended shall read as follows:

"CLASS 2.—TEACHERS IN JUNIOR HIGH SCHOOLS

"Group A.—A basic salary of $1,600 per year, with an annual increase in salary of $100 for eight years, or until a maximum salary of $2,400 per year is reached.

"Group B.—A basic salary of $2,500 per year, with an annual increase in salary of $100 for three years, or until a maximum salary of $2,800 per year is reached.

"Group C.—A basic salary of $1,800 per year, with an annual increase in salary of $100 for 10 years, or until a maximum salary of $2,800 per year is reached.

"Group D.—A basic salary of $2,900 per year, with an annual increase in salary of $100 for three years, or until a maximum salary of $3,200 per year is reached."

SEC. 2. That the Board of Education is hereby authorized to establish the eligibility requirements and prescribe such methods of appointment or promotion for teachers in the junior high schools as it may deem proper, subject to provisions of law covering such matters now in effect or which may hereafter be enacted.

SEC. 3. That the following provision of section 9 of Article V of the act of June 4, 1924, "Provided further, That no person who has not received for at least one year the maximum salary of Group A in any class, or Group C of class 2 shall be eligible for promotion to Group B of any class or Group D of class 2," shall not apply during the fiscal year 1928 to the teachers affected by the provisions of paragraph (d) of section 6 of the same act.

SEC. 4. Amend paragraph (q) of section 6 of Article IV by adding the following:

"Provided further, That in the case of trade teachers in regularly organized trade schools the Board of Education is authorized to credit approved experience in the trades in the same manner and to the same extent as though it were experience in teaching."

SEC. 5. That this act shall take effect on its passage.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I would like to ask the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia what change is made in existing law? The Senator knows we gave a great deal of attention to the existing law, and provided salaries which were, I think, very generous, in the main.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, the bill does not make any increases in salaries. It was submitted to the Director of the Budget, and he reports that it is in line with the President's program. The bill corrects certain administrative defects and will insure a more efficient administration of the laws of the District as they apply to the teaching force.

Mr. KING. May I say to the Senator that he knows that some members of the committee have been receiving many complaints about the public schools, and if this will increase the efficiency, I am sure it ought to receive our approval.

Mr. CAPPER. I do not doubt for a moment but that it will work to the benefit of the schools.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CONTRACTORS UNDER THE TREASURY DEPARTMENT

The bill (H. R. 11951) to amend the act entitled "An act for the relief of contractors and subcontractors for the post offices and other buildings and work under the supervision of the Treasury Department, and for other purposes," approved August 25, 1919, as amended by the acts of March 6, 1920, and February 27, 1926, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I ask for an explanation of the bill.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Let it go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE ON THE SAFETY OF LIFE AT SEA

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 131) providing for the participation by the United States in the International Conference for the revision of the convention of 1914 for the safety of life at sea, was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the sum of $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby authorized to be appropriated for the expenses of participation by the United States in the international conference for the revision of the convention of 1914 for the safety of life at sea, to be held in London, England, in 1929, including travel and subsistence or per diem in lieu of subsistence (notwithstanding the provisions of any other act), compensation of employees, stenographic and other services by contract if deemed necessary, rent of offices, purchase of necessary books and documents, printing and binding, printing of official visiting cards, and such other expenses as may be authorized by the Secretary of State.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MEETING OF PRESIDENTIAL ELECTORS

The bill (H. R. 7373) providing for the meeting of electors of President and Vice President and for the issuance and transmission of the certificates of their selection and of the result of their determination, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Privileges and Elections with amendments, on page 1, at the end of line 4 and at the beginning of line 5, strike out the words "second Monday in December" and insert in lieu thereof the words "first Wednesday in January"; in line 14, on page 4, strike out the words "fourth Monday in December of the year in which," and insert in lieu thereof the words "third Wednesday in the month of January after"; and, in line 25 of said page, strike out the word "Monday" and insert in lieu thereof the word "Wednesday," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the electors of President and Vice President of each State shall meet and give their votes on the first Wednesday in January next following their appointment at such place in each State as the legislature of such State shall direct.

SEC. 2. That it shall be the duty of the executives of each State, as soon as practicable after the conclusion of the appointment of the electors in such State by the final ascertainment, under and in pursuance of the laws of such State providing for such ascertainment, to communicate by registered mail under the seal of the State to the Secretary of State of the United States a certificate of such ascertainment of the electors appointed, setting forth the names of such electors and the canvass or other ascertainment under the laws of such State of the number of votes given or cast for each person for whose appointment any and all votes have been given or cast; and it shall also thereupon be the duty of the executive of each State to deliver to the electors of such State, on or before the day on which they are required by section 1 of this act to meet, six duplicates original of the same certificates under the seal of the State; and if there shall have been any final determination in a State in the manner provided for by law of a controversy or contest concerning the appointment of all or any of the electors of such State, it shall be the duty of the executive of such State, as soon as practicable after such determination, to communicate under the seal of the State to the Secretary of State of the United States a certificate of such determination in form and manner as the same shall have been made; and the certificate or certificates so received by the Secretary of State shall be preserved by him for one year and shall be a part of the public records of his office and shall be open to public inspection; and the Secretary of State of the United States at the first meeting of Congress thereafter shall transmit to the two Houses of Congress copies in full of each and every such certificate so received at the State Department.

SEC. 3. That the electors shall make and sign six certificates of all the votes given by them, each of which certificates shall contain two distinct lists, one of the votes for President and the other of the votes for Vice President, and shall annex to each of the certificates one of the lists of the electors which shall have been furnished to them by direction of the executive of the State.

SEC. 4. That the electors shall dispose of the certificates so made by them and the lists attached thereto in the following manner:

First. They shall forthwith forward by registered mail one of the same to the President of the Senate at the seat of government.

Second. Two of the same shall be delivered to the secretary of state of the State, one of which shall be held subject to the order of the President of the Senate, the other to be preserved by him for one year and shall be a part of the public records of his office and shall be open to public inspection.

Third. On the day thereafter they shall forward by registered mail two of such certificates and lists to the Secretary of State at the seat of government, one of which shall be held subject to the order of the President of the Senate. The other shall be preserved by the Secretary of State for one year and shall be a part of the public records of his office and shall be open to public inspection.

Fourth. They shall forthwith cause the other of the certificate and lists to be delivered to the judge of the district in which the electors shall have assembled.

SEC. 5. That when no certificate of vote and list mentioned in this act from any State shall have been received by the President of the Senate or by the Secretary of State by the third Wednesday in the month of January after the meeting of the electors shall have been held, the President of the Senate or, if he be absent from the seat of government, the Secretary of State shall request, by the most expeditious method available, the secretary of state of the State to send up the certificate and list lodged with him by the electors of such State; and it shall be his duty upon receipt of such request immediately to transmit same by registered mail to the President of the Senate at the seat of government.

SEC. 6. That when no certificates of votes from any State shall have been received at the seat of government on the fourth Wednesday of the month of January, after the meeting of the electors shall have been held, the President of the Senate or, if he be absent from the seat of government, the Secretary of State shall send a special messenger to the district judge in whose custody one certificate of votes from that State has been lodged, and such judge shall forthwith transmit that list by the hand of such messenger to the seat of government.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I think there should be an explanation made of the provisions of this bill. It appears to be rather an important measure.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, if the Senator from Arkansas will yield I will explain briefly what the bill does.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I yield.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BRATTON. I yield.

Mr. FESS. When this matter was up at the last call of the calendar I objected to its consideration. I have examined the bill since, and I withdraw my objection.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, the bill does this, briefly: It dispenses with the necessity of presidential electors coming to the Capital in person to bring the returns. It provides for the creation of six certificates. Two of them are to be filed with the secretary of state of the State. One is to be filed with the United States district judge of the district in which the capital of the State is located. Two of them are to come to the Secretary of State here at Washington. That accounts for five copies.

The sixth copy goes by mail to the President of the Senate. The provision is that if the certificate mailed to the President of the Senate fails to arrive it is his duty to call upon the Secretary of State here for a duplicate. If that duplicate is not available, it is the duty of the President of the Senate to send to the secretary of state of the State for the duplicate copy. If that is not available, he sends a messenger to the United States judge to bring the certificate in his possession here in person. It is in the interest of economy and is perfectly safe as an administrative measure. I think there can be no objection to the bill.

Mr. PHIPPS. Has it the support of the committee?

Mr. BRATTON. It has; of the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. What is the approximate cost incurred because of the electoral messengers?

Mr. BRATTON. That I can not state to the Senator. Whatever it is is dispensed with through this measure. It is in the interest of economy, and is perfectly safe so far as its administration is concerned. I can conceive of no valid objection to the bill.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Very well.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

NAVAL CONSTRUCTION

The bill (H. R. 11526) to authorize the construction of certain naval vessels, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

REVISION OF PENAL LAWS

The bill (S. 3127) to amend section 217 as amended of the act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States," approved March 4, 1909, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I would like to ask if the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads made a unanimous report on this bill.

Mr. PHIPPS. I can only say that I was present at the meeting of the committee. We had a quorum, and there was no objection to the bill. It was thought to be a proper measure. I do not know that all of the members of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads were favorable to it.

Mr. FLETCHER. What does it accomplish?

Mr. PHIPPS. It is another measure to prevent shipment through the mails of poisonous compounds, animals, insects, reptiles, and articles that would injure the mails or other property, whether sent as first-class matter or not.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I will state to the Senator from Utah that when this bill was reached on the last call of the calendar I took occasion to object to its consideration. In the meantime I have made very close investigation, and I find that the only new matter legislated upon is contained in lines 9 to 14, page 2, reading as follows:

but the Postmaster General may permit the transmission in the mails, under such rules and regulations as he shall prescribe as to preparation and packing, of any articles hereinbefore described which are not outwardly or of their own force dangerous or injurious to life, health, or property.

There is nothing stricken from the law. That language is added to the law.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. What are the circumstances which prompt the modification of the present law?

Mr. BLAINE. I am not a member of the committee; I was just explaining the investigation I made. I therefore have no further objection.

The proposition is to permit the transmission by mail, for instance, of insecticides, fungicides, and other poisons used by wheat growers and cotton growers and potato producers and all those who produce grain and crops that are constantly infected with pests that can be destroyed by the use of poison. That is the main purpose. And under certain rules and regulations issued by the Post Office Department those articles, which are not outwardly or of their own force dangerous or injurious to life, health, or property, may be transmitted through the mails.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. It appears that the Postmaster General recommended this amendment of the law in his annual report.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. May I say to the Senator that I think all the parties interested in this measure went over it very carefully, and the language which is now incorporated in the bill, I think, meets all objections which were raised; and I believe that the report of the committee is unanimous.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I have no objection to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. KING. I have no objection. However, I want to invite the attention of the Senator from Wisconsin to the last two lines on page 3. It does seem to me that the penalty is too severe for merely defacing or injuring some mail matter. The penalty of 20 years or $10,000 fine as a maximum would not be too much for an attempt to kill, but merely for defacing an envelope it does seem to me that penalty is too great. But if the existing law carries the same penalty I shall not insist upon its being amended. Otherwise, I should.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It is my information that this is merely a reenactment of the existing law so far as the penalty provisions are concerned.

Mr. KING. Let me say to the Senator that that shows the unwisdom of making a sort of a shotgun, omnium gatherum provision, as they have here. An attempt to kill is put in the same category with merely defacing the mails, and the same penalty is applied, 20 years in the penitentiary or a fine of $10,000. It is a very unwise provision.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2751) to amend section 213, act of March 4, 1909 (Criminal Code, title 18, sec. 330, U. S. C.), affixing penalties for use of mails in connection with fraudulent devices and lottery paraphernalia, was announced as next in order.

Mr. FESS. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 3902) to provide books and educational supplies free of charge to pupils of the public schools of the District of Columbia was announced as next in order.

Mr. PHIPPS. Let that go over.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, was there objection to the consideration of the bill?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. PHIPPS] objected, and the bill will be passed over.

PAY AND ALLOWANCES OF ENLISTED PERSONNEL

The bill (S. 3692) to amend the act entitled "An act to readjust the pay and allowances of the commissioned and enlisted personnel of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, Coast and Geodetic Survey, and Public Health Service," approved June 10, 1922, as amended, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, I ask that the bill may be passed over temporarily. I make that request on behalf of the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], who perhaps may wish to offer an amendment. He is not opposed to the measure as drawn, but wishes to add to it by way of amendment, and I ask that it may go over, to be taken up this evening upon his return.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

TRANSCONTINENTAL POST ROAD

The bill (S. 1900) to provide for the construction of a post road and military highway from a point on or near the Atlantic coast to a point on or near the Pacific coast, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I objected to the consideration of this bill the other evening. I stated that some amendments had been suggested. I have not had time to prepare them. I invite the attention of the Senate to the importance and magnitude of the bill. I am willing that we shall take it up and have it read section by section and vote upon it.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 3890) to amend section 5 of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes," was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

BILL INDEFINITELY POSTPONED

The bill (S. 3210) providing for the men who served with the American Expeditionary Forces in Europe as engineer field clerks the status of Army field clerk and field clerk, Quartermaster Corps, of the United States Army, when honorably discharged, was announced as next in order, and that it had been reported adversely from the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I move that the bill be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. HEFLIN. Who is the author of the bill?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maryland [Mr. BRUCE].

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was indefinitely postponed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 4652) for the relief of Charlie R. Pate was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

GRANT OF LAND AT HOT SPRINGS, N. MEX.

The bill (S. 2572) granting certain land in the town of Hot Springs, N. Mex., to the State of New Mexico, was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the portion of block 95 marked "Reserve" on the plat of the town site of Hot Springs, N. Mex., be, and is hereby, granted to the State of New Mexico: Provided, That if the Secretary of the Interior shall at any time find that the said tract, for the term of one year, has been used for other purposes than those connected with the maintenance of bathhouses, hotels, or other improvements for the accommodation of the public the grant hereby made shall be void and of no effect, and the Secretary of the Interior may thereafter dispose of said "Reserve" in accordance with existing law.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 3136) creating the Roswell land district, establishing a land office at Roswell, N. Mex., and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. PHIPPS. Over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 717) to provide for the deportation of certain alien seamen, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. METCALF. Over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 584) for the relief of Frederick D. Swank was announced as next in order.

Mr. HOWELL. Over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 5894) for the relief of the State Bank & Trust Co. of Fayetteville, Tenn., was announced as next in order.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

CONSTANCE D. LATHROP

The bill (H. R. 6195) granting six months' pay to Constance D. Lathrop was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Constance D. Lathrop, widow of the late Commander Patrick Theodore Moore Lathrop, United States Navy, is hereby allowed an amount equal to six months' pay at the rate said Patrick Theodore Moore Lathrop was receiving at the date of his death.

SEC. 2. That the payment of the amount of money hereby allowed and authorized to be paid to said Constance D. Lathrop is authorized to be made from the appropriations for beneficiaries of officers who die while in the active service of the United States Navy.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ESTATE OF FRANK E. RIDGELY

The bill (H. R. 7142) for the relief of Frank E. Ridgely, deceased, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the late Commander Frank E. Ridgely, United States Navy, who was retired May 24, 1925, by reason of physical disability which originated in the line of duty between April 6, 1917, and March 3, 1921, while holding the higher temporary rank of captain, United States Navy, shall be regarded as having been retired in such higher rank as authorized by section 25 of the act approved March 4, 1925 (43 Stat. L. 1278), for officers retired prior to March 4, 1925: Provided, That this act shall not entitle any person to additional pay, allowances, gratuity, or pension.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

QUARTERS FOR CHIEF OF NAVAL OPERATIONS

The bill (S. 4402) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to assign to the Chief of Naval Operations the public quarters originally constructed for the Superintendent of the Naval Observatory in the District of Columbia was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy, in his discretion, is hereby authorized to assign to the Chief of Naval Operations the public quarters constructed under the authority of a provision contained in the act of March 2, 1891 (28 Stat. L. 806), for the official residence of the Superintendent of the Naval Observatory in the District of Columbia.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARGARET W. PEARSON AND JOHN R. PEARSON

The bill (S. 1618) for the relief of Margaret W. Pearson and John R. Pearson, her husband, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The bill had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Court of Claims of the United States be, and hereby is, given jurisdiction to hear and determine the claim of Margaret W. Pearson and John R. Pearson, her husband, of Jacksonville, Fla., and to render judgment against the United States for compensation for the use, occupancy, and possession of a tract of land belonging to the said Margaret W. Pearson and John R. Pearson, her husband, situated in Duval County, Fla., during the period from December 10, 1920, to November 5, 1921; and for waste or damage to the inheritance, if any, attributable to the United States while in possession of said land.

SEC. 2. Said claim shall not be considered as barred because of any existing statute of limitations with respect to suits against the United States; nor because of any tort committed by any agent of the United States resulting in damage or waste to the inheritance; nor because of noncompliance with section 3744, Revised Statutes.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator from Alabama why the statute of limitations is removed?

Mr. BLACK. For the reason that considerable litigation has already been incurred. The wrong method of procedure was adopted. While that was in process of disposition the statute of limitations operated, and it was not thought that the Government should claim the statute of limitations by reason of a mistake in procedure. There is no question but that the Government occupied the premises without any lease for a number of months, and we limited the bill so as to permit a recovery, if any, only for the length of time the Government held the property after the original lease had expired.

Mr. KING. I would like to ask the Senator whether in his opinion the claimant availed himself of all opportunities, and if all legal remedies were prosecuted against the Government?

Mr. BLACK. He endeavored very diligently; in fact so diligently that I think he claimed too much.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ROBERT B. MURPHY

The bill (S. 3327) for the relief of Robert B. Murphy was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws or any laws conferring rights, privileges, or benefits upon persons honorably discharged from the United States Navy, their widows, children, and dependent relatives, Robert B. Murphy shall be held and considered to have been honorably discharged as a seaman, United States Navy, on May 28, 1899, but no pension, pay, nor bounty shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized and directed to grant to such Robert B. Murphy a discharge certificate showing that he is held and considered to have been honorably discharged as of such date.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARY M'CORMICK

The bill (H. R. 5897) for the relief of Mary McCormick was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The bill had been reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs with an amendment on page 1, line 9, after the word "death," to insert the words, "Provided, That the said Mary McCormick establishes that she was actually dependent upon her son, Arthur James McCormick, at the time of the latter's death," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be paid from the appropriation "Pay of the Navy, 1925," to Mary McCormick, mother of Arthur James McCormick, late seaman, first class, United States Navy, the sum of $356.40, being an amount equal to six months' pay at the rate received by said McCormick at the date of his death: Provided, That the said Mary McCormick establishes that she was actually dependent upon her son, Arthur James McCormick, at the time of the latter's death.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 8559) to amend section 58 of the act of March 2, 1917, entitled "An act to provide a civil government for Porto Rico, and for other purposes," was announced as next in order.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 9) to establish a joint commission on insular reorganization was announced as next in order.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I should like to have an explanation of the joint resolution. In the absence of its author I ask that it may go over without prejudice.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will go over without prejudice.

THOMAS JEFFERSON SHROPSHIRE

The bill (H. R. 6185) for the relief of Thomas Jefferson Shropshire was announced as next in order. The bill had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs adversely.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, I move that the bill be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Let the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas subsequently said: Mr. President, I withdraw my objection to the consideration of the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania with reference to the indefinite postponement of Calendar 1132.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I can explain that in a word.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The Senator need not explain it. I have withdrawn my objection. I have no objection to it.

Mr. BROOKHART. Let the bill go over. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will take its place on the calendar and go over under objection.

SILVER BELL OF CRUISER "NEW ORLEANS"

The bill (H. R. 5826) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy, in his discretion, to deliver to the custody of the Louisiana State Museum, of the city of New Orleans, La., the silver bell in use on the cruiser New Orleans, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy is authorized, in his discretion, to deliver to the custody of the Louisiana State Museum, of the city of New Orleans, La., for preservation and exhibition the silver bell which was in use on the cruiser New Orleans: Provided, That no expenses shall be incurred by the United States for the delivery of such silver bell.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

W. H. ANTHONY, JR.

The bill (S. 3427) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to make a readjustment of pay to Gunner W. H. Anthony, jr., United States Navy (retired), was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The bill had been reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs with an amendment, on page 1, line 7, after numerals "1920" to strike out the words "for active service to this date, and thereafter such amount as would be due him resulting from this active service," and insert in lieu thereof the words, "for any active service performed while on the retired list," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to examine into the service performed by Gunner W. H. Anthony, jr., United States Navy (retired), and to pay him such amount as would be due him on January 14, 1920, for any active service performed while on the retired list.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ALBERT CAMPBELL

The bill (H. R. 4687) for the relief of Albert Campbell was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will withhold his objection. The man is dead and this is to correct his record. It was a sincere prayer of my colleague from New York, Thaddeus Sweet, who was killed the other day in an airplane accident, that this bill might be passed. It involves no money. The Department has recommended that the only way the record can be corrected is by an act of Congress. I hope the Senator will withdraw his objection and let the bill be passed.

Mr. KING. The record shows that the man was a deserter without excuse. If the death of the man justifies removing the charge of desertion, if that is not incompatible with the public interest, I shall not object; but it does seem to me it is rather an unwise way to deal with the question. I withdraw the objection.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, and it was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws Albert Campbell shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a member of Company B, One hundred and fifty-seventh Regiment New York State Volunteers on the 11th day of October, 1863: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COAL AND ASPHALT, CHOCTAW AND CHICKASAW NATIONS

The bill (S. 3867) to extend certain existing leases upon the coal and asphalt deposits in the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations to September 25, 1932, and permit extension of time to complete payments on coal purchases, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The bill had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, authorized, in his discretion and under such rules, regulations, terms, and conditions as he may prescribe, to extend to September 25, 1932, existing developed mining leases of the segregated coal and asphalt lands and deposits of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations which by their terms would expire prior to that date: Provided, That application is made by the owners of the leases for such extension of time: And provided further, That no lease shall be extended until the owner of such lease shall have paid all royalties due thereunder.

SEC. 2. That the act of Congress approved February 8, 1918 (40 Stats. L. 433), as amended and modified by the act of Congress approved February 22, 1921 (41 Stats. L. 1107), authorizing the sale of the leased and unleased coal and asphalt deposits in the segregated mineral land of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations, Oklahoma, be, and the same is hereby, amended and modified as follows:

"That the purchasers of any coal or asphalt deposits in the segregated mineral land of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations heretofore sold to them are hereby required to pay, within 60 days from the approval of this act, to the superintendent of the Five Civilized Tribes Agency, or such other official as the Secretary may designate, for the benefit of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations, all balances of principal and interest due from said purchasers on the purchase price: Provided, That in any case, upon application of the purchaser and showing made by him in support thereof, the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion and under such rules, regulations, terms, and conditions as he may prescribe, extend to such purchaser the time within which the purchaser may pay the balances of principal and interest due from him: Provided, however, That the time so allowed shall not in any case extend beyond the period of four years from the date of the approval of this act: And provided further, That said purchaser shall be required to pay in equal monthly installments, during the extended periods, the balances of principal and interest due from him: Provided further, That each purchaser, before allowing an extension, shall furnish the Secretary of the Interior security for payment of the amounts due under such extension, and upon application and showing made by said purchaser, the Secretary of the Interior may allow such purchaser to pay said balances in quarterly or semiannual installments: Provided further, That upon failure of any purchaser to pay any installment within one month after the same becomes due under the terms of the time extension, the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to and shall declare the sale of the coal and asphalt deposits forfeited and canceled in accordance with the terms and conditions under which the sale was made, and, upon such forfeiture and cancellation, all amounts paid by such purchaser, principal and interest, shall become the property of the tribes. It is herein further provided that when application is made by any purchaser for extension of time within which to make payment of deferred installments of the purchase price and interest thereon, and before action is taken thereon by the Secretary of the Interior under the provisions of this act, the governor of the Chickasaw Nation and the principal chief of the Choctaw Nation, or other legal representatives of said Indian nations, shall be notified thereof and afforded an opportunity to be heard or to file a written statement of their views in the case: Provided, That if any developed coal or asphalt lease shall expire and the owner of the lease shall not apply for the renewal thereof, or if the sale of any developed coal or asphalt lease shall be declared forfeited and canceled, the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to take possession of said leased deposits and lease the same until September 25, 1932, or take whatever steps may be necessary to preserve and protect such property."

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. PINE] explain whether this, in his opinion, is advantageous for the Indians? We have had so many claims that the Indians have been despoiled of their possessions that I am anxious to know about it.

Mr. PINE. The Indians favor the bill. I introduced a bill at their request and at the request of the coal operators. The amendment was prepared by the department. The committee substituted the amendment for the original bill which I introduced. It is approved by everybody who is interested in it.

Mr. KING. We have not the time to read all the bills and I do not want to delay proceedings unduly. I ask the Senator, if judgment is rendered in favor of the Indians or if they obtain a considerable sum from the leases, whether adequate steps are taken for the protection of the funds?

Mr. PINE. The money will be placed in the hands of the department to be looked after for the Indians.

Mr. KING. I have no objection.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to provide for the extension of the time of certain mining leases of the coal and asphalt deposits in the segregated mineral land of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations, and to permit an extension of time to the purchasers of the coal and asphalt deposits within the segregated mineral lands of the said nations to complete payments of the purchase price, and for other purposes."

ADVANCEMENT OF CREEK NATION FUNDS

The bill (S. 3868) authorizing an advancement of certain funds standing to the credit of the Creek Nation in the Treasury of the United States to be paid to one of the attorneys for the Creek Nation, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The bill had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money now standing to the credit of the Creek Nation of Indians in the Treasury of the United States, the sum of not exceeding $18,000 to be, by the Secretary of the Interior, paid out in his discretion to attorneys for the Creek Nation of Indians employed under the authority of the act of Congress approved May 24, 1924 (43 Stat. L. 139), the payments to be made in such sums as may be necessary to reimburse the attorneys for such proper and necessary expenses as may have been incurred or may be incurred in the investigation of records and preparation, institution, and prosecution of suits of the Creek Nation of Indians against the United States under the above-mentioned act of May 24, 1924: Provided, however, That the claims of the attorneys shall be filed by said attorneys with the Secretary of the Interior and shall be accompanied by the attorneys' itemized and verified statement of the expenditures for expenses and by proper vouchers, and that the claims so submitted shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior: And provided further, That any sums allowed and paid under this act to the attorneys shall be reimbursable to the credit of the Creek Nation out of any amount or amounts which may hereafter be decreed by the Court of Claims to said attorneys for their services and expenses in connection with the Creek tribal claims and suits under the above-mentioned act of May 24, 1924.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill authorizing an advancement of certain funds standing to the credit of the Creek Nation in the Treasury of the United States to be paid to the attorney for the Creek Nation, and for other purposes."

PROMOTIONS IN THE ARMY

The bill (H. R. 12814) to increase the efficiency of the Air Corps was announced as next in order.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, this bill represents a compromise by those Senators who have interchanged opposing views about the proper way to deal with stagnation on the promotion list of the Army which resulted from admitting about 6,000 officers at the time of the World War.

There are many things that some of us would like to see go into the law to which our friends on the other side of the controversy do not agree. There are many things they would like to see, including a complete revision of the promotion list, with which we do not agree. The junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK] has introduced a bill which will call for a revision of the promotion list. I myself have introduced a bill which will call for promotion examinations and what is called a plucking board, and a number of things with which he and those who are grouped with him do not agree.

The present bill represents only those elements of relief which the Senator from Alabama and his friends—I should say his friends in thought, because I, too, am his friend—and which those who think with me agree should be adopted. It will go part way in relieving the distress that now exists in the promotion list because of the congestion of World War officers. There are many things he would like to add to the bill. There are many things I would like to add to it. But the only provisions that are in the bill as it is reported from the committee are such as are satisfactory to them and to us.

The bill as it now stands on the calendar is unanimously reported by the committee, meets with the approval of the War Department and, so far as I am able to discover, with the general approval of the officers of the Army. I hope the bill will pass with that understanding, that it does not represent all that any of us would wish but it does represent that which each of us admits is just.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, so far as the bill goes I agree with it, but I do not think it goes far enough. I think it offers a very small portion of the relief which should be granted. I voted to have the bill reported out favorably, with the reservation to offer amendments on the floor. I have proposed an amendment, which is now on the table. Unless that amendment is accepted I could not agree to the passage of the bill.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Would the Senator be willing to leave it to a vote of the Senate?

Mr. BLACK. I would be delighted to take it up after discussion.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Of course, the Senate will not permit us to waste much time discussing it.

Mr. BLACK. I would not permit it to be taken up now without an opportunity to discuss it.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Could not the Senate take up this bill now and then later, when we come to the other bill, have a full discussion of it?

Mr. BLACK. I shall be glad to have both bills come up, and agree to limit the discussion to 15 minutes on each bill at any time.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. The Senator will not permit what he admits to be just to go through unless he carries with it that which he claims to be just.

Mr. BLACK. In other words, I do not propose to have the burden of not passing the legislation put on me, because I am willing, as I stated to the Senate committee, to submit my bill and this bill together with a 15-minute explanation or 30-minute explanation or an hour of explanation, but I do want a vote of the Senate. I am perfectly willing to have that done any time and will agree to 10 minutes or 15 minutes of explanation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLACK. I object unless my amendment is accepted.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if we may deviate from the rule—I do not know whether we can or not—I would ask unanimous consent that both bills be considered together, of course taking a vote upon each separately, allowing 20 minutes, if it is agreeable to the Senate, for discussion.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. No; I can not agree to that.

Mr. KING. I withdraw the request.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill goes over on objection.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, before the bill goes over will not the Senator from Alabama agree that the committee amendment may be agreed to and then the bill go over? I refer to the amendment which the Senator approved in committee. Then the final passage of the bill may be delayed as long as the Senator desires.

Mr. BLACK. A very serious objection has been suggested to me by a Member of the House, who claims that the bill as reported with the amendments will result in the absolute destruction of his bill. I believe I should prefer to wait until I can take it up a little further.

Mr. FLETCHER. It applies to the Air Corps. Does the Senator object to the Senate committee amendment?

Mr. BLACK. I would rather not have the bill considered until I have time to talk to him, the gentleman to whom I have referred, because he sent me word that he wanted to talk with me about the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

THE RINGGOLD ROAD IN GEORGIA

The bill (S. 2991) to provide for the paving of the Government road extending from Chattanooga and Chickamauga National Military Park in the State of Georgia to the town of Ringgold, Ga., constituting an approach road to the Chattanooga and Chickamauga National Military Park was announced as next in order.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, for a number of years the War Department has been endeavoring to take over the roads and highways which run through Government reservations and approaches to reservations. The road referred to in this bill is in a terrible condition, and it will cost the War Department a good deal to improve it. A similar bill has passed the House unanimously, and the committees of both Houses unanimously recommend its passage. I will add that it is recommended by the War Department. I ask that House bill 11724 be substituted for the Senate bill and that the House bill may be now considered.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, before consenting to the further consideration of the bill, I should like to ask the Senator from Georgia if the War Department approves of the bill?

Mr. HARRIS. The War Department approves of the bill.

Mr. KING. Another question: Was not an appropriation carried in the general Army appropriation bill for this particular road?

Mr. HARRIS. No; not at all.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to substituting the House bill referred to by the Senator from Georgia for the Senate bill? The Chair hears none. Without objection, the Committee on Military Affairs will be discharged from the further consideration of the House bill. Is there objection to the consideration of the House bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 11724) to provide for the paving of the Government road, known as the Ringgold Road, extending from Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Military Park, in the State of Georgia, to the town of Ringgold, Ga., constituting an approach road to the Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Military Park, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is authorized to improve and pave the Government road, known as the Ringgold Road, commencing at the Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Military Park and extending to Ringgold, Ga., in the length of approximately 7.8 miles, for which an appropriation of not to exceed $117,000 is hereby authorized out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated: Provided, That no part of the appropriation herein authorized shall be available until the State of Georgia or any county or municipality or local subdivision thereof, or any State or county or municipal highway commission, or equivalent public authority, shall contribute at least an equal amount for the same purpose and the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to expend such sum as may be contributed by said local interests concurrently with the appropriation herein authorized in the improvement and pavement of said road: Provided further, That should the State of Georgia or any county or municipality or legal subdivision thereof, or any State or county or municipal highway commission, or equivalent public authority desire that the position of said road be changed in any particular from the present Government-owned right of way, and should such local authorities acquire title to the land necessary to effect such changes, the Secretary of War may expend the funds herein authorized for the improvement and pavement of such road as changed: And provided further, That no part of the appropriation herein authorized shall be expended until the State of Georgia or the counties or municipalities thereof concerned have accepted title to the present Government-owned road known as Ringgold Road and have obligated themselves in writing to the satisfaction of the Secretary of War that they will maintain said road as built under the provisions of the act approved March 3, 1925 (43 Stat. 1104), immediately upon the completion of such improvements as may be made under this appropriation.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Senate bill 2991 should be indefinitely postponed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, Senate bill 2991 will be indefinitely postponed.

SITE OF THE BATTLE OF KETTLE CREEK, GA.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 9965) to erect a tablet or marker to mark the site of the Battle of Kettle Creek, in Wilkes County, Ga., where, on February 14, 1779, Elijah Clarke, of Georgia, and Colonel Pickens, of South Carolina, overtook the Tories under Colonel Boyd, killing him and many of his followers, thus ending British dominion in Georgia, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $2,500 be, and is hereby, authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of erecting a tablet or marker on the grounds of the Battle of Kettle Creek, in Wilkes County, Ga., where, on February 14, 1779, Elijah Clarke, of Georgia, and Colonel Pickens, of South Carolina, overtook the Tories under Colonel Boyd, killing him and many of his followers, thus ending British dominion in Georgia, said tablet or marker to be placed on the portion of this battle ground now owned by the Daughters of the American Revolution, said sum to be dispensed by the Secretary of War after he shall have approved the plans of said tablet or marker.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GEORGE subsequently said: Mr. President, the Senate having passed Calendar 1140, the bill (H. R. 9965) to erect a tablet or marker to mark the site of the Battle of Kettle Creek, in Wilkes County, Ga., where, on February 14, 1779, Elijah Clarke, of Georgia, and Colonel Pickens, of South Carolina, overtook the Tories under Colonel Boyd, killing him and many of his followers, thus ending British dominion in Georgia, I ask that the Committee on Military Affairs be discharged from the further consideration of Senate bill 3050 for the same purpose, and that the Senate bill be indefinitely postponed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Georgia asks that the Committee on Military Affairs be discharged from the further consideration of Senate bill 3050 and that the bill be indefinitely postponed. Without objection it is so ordered.

GRATUITY TO DEPENDENT RELATIVES OF OFFICERS, ETC.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 5548) to authorize payment of six months' death gratuity to dependent relatives of officers, enlisted men, or nurses, whose death results from wounds or disease not resulting from their own misconduct, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the provision contained in the act approved June 4, 1920 (41 Stat. L. 824; sec. 943, title 34, U. S. C.), is hereby amended to read as follows:

"943. Allowance on death of officer or enlisted man or nurse, to widow, child, or dependent relative: Immediately upon official notification of the death from wounds or disease, not the result of his or her own misconduct, of any officer, enlisted man, or nurse on the active list of the regular Navy or regular Marine Corps, or on the retired list when on active duty, the Paymaster General of the Navy shall cause to be paid to the widow, and if there be no widow to the child or children, and if there be no widow or child, to any other dependent relative of such officer, enlisted man, or nurse previously designated by him or her, an amount equal to six months' pay at the rate received by such officer, enlisted man, or nurse at the date of his or her death. The Secretary of the Navy shall establish regulations requiring each officer and enlisted man or nurse having no wife or child to designate the proper dependent relative to whom this amount shall be paid in case of his or her death. Said amount shall be paid from funds appropriated for the pay of the Navy and pay of the Marine Corps, respectively: Provided, That if there be no widow, child, or previously designated dependent relative, the Secretary of the Navy shall cause the amount herein provided to be paid to any grandparent, parent, sister, or brother shown to have been actually dependent upon such officer, enlisted man, or nurse prior to his or her death, and the determination of such fact by the Secretary of the Navy shall be final and conclusive upon the accounting officers of the Government: Provided, That nothing in this section or in other existing legislation shall be construed as making the provisions of this section applicable to officers, enlisted men, or nurses of any forces of the Navy of the United States other than those of the regular Navy and Marine Corps, and nothing in this section shall be construed to apply in commissioned grades to any officers except those holding permanent or probationary appointments in the regular Navy or Marine Corps: Provided, That the provisions of this section shall apply to the officers and enlisted men of the Coast Guard, and the Secretary of the Treasury will cause payment to be made accordingly."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LOSS OF TIME BY ENLISTED MAN IN NAVAL SERVICE

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 5644) to enable an enlisted man in the naval service to make good time lost in excess of one day under certain conditions, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That every enlisted man in the naval service who, without proper authority, absents himself from his ship, station, or duty for more than one day, or who is confined for more than one day under sentence, or while awaiting trial and disposition of his case, if the trial results in conviction, may be permitted to serve, after his return to a full-duty status, for such a period as shall, with the time he may have served prior to such unauthorized absence or confinement, amount to the full term of his enlistment.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EQUALIZATION OF PAY OF OFFICERS OF SUPPLY CORPS

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 5718) to amend the act entitled "An act to readjust the pay and allowances of the commissioned and enlisted personnel of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, Coast and Geodetic Survey, and Public Health Service which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That paragraph 5, section 1, of the act approved June 10, 1922 (42 Stat. L. ch. 212, p. 626), entitled "An act to readjust the pay and allowances of the commissioned and enlisted personnel of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, Coast and Geodetic Survey, and Public Health Service," be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows: "The pay of the fourth period shall be paid to lieutenant colonels of the Army, commanders of the Navy, and officers of corresponding grade who are not entitled to the pay of the fifth or sixth period; to majors of the Army, lieutenant commanders of the Navy, and officers of corresponding grade who have completed 14 years' service, or whose first appointment in the permanent service was in a grade above that corresponding to second lieutenant in the Army, or who were appointed to the Regular Army to fill vacancies created by the increase of the commissioned personnel thereof in 1920; to captains of the Army, lieutenants of the Navy, and officers of corresponding grade who have completed 17 years' service except those whose promotion is limited by law to this grade and who are not entitled under existing law to the pay and allowances of a higher grade; and to lieutenant commanders and lieutenants of the Staff Corps of the Navy, and lieutenant commanders, lieutenants, and lieutenants (junior grade) of the line and engineer corps of the Coast Guard whose total commissioned service equals that of lieutenant commanders of the line of the Navy, drawing the pay of this period": Provided, That this amendment shall be effective from July 1, 1926: Provided, That no back pay or allowance shall accrue by reason of the passage of this act.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like an explanation of that bill.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, the bill seeks to equalize the pay of 11 officers of the Supply Corps with their line running mates.

Under the provisions of the pay act of June 10, 1922, lieutenants of the staff corps with total commissioned service equal to that of lieutenant commanders of the line drawing pay of the fourth pay period are allowed to draw the pay of that period.

This provision was inserted for the purpose of placing staff corps officers on a parity for pay purposes with their running mates of the line, but due to the fact that these 11 officers of the Supply Corps were advanced to the rank of lieutenant commander with their running mates in the line, this parity for pay purposes is lost by reason of their advancement from the rank of lieutenant to that of lieutenant commander. In other words, with their promotions they get $1,100 less than they had when they were in the lower rank. That was occasioned by a mistake of the law, which, on the recommendation of the department, we seek to rectify by this bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADVANCE OF PUBLIC FUNDS TO NAVAL PERSONNEL

The Senate as in Committee of the Whole proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 11621) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to advance public funds to naval personnel under certain conditions, which was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized, in accordance with such regulations as may be approved by the President, to advance public funds to naval personnel when required to meet expenses of officers and men detailed on emergency shore duty: Provided, That the funds so advanced shall not exceed a reasonable estimate of the actual expenditures to be made and for which reimbursement is authorized by law.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AWARD OF CAMPAIGN BADGE TO CAPT. JAMES P. WILLIAMS

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 4920) authorizing the Secretary of War to award a Nicaraguan campaign badge to Capt. James P. Williams, in recognition of his services to the United States in the Nicaraguan campaign of 1912 and 1913, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendment, on page 1, line 3, after the words "Secretary of," to strike out "War" and to insert "the Navy," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to award a Nicaraguan campaign badge to Capt. James P. Williams, now a captain in the United States Army, Headquarters and Headquarters Troop, One hundred and fifty-sixth Cavalry Brigade, United States Army, reserve, for services rendered the United States Government in the Nicaraguan campaign of 1912 and 1913: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued by virtue of the passage of this act.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] if we were carrying on war in Nicaragua then; if we are to reward this man for his valorous conduct as a military officer in a military expedition; and if we were not carrying on war, for what is he to receive this badge of honor?

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, whether or not we were carrying on war during that campaign in 1912 and 1913, this man rendered service to the Government. Other men who performed similar service who were in the Marine Corps were given decorations, but this man was not in the Marine Corps and was given no such recognition. Under the terms of this bill a similar decoration is to be given to him, as though he had been in the Marine Corps.

Mr. REED of Missouri rose.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. What service was he in?

Mr. REED of Missouri. That is what I rose to ask—what service was he in and what service did he render?

Mr. HALE. He was a guide and an interpreter. Since that time, I will say, he has gone into the Regular Army and is now a captain in that branch of the service.

Mr. KING. I should like to ask the Senator from Maine how it will be possible by giving him some recognition, without a limitation, to increase his pension?

Mr. HALE. I did not hear the Senator's question.

Mr. KING. I ask the Senator, Will the awarding of this badge increase his pension or allowances?

Mr. HALE. It has nothing whatever to do with a pension.

Mr. KING. Then, may I inquire of the Senator why this provision was put in the bill?—

Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued by virtue of the passage of this act.

Mr. HALE. Simply to make perfectly sure that there shall not be anything of that sort.

Mr. KING. It seems to me to be very strange legislation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to award a Nicaraguan campaign badge to Capt. James P. Williams, in recognition of his services to the United States in the Nicaraguan campaign of 1912 and 1913."

MOTOR MINE YAWLS FOR THE WAR DEPARTMENT

The bill (S. 2947) to provide for the construction or purchase of two motor mine yawls for the War Department was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated not to exceed $10,000 to be expended by the Secretary of War for the construction or purchase of two motor mine yawls for replacement purposes, at a cost not to exceed $5,000 each.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

L BOATS FOR THE WAR DEPARTMENT

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2951) to provide for the construction or purchase of two L boats for the War Department, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated not to exceed $50,000 to be expended by the Secretary of War for the construction or purchase of two L boats for replacing boats of a similar type destroyed, at a cost not to exceed $25,000 each.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Pennsylvania—and I dislike to consume the time—in view of the fact that we have such a large number of vessels in the possession of the Shipping Board, most of which are not being employed upon the seas but are tied up in harbors, why do we not utilize some of those instead of spending fifteen or twenty thousand dollars for the purchase of more?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, if we could use destroyers for this service the suggestion of the Senator from Utah would be very apropos. These L boats, as they are called, are very light-draft boats. They are about 60 or 65 feet long and draw not over 6 feet of water. They are used in connection with mine planting by the Coast Artillery. They are specially designed, and the two provided for in this bill are necessary to take the place of two which were destroyed during the past year. I agree with the Senator that wherever we can use what we have we ought not to buy new ones.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SEAGOING RETRIEVER FOR AIR CORPS

The bill (S. 2952) to provide for the construction or purchase of one heavy seagoing Air Corps retriever for the War Department, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated not to exceed $40,000 to be expended by the Secretary of War for the construction or purchase of one heavy seagoing Air Corps retriever for use at France Field, Canal Zone.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LANDS IN FORT APACHE INDIAN RESERVATION, ARIZ.

The bill (S. 4346) to authorize an appropriation for the purchase of certain privately owned lands in the Fort Apache Indian Reservation, Ariz., was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized an appropriation of $6,200, or as much thereof as might be required, from the tribal fund "Indian money proceeds of labor" on deposit in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Indians of the Fort Apache Reservation, Ariz., for the purchase of the land and appurtenances thereof located within the exterior boundaries of that reservation and belonging to the Aztec Land & Cattle Co., title thereto to be taken in the name of the United States in trust for said Indians.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LANDS FOR CHIPPEWA INDIANS, MINNESOTA

The bill (H. R. 12067) to set aside certain lands for the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota, was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioner of Indian Affairs having recommended to the Secretary of the Interior on February 8, 1899, that certain Chippewa Indian lands be withheld from entry and settlement, described as follows: The southwest quarter and the south half of the southeast quarter, section 21, township 145, range 26 west of the fifth principal meridian, in Minnesota, consisting of 240 acres, and reserved as a village site made to the Indians residing on the reservation of the Mississippi Chippewas, known as the Chippewa Reservation and approved by the Secretary of the Interior on February 9, 1899, are hereby permanently reserved for said village site for said Indians.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SENECA OIL SPRING RESERVATION, N. Y.

The bill (H. R. 12446) to approve a deed of conveyance of certain land in the Seneca Oil Spring Reservation, N. Y., was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That a certain instrument of conveyance dated December 30, 1927, from the Seneca Nation of Indians to the Seneca Oil Spring Association (Inc.), granting by quitclaim title a tract of land having a radius of 75 feet from the center of the oil spring located on the Oil Spring Reservation, N. Y., and a right of way 3 rods wide to such spring from the public highway now passing through the reservation, is hereby confirmed and the approval of the Assistant Secretary of the Interior Department of February 28, 1928, thereof is hereby validated: Provided, That the purpose for which the land is hereby conveyed shall be for the preserving of the spring as a historical monument only, and title to said land shall revert to the Seneca Nation of Indians if said land is ever placed to any other use.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WHITE RIVER AND OTHER INDIANS IN UTAH, COLORADO, AND NEW MEXICO

The bill (S. 2482) for the relief of the White River, Uintah, Uncompahgre, and Southern Ute Tribes or Bands of Ute Indians in Utah, Colorado, and New Mexico, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The bill had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment on page 4, line 8, after the word "judgments," to insert the following proviso: "Provided, That if the Secretary of the Interior shall find that any attorney or attorneys rendered any services to the Uintah and White River Bands of Ute Indians under a contract executed September 24, 1921, by said Indians, which contract was not approved as provided by section 2103 of the Revised Statutes prior to December 20, 1927, he shall fix such compensation on the quantum meruit basis, to be paid to said attorney or attorneys as in his opinion is reasonable, and the same shall also be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury as herein provided." So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That to carry into effect the provisions of the act of Congress of May 27, 1902, relating to the lands in the former Uintah Indian Reservation in the State of Utah, occupied by the Uintah and White River Tribes or Bands of Ute Indians, and ceded by them to the United States, and to secure also a final adjudication of all claims of whatsoever nature which the said White River and Uintah Bands or Tribes and the Uncompahgre and Southern Ute Bands or Tribes of Ute Indians residing in Utah, New Mexico, and Colorado, may have or claim to have against the United States, jurisdiction is hereby conferred on the Court of Claims, notwithstanding lapse of time or statutes of limitation, to hear and determine and render final judgment, with right of appeal as in other cases, on the claims and rights, whether legal or equitable, of each and all of said tribes or bands of Ute Indians, including any claim or claims arising under any act of Congress, or any treaty or Executive order, with jurisdiction on the part of said court to determine the value of all lands which have been set apart and reserved from the ceded Ute Indian lands as forest reservations or for other public uses under existing laws and proclamations of the President, as if disposed of under the public-land laws of the United States, as provided by said agreement or other agreement or treaty, and by acts of Congress, including claims arising out of water rights, irrigation, and rights in mineral and in other lands, and to find and adjudge the amount of money due therefor; and the court shall set off against any sum found due said Ute Indians, or any of the above-named tribes or bands thereof, any sum or sums that shall be properly chargeable against said Ute Indians or any tribe or bands thereof, except such sums as have been paid for a specific purpose and an adequate consideration: Provided, That such set-offs shall also include all gratuities to said Indians from the United States.

Any suit or suits filed hereunder shall be commenced by petition, subject to amendment, to be filed in the Court of Claims within five years after the approval of this act by the attorney or attorneys employed by the said Indians under contract as required by section 2103 of the United States Revised Statutes. Such petition shall be verified by the attorney or attorneys and shall set forth all the facts on which the claim or claims for recovery are based and shall be signed by the attorney or attorneys employed and no other verification shall be necessary: Provided, That in case two or more tribes or bands are joined as plaintiffs in any suit authorized by this act, the court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine the several as well as the joint rights of the parties plaintiff and render judgment accordingly.

A copy of the petition in such suit shall be served upon the Attorney General of the United States, and he, or some attorney from the Department of Justice to be designated by him, is hereby directed to appear and defend the interests of the United States.

The compensation to be paid the attorney or attorneys of record shall be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior on a quantum meruit for the services rendered, not to be in excess of the amounts stipulated in the contract or contracts of employment or in excess of a sum equal to 10 per cent of the amounts recovered against the United States, together with all necessary and proper expenses incurred in the preparation and prosecution of the suit or suits, to be paid to the attorney or attorneys employed by said tribes or bands of Indians by the Secretary of the Treasury out of any moneys in the Treasury arising from the sale of said ceded lands or from the proceeds of said judgment or judgments: Provided, That if the Secretary of the Interior shall find that any attorney or attorneys rendered any services to the Uintah and White River Bands of Ute Indians under a contract executed September 24, 1921, by said Indians, which contract was not approved as provided by section 2103 of the Revised Statutes prior to December 20, 1927, he shall fix such compensation on the quantum meruit basis, to be paid to said attorney or attorneys as in his opinion is reasonable, and the same shall also be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury as herein provided.

All amounts which may be found due and recovered for under the provisions of this act, less attorneys' fees and expenses, shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the proper tribe or band and shall draw interest at the rate of 4 per cent per annum from the date of the judgment or decree.

Official letters, papers, documents, and records, or certified copies thereof, may be used in evidence, and the departments of the Government shall give access to the attorney or attorneys of said Ute Bands of Indians to such treaties, papers, correspondence, or records as may be required in the prosecution of any suit or suits instituted under this act.

The Court of Claims shall have full authority by proper process and orders to bring in and make parties to any such suit or suits any other bands or tribes of Indians deemed by it necessary or proper to the final determination of the controversy.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CLAIMS OF TURTLE MOUNTAIN CHIPPEWAS

The bill (S. 3676) authorizing the Turtle Mountain Chippewas to submit claims to the Court of Claims was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The bill had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment, on page 2, section 1, line 7, after the word "thereon," to insert "The said courts shall consider all such claims de novo, upon a legal and equitable basis and without regard to any waiver, decision, finding, or settlement heretofore had in respect to any such claims," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That all claims of whatsoever nature which the Turtle Mountain Chippewas may have against the United States which have not heretofore been determined by the Court of Claims may be submitted to the Court of Claims with the right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States by either party for determination of the amount, if any, due said tribe from the United States under any treaties, agreements, or laws of Congress, or for the misappropriation of any of the funds or lands of said tribe or band or bands thereof, or for the failure of the United States to pay said tribe any money or other property due; and jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims, with the right of either party to appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, to hear and determine all legal and equitable claims, if any, of said tribe against the United States, and to enter judgment thereon. The said courts shall consider all such claims de novo, upon a legal and equitable basis and without regard to any waiver, decision, finding, or settlement heretofore had in respect of any such claims.

SEC. 2. If any claim or claims be submitted to said courts they shall settle the rights therein, both legal and equitable, of each and all the parties thereto, notwithstanding lapse of time or statutes of limitations, and any payment which may have been made upon any claim so submitted shall not be pleaded as an estoppel, but may be pleaded as an offset in such suits or actions, and the United States shall be allowed credit for all sums heretofore paid or expended for the benefit of said tribe or any band thereof. The claim or claims of the tribe or band or bands thereof may be presented separately or jointly by petition, subject, however, to amendment, suit to be filed within five years after the passage of this act; and such action shall make the petitioner or petitioners party plaintiff or plaintiffs and the United States party defendant, and any band or bands of said tribe or any other tribe or bands of Indians the court may deem necessary to a final determination of such suit or suits may be joined therein, as the court may order. Such petition, which shall be verified by the attorney or attorneys employed by said Turtle Mountain Chippewas or any bands thereof, shall set forth all the facts on which the claims for recovery are based, and said petition shall be signed by the attorney or attorneys employed and no other verification shall be necessary. Official letters, papers, documents, and public records, or certified copies thereof may be used in evidence, and the departments of the Government shall give access to the attorney or attorneys of said tribe or bands thereof to such treaties, papers, correspondence, or records as may be needed by the attorney or attorneys for said tribe or bands of Indians.

SEC. 3. Upon the final determination of such suit, cause, or action the Court of Claims shall decree such fees as it shall find reasonable to be paid the attorney or attorneys employed therein by said tribe or bands of Indians under contracts negotiated and approved as provided by existing law, and in no case shall the fee decreed by said Court of Claims be in excess of the amounts stipulated in the contracts approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior, and no attorney shall have a right to represent the said tribes or any band thereof in any suit, cause, or action under the provisions of this act until his contract shall have been approved as herein provided. The fees decreed by the court to the attorney or attorneys of record shall be paid out of any sum or sums recovered in such suits or actions, and no part of such fees shall be taken from any money in the Treasury of the United States belonging to such tribe or bands of Indians in whose behalf the suit is brought unless specifically authorized in the contract approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior as herein provided: Provided, That in no case shall the fees decreed by said court amount to more than 10 per cent of the amount of the judgment recovered in such cause.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHARLES E. LOWE

The bill (H. R. 4660) to correct the military record of Charles E. Lowe was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers Charles E. Lowe, who was a private in Company F, Thirty-seventh Regiment United States Volunteer Infantry, shall be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service February 12, 1900, and to have received the gunshot wound in right hand in line of duty, and to have served "honest and faithful" as noted on his original discharge certificate: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXTENSION AND WIDENING OF FOURTEENTH STREET, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The bill (S. 3440) to vacate certain streets and alleys within the area known as the Walter Reed General Hospital, District of Columbia, and to authorize the extension and widening of Fourteenth Street from Montague Street to its southern terminus south of Dahlia Street, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SACKETT. I ask that that bill go over.

Mr. BRUCE. I trust that the objection will be withdrawn.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, will the Senator permit a question about that bill?

Mr. BRUCE. Certainly.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Am I correct in understanding that the bill would authorize the opening of Fourteenth Street through the present grounds of the Walter Reed Hospital?

Mr. BRUCE. Yes; but at a grade approved by the War Department, and without the street carrying any electric cars or trucks.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Does not the Senator think, in view of the fact that at Walter Reed Hospital there are a great many neuropsychiatric patients and many convalescent patients who use the grounds, that that would be a very serious impairment of the usefulness of the hospital?

Mr. BRUCE. I do not think so. All these questions were thoroughly considered by the committee at the last session of Congress and also at this session. This bill was reported favorably by the committee at the last session and was passed by the Senate.

Mr. SACKETT. I ask that the bill go over.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. What was the report of the hospital authorities?

Mr. BRUCE. The report of the hospital authorities?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Yes; what view did they take of it?

Mr. BRUCE. There was some opposition to it.

Mr. HEFLIN. Regular order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

MARY L. ROEBKEN

The bill (S. 200) for the relief of Mary L. Roebken was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The bill had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments, on page 1, line 5, after the words "sum of," to strike out "$5,000" and insert "$2,500"; in line 6, after the name "Roebken," to insert "and Esther M. Roebken, in full settlement of all claims"; in line 7, after the word "damages," to strike out "sustained to her person"; in line 10, after the name "Roebken," to insert "and Esther M. Roebken"; and in the same line, before the word "riding," to strike out "was" and insert "were," so as to read:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated the sum of $2,500 to Mary L. Roebken and Esther M. Roebken, in full settlement of all claims for damages growing out of a collision of an Army ambulance, operated by the United States, with a Ford car in which said Mary L. Roebken and Esther M. Roebken were riding on Sixteenth Street, in the city of Washington, D. C., on June 20, 1924.

The amendments were agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 2, to insert a new section, as follows:

SEC. 2. That no part of the amount appropriated in this bill in excess of 8 per cent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered or advances made in connection with said claim. Any person or persons violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of Mary L. Roebken and Esther M. Roebken."

F. C. WALLACE

The bill (H. R. 8440) for the relief of F. C. Wallace was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and in full settlement against the Government, the sum of $2,910.87 to F. C. Wallace, of Bettendorf, Iowa, on account of the loss by fire of a frame building and personal property sustained while the Wallace Aero Co. was aiding a stranded Air Service officer to recondition his plane in order to enable him to return to his proper station.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LIGHTHOUSE RESERVATION IN CHICAGO

The bill (S. 4309) to authorize the Secretary of Commerce to dispose of a certain lighthouse reservation and to acquire certain land for lighthouse purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The bill had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments. The first amendment was in section 2, page 4, line 2, after the word "pier," to strike out "at" and insert "for," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. The said conveyance of the aforesaid property to be given in exchange for and dependent upon the city of Chicago conveying to the United States of America the fee simple title, as evidenced by a quitclaim deed and abstracts acceptable to the Attorney General of the United States, to the following tract of land, described by metes and bounds as follows:

Beginning at the point of intersection of the west side of the dock on the east side of the Ogden Slip with the north line of the tract of land conveyed by the city of Chicago to the United States of America by deed dated August 10, 1920, and recorded December 8, 1921, as document 7347325 in book 16850, page 532; running thence east on the north line of said tract a distance of 80 feet; thence north at right angles to the north line of said tract 217 feet; thence west on a line parallel to and 217 feet north of the north line of said tract 100 feet, more or less, to the west side of said dock on the east side of the Ogden Slip; thence south and southeasterly on the west side of said dock to the place of beginning, the said tract of land conveyed by the city of Chicago to the United States of America, being described as follows: A parcel of land adjacent to the north Government pier, and bounded on the east by Lake Michigan, approximately 500 feet long in an easterly and westerly direction and 100 feet wide, described as commencing at the junction of the north side of the United States Government pier (running east from the Ogden Slip) with the east side of the north and south municipal pier for place of beginning, said place of beginning being 700 feet, more or less, south measured at right angles from a point in north line of East Illinois Street extended 1,500 feet, more or less, east of the east line of Peshtigo Court; thence northerly along the said north and south pier 108 feet; thence westerly at an angle from the south to west of 91 degrees, a distance of 506 feet, more or less, to the west side of the dock on east side of the Ogden Slip; thence southerly at an angle from east to south 74 degrees 30 minutes along the concrete dock 103 feet, more or less, to the United States Government pier; thence easterly at an angle from north to east 106 degrees 40 minutes along the United States Government pier for a distance of 480 feet, more or less, to place of beginning.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, after line 4, to insert a new section, as follows:

SEC. 3. That in the exchange herein provided the city of Chicago shall provide suitable access or right of way to the property to be conveyed to the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 4926) for the relief of the Pocahontas Fuel Co. (Inc.) was announced as next in order.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I ask that that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 4376) for the relief of Harry M. King was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I ask that that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

HAVERT S. SEALY AND PORTEUS R. BURKE

The bill (H. R. 3470) granting relief to Havert S. Sealy and Porteus R. Burke was announced as next in order.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I ask that that go over.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Will the Senator be good enough to withhold the objection for a moment?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I withhold it.

Mr. BROUSSARD. I should like to make a brief explanation of this bill. When the flood in the Mississippi reached my section of the State there happened to be threatened a United States experimental station which was located in that vicinity. The manager of the station used the property belonging to the claimants in this bill which was across the river from the experimental station. When the waters rose he moved one of his employees into the home of the claimants under this bill. The employee erected a stove in the pantry of the house, over the protest of the caretaker. As the result of putting up the stove with an improper connection, and, despite the protest of the caretaker, the house, which was a two-story brick structure, was destroyed by fire. The claimants got a favorable report from the management of this farm, from the Secretary of Agriculture, and from the committee.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I withdraw my objection.

Mr. BROUSSARD. They asked for $35,000. The House reduced the amount to $10,000. I should like to see the bill passed for this amount.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 6, after the word "New," to strike out "Ibernia" and insert "Iberia," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $10,000, to Havert S. Sealy and Porteus R. Burke, of New Iberia, La., in full compensation against the Government for destruction by fire of a residence on the Rosedale Plantation, situated in the Parish of Iberia, La., on the 1st day of June, 1927, due to the fault and negligence of an agent of the Department of Agriculture.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

BILL AND RESOLUTIONS PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 1616) for the relief of Carl C. Back was announced as next in order.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The resolution (S. Res. 113) favoring a restriction of loans by Federal reserve banks for speculative purposes was announced as next in order.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be passed over.

The resolution (S. Res. 159) to investigate the affairs and management of the Federal Land and Intermediate Credit Bank of Columbia, S. C., was announced as next in order.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, in view of the fact that the author of this resolution is absent I suggest that it go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be passed over.

DRY VALLEY ROAD, GEORGIA

The bill (S. 3881) to provide for the paving of the Government road, known as the Dry Valley Road, commencing where said road leaves the La Fayette Road, in the city of Rossville, Ga., and extending to Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Military Park, constituting an approach road to said park, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is authorized to improve and pave the Government road, known as the Dry Valley Road, commencing where said road leaves the La Fayette Road, in the city of Rossville, Ga., and extending to Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Military Park, in the length of approximately 4 miles, for which an appropriation of not to exceed $60,000 is hereby authorized out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated: Provided, That should the State of Georgia or any county or municipality or legal subdivision thereof, or any State or county or municipal highway commission, or equivalent public authority desire that the position of said road be in such manner as would involve an expenditure of more than $60,000, the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to expend such sum as may be contributed by said local interests concurrently with the appropriation herein authorized in the improvement and pavement of said road: Provided further, That should the State of Georgia or any county or municipality or legal subdivision thereof, or any State or county or municipal highway commission, or equivalent public authority desire that the position of said road be changed in any particular from the present Government-owned right of way, and should such local interests acquire title to the land necessary to effect such changes, the Secretary of War may expend the funds herein authorized for the improvement and pavement of such road as changed: And provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended until the State of Georgia, or the counties or municipalities thereof concerned, have obligated themselves in writing to the satisfaction of the Secretary of War that they will accept title to the present Government-owned road known as the Dry Valley Road and will maintain said road as built under the provisions of the act approved March 3, 1925 (43 Stat. L. 1104), immediately upon the completion of such improvements as may be made under this appropriation.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, this bill is somewhat similar to the other bill that I referred to to-night. The War Department has been trying to get rid of these Government roads on account of the great expense of their upkeep. This bill will turn the road over to the State of Georgia, and after that the State will have to bear all the expense of maintaining it. The bill is recommended by the War Department, and has the unanimous report of the committee.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FRANK HARTMAN

The bill (H. R. 6569) for the relief of Frank Hartman was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, if the Senate will look at the bill I think they will agree that the second section is not necessary. The first is a direction to pay and the second is an authorization. Certainly there is no sense in passing both.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I am perfectly willing to strike out one of the provisions.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I do not mean to ask that the bill go over. It seems to be a perfectly proper claim; but in order to make it proper legislation I move that section 2 be stricken out.

Mr. DILL. I have no objection to that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania subsequently said: Mr. President, when House bill 6569 was up, I objected to section 2 of the bill. In order to avoid any possible doubt, I move a reconsideration of the vote by which the bill was passed, and move to amend by inserting in line 4, after the word "pay," the words "out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated."

Mr. DILL. I am glad the Senator returned to that bill. I had just come over to this side of the Chamber for the purpose of taking up that subject with him.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the vote whereby the bill was passed will be reconsidered. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

SIOUX BENEFITS

The bill (H. R. 9046) to continue the allowance of Sioux benefits was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

YANKTON SIOUX TRIBE OF INDIANS

The bill (S. 2792) reinvesting title to certain lands in the Yankton Sioux Tribe of Indians was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all claim, right, title, and interest in and to certain lands on the Yankton Sioux Indian Reservation in the State of South Dakota, now reserved for agency, schools, and other purposes (embracing 1,000 acres, more or less) pursuant to the act of Congress dated August 15, 1894 (28 Stat. p. 286), be, and is hereby, reinvested in the Yankton Sioux Tribe of Indians subject to the continued use of such lands for agency, schools, and other purposes, until they are no longer required for such purposes: Provided, however, That this act shall not be construed to make any such land available for allotment purposes.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. KING subsequently said: Mr. President, may I have the attention of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. McMASTER]? The bill which we passed a moment ago calls for the reinvestment—whatever that means—of the title to certain lands in the Yankton Sioux Tribe of Indians.

Mr. McMASTER. Yes.

Mr. KING. My attention has recently been called by a number of Indians who have visited my office to the fact that in many instances lands, the title to which was vested in them, have been sold for taxes, and they have suffered great disadvantages by the policy which the Government has pursued. I was wondering whether this bill would subject these lands to any inconvenience or any incumbrance or any menace not now existing.

Mr. McMASTER. Mr. President, the statements made by the Senator from Utah are correct in regard to certain Indian lands; but this particular bill does not apply to that class of lands. This bill applies to a certain 1,000-acre tract the title to which is now in the Government of the United States. When this land was ordered placed on the homestead file the Indians were supposed to receive $3.75 an acre, which they did receive; but the Government made $165,000 profit, and retained these 1,000 acres for Government buildings. This is simply to reinvest this land, to give the title back to the Indians, not for allotment but for reservation purposes, buildings, and so forth.

PINE RIDGE SIOUX INDIANS OF SOUTH DAKOTA

The bill (S. 4231) to authorize a per capita payment to the Pine Ridge Sioux Indians of South Dakota was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment, on page 1, line 8, to strike out "may be prescribed" and insert "he may prescribe"; so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to withdraw from funds on deposit in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Pine Ridge Sioux Indians of South Dakota, a sum sufficient to make a $10 per capita payment to said Indians, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LAGRANGE GROCERY CO.

The bill (H. R. 7895) for the relief of the Lagrange Grocery Co. was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WEST POINT WHOLESALE GROCERY CO.

The bill (H. R. 7897) to ratify the action of a local board of sales control in respect of contracts between the United States and the West Point Wholesale Grocery Co., of West Point, Ga., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LAGRANGE GROCERY CO.

The bill (H. R. 7898) to ratify the action of a local board of sales control in respect of contracts between the United States and the Lagrange Grocery Co., of Lagrange, Ga., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

E. H. JENNINGS AND OTHERS

The bill (H. R. 9620) for the relief of E. H. Jennings, F. L. Johanns, and Henry Blank, officers and employees of the post office at Charleston, S. C., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JESSE W. BOISSEAU

The bill (H. R. 5930) for the relief of Jesse W. Boisseau was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PRIZE FIGHTING AND AMATEUR BOXING IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The bill (S. 4085) to prevent professional prize fighting and to authorize amateur boxing in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That whoever shall in the District of Columbia voluntarily engage in a pugilistic encounter shall be imprisoned for not more than five years. By the term "pugilistic encounter," as herein used, is meant any voluntary fight by blows by means of fists or otherwise, whether with or without gloves, between two or more men, for money or anything of value, except a suitably inscribed wreath, diploma, banner, badge, medal, or timepiece, not exceeding the value of $35, or upon the result of which any money or anything of value is bet or wagered, or to see which an admission fee of more than $2 is directly or indirectly charged.

SEC. 2. (a) There is hereby created for the District of Columbia a boxing commission to be composed of three members appointed by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia. No person shall be eligible for appointment to membership on the commission unless such person at the time of appointment is and for at least three years prior thereto has been a resident of the District of Columbia. The terms of office of the members of the commission first taking office after the approval of this act shall expire at the end of two years from the date of the approval of this act. A successor to a member of the commission shall be appointed in the same manner as the original members and shall have a term of office expiring two years from the date of the expiration of the term for which his predecessor was appointed; except that any person appointed to fill a vacancy occurring prior to the expiration of the term for which his predecessor was appointed, shall be appointed for the remainder of such term. The members of the commission shall receive no compensation for their services. The Commissioners of the District of Columbia shall furnish to the boxing commission such office space and clerical and other assistance as may be necessary.

(b) Subject to the approval of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, the commission shall have power (1) to cooperate with organizations engaged in the promotion and control of amateur boxing, (2) to supervise and regulate amateur boxing within the District of Columbia, and (3) to make such orders, rules, and regulations as the commission deems necessary for carrying out the powers herein conferred upon it.

(c) No person shall hold a boxing exhibition in the District of Columbia without a permit from the commission, but the commission shall not issue any such permit except to a club, university, college, school, or other organization or institution which the commission finds is interested in the promotion of amateur athletics. Each such permit shall be limited to a period of one day, except that in case of any interscholastic boxing meet or similar contest a permit may be used for the duration of such meet or contest. No such permit shall be issued to any person unless such person agrees to accord to the commission the right to examine the books of accounts and other records of such person relating to the boxing exhibition for which such permit is issued, and such permit shall so state on its face. A permit may be revoked at any time in the discretion of the commission.

(d) No individual shall engage in any boxing exhibition in the District of Columbia without a license from the commission. Such license shall entitle the licensee to engage in amateur boxing exhibitions in the District of Columbia for the period specified therein, but the commission shall not issue any such license to any individual if the commission finds that such individual has at any time or place engaged in any professional prize fight or in any boxing exhibition for which he received money as compensation or reward, and the commission shall revoke any such license if at any time, after notice and hearing, it makes such finding in respect of the licensee, and may revoke any such license at any time for violation by the licensee of any order, rule, or regulation of the commission, or for other cause.

(e) Any permit or license issued by the board shall not be valid for the purpose of holding or engaging in, respectively, any boxing exhibition which does not conform to the following conditions: (1) Such exhibition may consist of one or more bouts, but no such bout shall continue for more than four rounds; (2) no round shall exceed two minutes; (3) there shall be an interval of one minute between each round and the succeeding round; and (4) each contestant shall use gloves of not less than 8 ounces each in weight.

(f) The commission may charge for permits and for licenses such fees as will, in its opinion, defray the cost of issuance thereof and other necessary expenses of the commission.

(g) Any person who (1) holds any boxing exhibition in the District of Columbia without a permit valid and effective at the time, or (2) engages in any boxing exhibition in the District of Columbia without a license valid and effective at the time, or (3) violates any lawful order, rule, or regulation of the commission shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both.

(h) The term "person," as used in this act includes individuals, partnerships, corporations, and associations.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RESOLUTION PASSED OVER

The resolution (S. Res. 213) to investigate certain circumstances connected with the matter of additional tax assessments upon Hon. JAMES COUZENS was announced as next in order.

Mr. METCALF. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be passed over.

R. WILSON SELBY

The bill (S. 1364) for the relief of R. Wilson Selby was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to redeem in favor of R. Wilson Selby, of Middleburg, Va., one United States coupon note in the denomination of $100 of the Victory Liberty loan 4¾ per cent notes of 1922–1923, with interest at the rate of 4¾ per cent per annum, from June 15, 1920, to May 20, 1923, the said note, together with coupons due December 15, 1920, to May 20, 1923, inclusive, having been destroyed by fire, charred fragments of which have been presented to the Treasury Department: Provided, That the said note shall not have been previously presented or ascertained to be in existence and that no payment shall be made hereunder for any coupons which shall have been previously presented and paid: And provided further, That the said R. Wilson Selby shall file in the Treasury Department a bond in the penal sum of double the amount of the principal of said note and the unpaid interest which had accrued when the principal became due and payable in such form and with such surety or sureties as may be acceptable to the Secretary of the Treasury, with condition to indemnify and save harmless the United States from any loss on account of the note or the coupons thereof hereinbefore described.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MISSOURI RIVER BRIDGE, KANSAS CITY, KANS.

The bill (S. 4345) authorizing the Interstate Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Kansas City, Kans., was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to facilitate interstate commerce, improve the postal service, and provide for military and other purposes, the Interstate Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, be, and is hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Missouri River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near Kansas City, Kans., in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906, and subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act.

SEC. 2. There is hereby conferred upon the Interstate Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, all such rights and powers to enter upon lands and to acquire, condemn, occupy, possess, and use real estate and other property needed for the location, construction, operation, and maintenance of such bridge and its approaches as are possessed by railroad corporations for railroad purposes or by bridge corporations for bridge purposes in the State in which such real estate or other property is situated, upon making just compensation therefor, to be ascertained and paid according to the laws of such State, and the proceedings therefor shall be the same as in the condemnation or expropriation of property for public purposes in such State.

SEC. 3. The said Interstate Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, is hereby authorized to fix and charge tolls for transit over such bridge, and the rates of toll so fixed shall be the legal rates until changed by the Secretary of War under the authority contained in the act of March 23, 1906.

SEC. 4. After the completion of such bridge, as determined by the Secretary of War, either the State of Kansas, the State of Missouri, any public agency or political subdivision of either of such States within or adjoining which any part of such bridge is located, or any two or more of them jointly, may at any time acquire and take over all right, title, and interest in such bridge and its approaches, and any interest in real property necessary therefor, by purchase or by condemnation or expropriation, in accordance with the laws of either of such States governing the acquisition of private property for public purposes by condemnation or expropriation. If at any time after the expiration of 20 years after the completion of such bridge the same is acquired by condemnation or expropriation, the amount of damages or compensation to be allowed shall not include good will, going value, or prospective revenues or profits, but shall be limited to the sum of (1) the actual cost of constructing such bridge and its approaches, less a reasonable deduction for actual depreciation in value; (2) the actual cost of acquiring such interests in real property; (3) actual financing and promotion costs, not to exceed 10 per cent of the sum of the cost of constructing the bridge and its approaches and acquiring such interests in real property; and (4) actual expenditures for necessary improvements.

SEC. 5. If such bridge shall at any time be taken over or acquired by the States or public agencies or political subdivisions thereof, or by either of them, as provided in section 4 of this act, and if tolls are thereafter charged for the use thereof, the rates of toll shall be so adjusted as to provide a fund sufficient to pay for the reasonable cost of maintaining, repairing, and operating the bridge and its approaches under economical management, and to provide a sinking fund sufficient to amortize the amount paid therefor, including reasonable interest and financing cost, as soon as possible under reasonable charges, but within a period of not to exceed 20 years from the date of acquiring the same. After a sinking fund sufficient for such amortization shall have been so provided, such bridge shall thereafter be maintained and operated free of tolls, or the rates of toll shall thereafter be so adjusted as to provide a fund of not to exceed the amount necessary for the proper maintenance, repair, and operation of the bridge and its approaches under economical management. An accurate record of the amount paid for acquiring the bridge and its approaches, the actual expenditures for maintaining, repairing, and operating the same, and of the daily tolls collected shall be kept and shall be available for the information of all persons interested.

SEC. 6. The Interstate Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, shall within 90 days after the completion of such bridge file with the Secretary of War and with the highway departments of the States of Kansas and Missouri, a sworn itemized statement showing the actual original cost of constructing the bridge and its approaches, the actual cost of acquiring any interest in real property necessary therefor, and the actual financing and promotion costs. The Secretary of War may, and upon request of the highway department of either of such States shall, at any time within three years after the completion of such bridge, investigate such costs and determine the accuracy and the reasonableness of the costs alleged in the statement of costs so filed, and shall make a finding of the actual and reasonable costs of constructing, financing, and promoting such bridge; for the purpose of such investigation the said Interstate Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, shall make available all of its records in connection with the construction, financing, and promotion thereof. The findings of the Secretary of War as to the reasonable costs of the construction, financing, and promotion of the bridge shall be conclusive for the purposes mentioned in section 4 of this act, subject only to review in a court of equity for fraud or gross mistake.

SEC. 7. The right to sell, assign, transfer, and mortgage all the rights, powers, and privileges conferred by this act is hereby granted to the Interstate Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, and any corporation to which or any person to whom such rights, powers, and privileges may be sold, assigned, or transferred, or who shall acquire the same by mortgage foreclosure or otherwise, is hereby authorized and empowered to exercise the same as fully as though conferred herein directly upon such corporation or person.

SEC. 8. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WHITE RIVER BRIDGE NEAR CLARENDON, ARK.

The bill (S. 4344) granting the consent of Congress to the State Highway Commission of Arkansas to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across White River near Clarendon, Ark., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments, on page 1, line 7, after the word "Arkansas," to strike out "within five miles of the ferry on the highway between Clarendon and Stuttgart in the county of Monroe, in the State of Arkansas"; and on page 3, after line 2, to insert:

SEC. 3. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the State Highway Commission of Arkansas to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the White River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near Clarendon, Ark., in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. If tolls are charged for the use of such bridge, the rates of toll shall be so adjusted as to provide a fund sufficient (1) to pay the reasonable cost of maintaining, repairing, and operating the bridge and its approaches; (2) the interest on borrowed money necessarily required and financing charges necessarily incurred in connection with the construction of the bridge and its approaches; and (3) to provide a sinking fund sufficient to retire the bonds issued and sold in connection with such original construction. All revenue received from the bridge shall be applied to the foregoing purposes, and no bonds issued in connection with the construction of the bridge and its approaches shall be made to mature later than 25 years after the date of issue thereof.

After a fund sufficient to retire such bonds in accordance with their provisions shall have been so provided the bridge shall thereafter be maintained and operated as a free highway bridge upon which no tolls shall be charged. An accurate and itemized record of the original cost of the bridge and its approaches, the expenditures for maintaining, repairing, and operating the same, the interest charges paid, and the tolls charged and the daily revenues received from the bridge shall be kept by the State Highway Commission of Arkansas, and shall be available at all reasonable times for the information of all persons interested.

SEC. 3. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting the consent of Congress to the State Highway Commission of Arkansas to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across White River at or near Clarendon, Ark."

KANAWHA RIVER BRIDGE

The bill (S. 4353) authorizing Huntington Clarksburg Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Kanawha River at or near Winfield, Putnam County, W. Va., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment, on page 1, line 8, before the word "Kanawha," to strike out "Great," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to promote interstate commerce, improve the Postal Service, and provide for military and other purposes, the Huntington Clarksburg Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, be, and is hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Kanawha River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation at or near Winfield, W. Va., in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906, and subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act.

SEC. 2. After the completion of such bridge, as determined by the Secretary of War, either the State of West Virginia, any political subdivision thereof within or adjoining which any part of such bridge is located, or any two or more of them jointly, may at any time acquire and take over all right, title, and interest in such bridge and its approaches, and any interest in real property necessary therefor, by purchase or condemnation or expropriation, in accordance with the laws of such State governing the acquisition of private property for public purposes by condemnation or expropriation. If at any time after the expiration of 20 years after the completion of such bridge the same is acquired by condemnation or expropriation, the amount of damages or compensation to be allowed shall not include good will, going value, or prospective revenues or profits, but shall be limited to the sum of (1) the actual cost of constructing the bridge and its approaches, less a reasonable deduction for actual depreciation in value; (2) the actual cost of acquiring such interests in real property; (3) actual financing and promotion cost, not to exceed 10 per cent of the sum of the cost of constructing the bridge and its approaches and acquiring such interests in real property; and (4) actual expenditures for necessary improvements.

SEC. 3. If such bridge shall at any time be taken over or acquired by the State of West Virginia, or by any municipality or other political subdivision or public agency thereof, under the provisions of section 2 of this act, and if tolls are thereafter charged for the use thereof, the rates of toll shall be so adjusted as to provide a fund sufficient to pay for the reasonable cost of maintaining, repairing, and operating the bridge and its approaches under economical management and to provide a sinking fund sufficient to amortize the amount paid therefor, including reasonable interest and financing cost, as soon as possible under reasonable charges, but within a period of not to exceed 20 years from the date of acquiring the same. After a sinking fund sufficient for such amortization shall have been so provided, such bridge shall thereafter be maintained and operated free of tolls, or the rates of toll shall thereafter be so adjusted as to provide a fund of not to exceed the amount necessary for the proper maintenance, repair, and operation of the bridge and its approaches under economical management. An accurate record of the amount paid for acquiring the bridge and its approaches, the actual expenditures for maintaining, repairing, and operating the same, and of the daily tolls collected, shall be kept and shall be available for the information of all persons interested.

SEC. 4. The Huntington Clarksburg Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, shall, within 90 days after the completion of such bridge, file with the Secretary of War and with the highway department of the State of West Virginia a sworn itemized statement showing the actual original cost of constructing the bridge and its approaches, the actual cost of acquiring any interest in real property necessary therefor, and the actual financing and promotion costs. The Secretary of War may, and at the request of the highway department of the State of West Virginia shall, at any time within three years after the completion of such bridge, investigate such costs and determine the accuracy and the reasonableness of the costs alleged in the statement of costs so filed, and shall make a finding of the actual and reasonable costs of constructing, financing, and promoting such bridge; for the purpose of such investigation the said Huntington Clarksburg Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, shall make available all of its records in connection with the construction, financing, and promotion thereof. The findings of the Secretary of War as to the reasonable costs of the construction, financing, and promotion of the bridge shall be conclusive for the purposes mentioned in section 2 of this act, subject only to review in a court of equity for fraud or gross mistake.

SEC. 5. The right to sell, assign, transfer, and mortgage all the rights, powers, and privileges conferred by this act is hereby granted to Huntington Clarksburg Bridge Co., its successors and assigns; and any corporation to which or any person to whom such rights, powers, and privileges may be sold, assigned, or transferred, or who shall acquire the same by mortgage foreclosure or otherwise is hereby authorized and empowered to exercise the same as fully as though conferred herein directly upon such corporation or person.

SEC. 6. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill authorizing Huntington Clarksburg Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Kanawha River at or near Winfield, Putnam County, W. Va."

DES MOINES RIVER BRIDGE, CROTON, IOWA

The bill (S. 4357) authorizing Henry Horsey, Winfield Scott, A. L. Ballegoin, and Frank Schee, their heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, to construct and operate a bridge across the Des Moines River at or near Croton, Iowa, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment, on page 2, line 14, after the word "compensation," to strike out "theefor" and insert "therefor," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to facilitate interstate commerce, improve the postal service, and provide for military and other purposes, Henry Horsey, Winfield Scott, A. L. Ballegoin, and Frank Schee, their heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, be, and are hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Des Moines River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near Croton, Iowa, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906, and subject to the condition and limitations contained in this act.

SEC. 2. There is hereby conferred upon Henry Horsey, Winfield Scott, A. L. Ballegoin, and Frank Schee, their heirs, legal representaties, and assigns, all such rights and powers to enter upon lands and to acquire, condemn, occupy, possess, and use real estate and other property needed for the location, construction, operation, and maintenance of such bridge and its approaches as are possessed by railroad corporations for railroad purposes or by bridge corporations for bridge purposes in the State in which such real estate or other property is situated, upon making just compensation therefor, to be ascertained and paid according to the laws of such State, and the proceedings therefor shall be the same as in the condemnation or expropriation of property for public purposes in such State.

SEC. 3. The said Henry Horsey, Winfield Scott, A. L. Ballegoin, and Henry Schee, their heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, are hereby authorized to fix and charge tolls for transit over such bridge, and the rates of toll so fixed shall be the legal rates until changed by the Secretary of War under the authority contained in the Act of March 23, 1906.

SEC. 4. After the completion of such bridge, as determined by the Secretary of War, either the State of Iowa, the State of Missouri, any public agency or political subdivision of either of such States within or adjoining which any part of such bridge is located, or any two or more of them jointly, may at any time acquire and take over all right, title, and interest in such bridge and its approaches, and any interest in real property necessary therefor, by purchase or by condemnation or expropriation, in accordance with the laws of either of such States governing the acquisition of private property for public purposes by condemnation or expropriation. If at any time after the expiration of 10 years after the completion of such bridge the same is acquired by condemnation or expropriation, the amount of damages or compensation to be allowed shall not include good will, going value, or prospective revenues or profits, but shall be limited to the sum of (1) the actual cost of constructing such bridge and its approaches, less a reasonable deduction for actual depreciation in value; (2) the actual cost of acquiring such interests in real property; (3) actual financing and promotion costs, not to exceed 10 per cent of the sum of the cost of constructing the bridge and its approaches and acquiring such interests in real property; and (4) actual expenditures for necessary improvements.

SEC. 5. If such bridge shall at any time be taken over or acquired by the States or public agencies or political subdivisions thereof, or by either of them, as provided in section 4 of this act, and if tolls are thereafter charged for the use thereof, the rates of toll shall be so adjusted as to provide a fund sufficient to pay for the reasonable cost of maintaining, repairing, and operating the bridge and its approaches under economical management, and to provide a sinking fund sufficient to amortize the amount paid therefor, including reasonable interest and financing cost, as soon as possible under reasonable charges, but within a period of not to exceed 10 years from the date of acquiring the same. After a sinking fund sufficient for such amortization shall have been so provided, such bridge shall thereafter be maintained and operated free of tolls, or the rates of toll shall thereafter be so adjusted as to provide a fund of not to exceed the amount necessary for the proper maintenance, repair, and operation of the bridge and its approaches under economical management. An accurate record of the amount paid for acquiring the bridge and its approaches, the actual expenditures for maintaining, repairing, and operating the same, and of the daily tolls collected, shall be kept and shall be available for the information of all persons interested.

SEC. 6. The said Henry Horsey, Winfield Scott, A. L. Ballegoin, and Frank Schee, their heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, shall within 90 days after the completion of such bridge file with the Secretary of War and with the highway departments of the States of Iowa and Missouri a sworn itemized statement showing the actual original cost of constructing the bridge and its approaches, the actual cost of acquiring any interest in real property necessary therefor, and the actual financing and promotion costs. The Secretary of War may, and upon request of the highway department of either of such States shall, at any time within three years after the completion of such bridge investigate such costs and determine the accuracy and the reasonableness of the costs alleged in the statement of costs so filed, and shall make a finding of the actual and reasonable costs of constructing, financing, and promoting such bridge; for the purpose of such investigation the said Henry Horsey, Winfield Scott, A. L. Ballegoin, and Frank Schee, their heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, shall make available all of their records in connection with the construction, financing, and promotion thereof. The findings of the Secretary of War as to the reasonable costs of the construction, financing, and promotion of the bridge shall be conclusive for the purposes mentioned in section 4 of this act, subject only to review in a court of equity for fraud or gross mistake.

SEC. 7. The right to sell, assign, transfer, and mortgage all the rights, powers, and privileges conferred by this act is hereby granted to Henry Horsey, Winfield Scott, A. L. Ballegoin, and Frank Schee, their heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, and any corporation to which or any person to whom such rights, powers, and privileges may be sold, assigned, or transferred, or who shall acquire the same by mortgage foreclosure or otherwise, is hereby authorized and empowered to exercise the same as fully as though conferred herein directly upon such corporation or person.

SEC. 8. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill authorizing Henry Horsey, Winfield Scott, A. L. Ballegoin, and Frank Schee, their heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Des Moines River at or near Croton, Iowa."

MISSOURI RIVER BRIDGE, NIOBRARA, NEBR.

The bill (S. 4381) authorizing H. A. Rinder, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Niobrara, Nebr., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment, on page 5, line 12, after the words "all of," to strike out "its" and insert "his," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to facilitate interstate commerce, improve the postal service, and provide for military and other purposes, H. A. Rinder, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, be, and is hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Missouri River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near Niobrara, Nebr., in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906, and subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act.

SEC. 2. There is hereby conferred upon H. A. Rinder, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, all such rights and powers to enter upon lands and to acquire, condemn, occupy, possess, and use real estate and other property needed for the location, construction, operation, and maintenance of such bridge and its approaches as are possessed by railroad corporations for railroad purposes or by bridge corporations for bridge purposes in the State in which such real estate or other property is situated, upon making just compensation therefor, to be ascertained and paid according to the laws of such State, and the proceedings therefor shall be the same as in the condemnation or expropriation of property for public purposes in such State.

SEC. 3. The said H. A. Rinder, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, is hereby authorized to fix and charge tolls for transit over such bridge, and the rates of toll so fixed shall be the legal rates until changed by the Secretary of War under the authority contained in the act of March 23, 1906.

SEC. 4. After the completion of such bridge, as determined by the Secretary of War, either the State of Nebraska, the State of South Dakota, any public agency or political subdivision of either of such States, within or adjoining which any part of such bridge is located, or any two or more of them jointly, may at any time acquire and take over all right, title, and interest in such bridge and its approaches, and any interest in real property necessary therefor, by purchase or by condemnation or expropriation, in accordance with the laws of either of such States governing the acquisition of private property for public purposes by condemnation or expropriation. If at any time after the expiration of 20 years after the completion of such bridge the same is acquired by condemnation or expropriation, the amount of damages or compensation to be allowed shall not include good will, going value, or prospective revenues or profits, but shall be limited to the sum of (1) the actual cost of constructing such bridge and its approaches, less a reasonable deduction for actual depreciation in value; (2) the actual cost of acquiring such interests in real property; (3) actual financing and promotion costs, not to exceed 10 per cent of the sum of the cost of constructing the bridge and its approaches and acquiring such interests in real property; and (4) actual expenditures for necessary improvements.

SEC. 5. If such bridge shall at any time be taken over or acquired by the States or public agencies or political subdivisions thereof, or by either of them, as provided in section 4 of this act, and if tolls are thereafter charged for the use thereof, the rates of toll shall be so adjusted as to provide a fund sufficient to pay for the reasonable cost of maintaining, repairing, and operating the bridge and its approaches under economical management, and to provide a sinking fund sufficient to amortize the amount paid therefor, including reasonable interest and financing cost, as soon as possible under reasonable charges, but within a period of not to exceed 20 years from the date of acquiring the same. After a sinking fund sufficient for such amortization shall have been so provided, such bridge shall thereafter be maintained and operated free of tolls, or the rates of toll shall thereafter be so adjusted as to provide a fund of not to exceed the amount necessary for the proper maintenance, repair, and operation of the bridge and its approaches under economical management. An accurate record of the amount paid for acquiring the bridge and its approaches, the actual expenditures for maintaining, repairing, and operating the same and of the daily tolls collected, shall be kept and shall be available for the information of all persons interested.

SEC. 6. H. A. Rinder, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, shall within 90 days after the completion of such bridge file with the Secretary of War and with the highway departments of the States of Nebraska and South Dakota, a sworn itemized statement showing the actual original cost of constructing the bridge and its approaches, the actual cost of acquiring any interest in real property necessary therefor, and the actual financing and promotion costs. The Secretary of War may, and upon request of the highway department of either of such States shall, at any time within three years after the completion of such bridge, investigate such costs and determine the accuracy and the reasonableness of the costs alleged in the statement of costs so filed and shall make a finding of the actual and reasonable costs of constructing, financing, and promoting such bridge. For the purpose of such investigation the said H. A. Rinder, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, shall make available all of his records in connection with the construction, financing, and promotion thereof. The findings of the Secretary of War as to the reasonable costs of the construction, financing, and promotion of the bridge shall be conclusive for the purposes mentioned in section 4 of this act, subject only to review in a court of equity for fraud or gross mistake.

SEC. 7. The right to sell, assign, transfer, and mortgage all the rights, powers, and privileges conferred by this act is hereby granted to H. A. Rinder, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, and any corporation to which or any person to whom such rights, powers and privileges may be sold, assigned, or transferred, or who shall acquire the same by mortgage foreclosure or otherwise, is hereby authorized and empowered to exercise the same as fully as though conferred herein directly upon such corporation or person.

SEC. 8. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BEAR CREEK, MD., BRIDGE

The bill (S. 4401) authorizing Elmer J. Cook, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across Bear Creek at or near Lovel Point, Baltimore County, Md., and a point opposite in Baltimore County, Md., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment, on page 2, line 1, after the word "Maryland," to strike out "and a point opposite in Baltimore County, Md.," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to promote interstate commerce, improve the postal service, and provide for military and other purposes, Elmer J. Cook, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, be, and is hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across Bear Creek, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near Lovel Point, Baltimore County, Md., in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906, and subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act.

SEC. 2. After the completion of such bridge, as determined by the Secretary of War, either the State of Maryland, any political subdivisions thereof within or adjoining which any part of such bridge is located, or any two or more of them jointly, may at any time acquire and take over all right, title, and interest in such bridge and its approaches and any interests in real property necessary therefor, by purchase or condemnation, in accordance with the laws of such State governing the acquisition of private property for public purposes by condemnation. If at any time after the expiration of 20 years after the completion of such bridge and its approaches the same is acquired by condemnation, the amount of damages or compensation to be allowed shall not include good will, going value, or prospective revenues or profits, but shall be limited to the sum of (1) the actual cost of constructing such bridge and its approaches, less a reasonable deduction for actual depreciation in value; (2) the actual cost of acquiring such interests in real property; (3) actual financing and promotion cost, not to exceed 10 per cent of the sum of the cost of constructing the bridge and its approaches and acquiring such interest in real property; and (4) actual expenditures for necessary improvements.

SEC. 3. If such bridge shall at any time be taken over or acquired by any municipality or other political subdivision or subdivisions of the State of Maryland under the provisions of section 2 of this act, and if tolls are charged for the use thereof, the rates of toll shall be so adjusted as to provide a fund sufficient to pay for the cost of maintaining, repairing, and operating the bridge and its approaches, and to provide a sinking fund sufficient to amortize the amount paid for such bridge and its approaches as soon as possible under reasonable charges, but within a period of not to exceed 20 years from the date of acquiring same. After a sinking fund sufficient to amortize the cost of acquiring the bridge and its approaches shall have been provided, such bridge shall thereafter be maintained and operated free of tolls, or the rates of toll shall thereafter be so adjusted as to provide a fund of not to exceed the amount necessary for the proper care, repair, maintenance, and operation of the bridge and its approaches. An accurate record of the amount paid for the bridge and its approaches, the expenditures for operating, repairing, and maintaining the same, and of daily tolls collected shall be kept and shall be available for the information of all persons interested.

SEC. 4. Elmer J. Cook, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, shall, within 90 days after the completion of such bridge, file with the Secretary of War, and with the highway department of the State of Maryland, a sworn itemized statement showing the actual original cost of constructing the bridge and its approaches, the actual cost of acquiring any interest in real property necessary therefor, and the actual financing and promotion costs. The Secretary of War may, and at the request of the highway department of the State of Maryland shall, at any time within three years after the completion of such bridge, investigate such costs and determine the accuracy and the reasonableness of the costs alleged in the statement of costs so filed, and shall make a finding of the actual and reasonable costs so filed, and shall make a finding of the actual and reasonable costs of constructing, financing, and promoting such bridge; for the purpose of such investigation the said Elmer J. Cook, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns shall make available all records in connection with the construction, financing, and promotion thereof. The findings of the Secretary of War as to the reasonable costs of the construction, financing, and promotion of the bridge shall be conclusive for the purposes mentioned in section 2 of this act, subject only to review in a court of equity for fraud or gross mistake.

SEC. 5. The right to sell, assign, transfer, and mortgage all rights, powers, and privileges conferred by this act is hereby granted to Elmer J. Cook, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, and any corporation to which or any person to whom such rights, powers, and privileges may by sold, assigned, or transferred, or who shall acquire the same by mortgage foreclosure or otherwise, is hereby authorized and empowered to exercise the same as fully as though conferred herein directly upon such corporation or person.

SEC. 6. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill authorizing Elmer J. Cook, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across Bear Creek at or near Lovel Point, Baltimore County, Md."

SALARIES OF POSTMASTERS

The bill (S. 1679) amending the act of February 28, 1925, reclassifying the salaries of postmasters, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. PHIPPS. Mr. President, in making the report of the Senate committee amendments, an error was made on page 2, line 6, where the figures "$6,000" was changed to read "$5,500." I should like to perfect the Senate amendments by reinserting the figures "$6,000." I will say that that is the present rate of salary paid.

All of the items up to line 6, inclusive, are the present-day salaries. The Senate committee has made the advances from that point in $500 steps, as a rule, instead of $1,000 steps, as suggested in the original bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, this is a bill for the purpose of increasing the salaries of postmasters?

Mr. PHIPPS. Those of the larger cities, where no increases were granted at the time of the last revision. In a city like New York, for instance, it is proposed to pay a salary of $10,000 per year. I find that in New York the present rate is $8,000 per year. This bill as now proposed, according to the figures of the department, makes a total increase of $49,500 for these larger offices in the United States, and it takes care of 52 postmasters in the larger cities.

Mr. KING. The Senator knows that if we increase those, there will be a demand for an increase of all.

Mr. PHIPPS. No; I do not agree with the Senator in that. The others were increased and these were not.

Mr. KING. Well, we will have an opportunity to consider the bill again. Let the bill go over.

Mr. PHIPPS. There is no objection to completing the consideration of the amendments?

Mr. KING. None.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendments of the committee will be stated.

The first amendment was on page 2, line 6, after "$1,500,000," to strike out "$6,000" and insert "$5,500."

The amendment was rejected.

The remaining amendments were, on page 2, line 7, after "$3,000,000," to strike out "$7,000" and insert "$6,500"; in line 8, after "$7,000,000," to strike out "$8,000" and insert "$7,500"; in line 9, after "$10,000,000" to strike out "$9,000" and insert "$8,500"; in line 10, after "$20,000,000," to strike out "$10,000" and insert "$9,000"; in line 11, after "$40,000,000," to strike out "$11,000" and insert "$9,500," and in line 12 to strike out "$12,000" and insert "$10,000," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the second paragraph under the heading "Reclassification of postal salaries," in section 1 of title 1 of the act of February 28, 1925, reclassifying the salaries of postmasters be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"First class—$40,000, but less than $50,000, $3,200; $50,000, but less than $60,000, $3,300; $60,000, but less than $75,000, $3,400; $75,000, but less than $90,000, $3,500; $90,000, but less than $120,000, $3,600; $120,000, but less than $150,000, $3,700; $150,000, but less than $200,000, $3,800; $200,000, but less than $250,000, $3,900; $250,000, but less than $300,000, $4,000; $300,000, but less than $400,000, $4,200; $400,000, but less than $500,000, $4,500; $500,000, but less than $600,000, $5,000; $600,000, but less than $1,500,000, $6,000; $1,500,000, but less than $3,000,000, $6,500; $3,000,000, but less than $7,000,000, $7,500; $7,000,000, but less than $10,000,000, $8,500; $10,000,000, but less than $20,000,000, $9,000; $20,000,000, but less than $40,000,000, $9,500; $40,000,000 and upward, $10,000."

The amendments were agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. As requested, the bill will be passed over.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 3938) relating to the District Court of the Canal Zone was announced as next in order.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, may we have an explanation as to the manner in which this bill amends existing law?

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, on behalf of the junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. WATERMAN], I ask that the bill go over. The junior Senator from Colorado requested me to ask that it go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOSEPH F. FRIEND

The bill (H. R. 6842) for the relief of Joseph F. Friend was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ASSESSMENT AND COLLECTION OF TAXES IN THE DISTRICT

The bill (S. 4441) to amend the laws relating to assessment and collection of taxes in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with an amendment, on page 5, line 8, after the figures "1902," to strike out "and returns made during March, 1928, shall stand for the returns of the following fiscal year" and insert "Provided, That this section shall be effective on July 1, 1929," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the remedies provided in the act of July 1, 1902, for the collection of taxes on tangible personal property, shall be available also for the collection of taxes on intangible property.

In addition to the statutory remedies, all common-law and all equitable remedies shall also be available, either separately or concurrently with statutory remedies, as may be deemed advisable, for the collection of all taxes and special assessments of any kind whatsoever.

SEC. 2. Where real estate is levied upon for the nonpayment of personal taxes of any kind, and the best price offered at an auction sale is not sufficient to pay taxes, interest, and penalties, said real estate may be sold under decree of the equity court as provided by law.

SEC. 3. From and after the close of the current calendar year, motor vehicles taxable by the District of Columbia shall be assessed at their value as of January 1, each year, by the Board of Personal Tax Appraisers, subject to revision on appeal by the Board of Personal Tax Appeals, at the rate fixed for the taxation of other tangible personal property for the fiscal year ending the following June 30. The first assessment made under this section shall be at one half such rate, to cover only the period from the following July 1 to December 31. The tax so assessed shall constitute the personal-property tax on such vehicles for the ensuing calendar year, and no motor vehicle registration tag for any tax year shall be issued for motor vehicles subject to taxation on January 1 each year by the District of Columbia until the amount of such tax has been paid in full: Provided, That this section shall not apply to motor vehicles constituting the stock in trade of dealers, which shall be taxed as now provided by law. The Commissioners of the District of Columbia shall make such rules and regulations as may be necessary or desirable to enforce the provisions of this section.

SEC. 4. Section 2 of the act of Congress of July 3, 1926, entitled "An act to amend sections 5 and 6 of the act of Congress making appropriations to provide for the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, approved July 1, 1902, and for other purposes," be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 2. Any person maintaining a place of abode in the District of Columbia on the 1st day of July of a taxable year, and for the three months prior thereto, shall be considered as a resident for the purpose of assessment on intangible property wherever located, unless evidence shall be submitted to the assessor of the District of Columbia, satisfactory to him, that such intangible personal property or the income thereof is taxed to said person in some other jurisdiction, or that the assets of a corporation or association represented by shares or certificates constituting such intangible personal property are taxed by the State in which such corporation or association is chartered or organized and in which such person has a legal residence, in lieu of a tax upon such shares or certificates: Provided, That Cabinet officers and persons in the service of the United States Government elected for a definite term of office shall not be considered as residents of the District of Columbia for the purposes of this section."

SEC. 5. Section 5 of the said act of 1926 is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 5. Real-estate taxes and personal taxes of all kinds, excepting the tax on motor vehicles as herein provided, shall hereafter be payable semiannually in equal installments in the months of September and

March. If either of said installments on real or personal property shall not be paid within the months when the same is due, said installments shall thereupon be in arrears and delinquent, and there shall be added and collected with said tax a penalty of 1 per cent per month upon the amount thereof for the period of such delinquency, and such installment or installments, with the penalties thereon, shall constitute a delinquent tax to be collected in the manner now provided by law.

"If any person neglects or refuses to file a return of personal property as required by law, and the assessor certifies to the board of commissioners that, in his opinion, the best information obtainable does not afford a satisfactory basis for assessment, the board of commissioners may, by petition to the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia for mandamus against such person, compel the filing of a sworn return, and in such case the court shall require the person at fault to pay all expenses of the proceeding."

SEC. 6. Section 6 of the said act of 1926 is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 6. That returns of all property other than automobiles shall be made in the month of July in the fiscal year in which the assessment is levied and the value of such property shall be made as of the first day of that month except that merchants shall continue to return their average stock in trade as provided in said act of 1902: Provided, That this section shall be effective on July 1, 1929."

SEC. 7. Section 7 of the said act of 1902 is hereby amended to read as follows: "That the Board of Personal Tax Appeals shall meet on the first Monday of September of each year and continue in session until the first Monday in March of the following year, or until such time as their work shall have been completed."

SEC. 8. That all acts or parts of acts inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JESS T. FEARS

The bill (S. 4454) for the relief of Jess T. Fears was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Jess T. Fears, of Greer, Ariz., out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $60 in full compensation for a loss sustained by him by reason of a horse, owned and used by him in the performance of his official duties as forest ranger, being killed by unknown parties.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CON MURPHY

The bill (S. 4187) for the relief of Con Murphy was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2,000 to Con Murphy for personal injuries sustained by him while in the performance of his duty as janitor in the custodian service, Federal Building, Cheyenne, Wyo.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HIGGINS LUMBER CO. (INC.)

The bill (H. R. 8031) for the relief of Higgins Lumber Co. (Inc.) was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PRESS PUBLISHING CO.

The bill (H. R. 4839) for the relief of the Press Publishing Co., Marianna, Ark., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN P. STAFFORD

The bill (H. R. 5322) for the relief of John P. Stafford was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT OF FRATERNAL BENEFICIAL ASSOCIATION LAW OF THE DISTRICT

The bill (S. 3844) amending the fraternal beneficial association law for the District of Columbia as to payment of death benefits was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 749 of Subchapter XII of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia is hereby amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 749. Fraternal beneficial associations defined: A fraternal beneficial association is hereby declared to be a corporation, society, order, or voluntary association, formed or organized and carried on for the sole benefit of its members and their beneficiaries, and not for profit, having a lodge system with ritualistic form of work and representative form of government, making provision for the payment of benefits in case of death. Each such association may make provision for the payment of benefits in case of sickness, temporary or permanent physical disability, either as a result of disease, accident, or old age: Provided, That the period in life at which physical disability benefits on account of old age commences shall not be under 70 years, or the age of expectancy from the time of entering, subject to their compliance with its laws. Any such association may create and maintain a reserve, emergency, or benefit fund in accordance with its laws. Any such association having a reserve, emergency, or benefit fund may, in addition to the benefits hereinbefore named, pay withdrawal benefits, not exceeding the contributions of such member, to a member unable or unwilling to continue membership, provided such membership shall continue not less than three successive years. Such association may also, after 10 years of membership, apply its funds and accumulations as its laws provide or the association and members agree. The fund from which the payments of such benefits shall be made and the fund from which the expenses of such association shall be defrayed shall be derived from assessments, dues, and other payments collected from its members or otherwise. The payment of death benefits shall be to the families, heirs, blood relatives, affianced husband, affianced wife, father-in-law, mother-in-law, son-in-law, daughter in-law, brother-in-law, sister-in-law, stepfather, stepmother, stepchildren, stepbrother, stepsister, children or parent by legal adoption, member's estate, a charitable, benevolent, educational, or eleemosynary institution, or to persons dependent upon the member or upon whom the member is dependent. Such association shall be governed by this subchapter, and shall be exempt from the provisions of insurance laws of the United States relating to the District of Columbia, and no law hereafter passed shall apply to them unless they be expressly designated therein: Provided, however, That the fact that any such association has outstanding agreements with its members for the payment of benefits other than those hereinbefore specified, if it is making no new contracts of that character and is retiring those already existing, shall not exclude such association from the operation of this subchapter."

SEC. 2. All acts or parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JUVENILE INSURANCE BY FRATERNAL BENEFICIAL ASSOCIATIONS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The bill (S. 3694) regulating juvenile insurance by fraternal beneficial associations in the District of Columbia was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with an amendment, on page 2, line 5, after the figure "6," to strike out "or such other mortality table as may be approved by the superintendent of insurance" and insert "or the society may use a table based upon its own juvenile experience of at least 10 years and covering not less than 100,000 lives with a rate of interest not greater than 4 per cent per annum, or upon a higher standard," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That this act shall be known as the juvenile fraternal act.

SEC. 2. That any fraternal benefit society authorized to do business in the District of Columbia may provide in its laws, in addition to other benefits provided for therein, for insurance and/or annuities upon the lives of children, at any age, upon the application of some adult person, as the laws of such society may provide. Any such society may, at its option, organize and operate branches for such children, and membership in local lodges and initiation therein shall not be required of such children, nor shall they have any voice in the management of the society.

SEC. 3. That contributions to be made upon such certificates shall be based upon the Standard Industrial Mortality Table or the English Life Table No. 6, or the society may use a table based upon its own juvenile experience of at least 10 years and covering not less than 100,000 lives with a rate of interest not greater than 4 per cent per annum, or upon a higher standard.

SEC. 4. Any society issuing such benefit certificates shall maintain on all such certificates the reserve required by the standard of mortality and interest adopted by the society for computing contributions as provided in section 3.

SEC. 5. Any society shall have full power to provide for means of enforcing payment of contributions, designation of beneficiaries, and changing such designations, and in all other respects for the regulation, government, and control of such certificates and all rights, obligations, and liabilities incident thereto and connected therewith, not at variance with the provisions of this act.

SEC. 6. All acts or parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Wisconsin, in view of the fact that there is pending before the Committee on the District of Columbia a general insurance bill, dealing with insurance companies, whether these piecemeal measures are necessary, and may there not be some conflict arising between this legislation and the measure which the Senator has in charge, and which is before our committee?

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, the insurance code which is under consideration by the Committee on the District of Columbia in no way deals with fraternal benefit associations. They are particularly excluded, and it would be entirely impracticable to include those associations in the general code that is proposed. For that reason these separate bills have been introduced, and are recommended for passage.

Mr. KING. I have no objection.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DISTRICT JUDGE, NORTHERN DISTRICT OF MISSISSIPPI

The bill (S. 1965) to authorize the appointment of a district judge for the northern district of Mississippi was announced as next in order.

Mr. NEELY. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

ADDITIONAL CIRCUIT JUDGE, SECOND JUDICIAL CIRCUIT

The bill (S. 1976) for the appointment of an additional circuit judge for the second judicial circuit was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, an additional circuit judge for the second judicial circuit.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADDITIONAL JUSTICE, SUPREME COURT, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The bill (S. 4127) to provide for the appointment of an additional justice of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. BRATTON. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

SALARY INCREASES

The bill (H. R. 6518) to amend the salary rates contained in the compensation schedules of the act of March 4, 1923, entitled "An act to provide for the classification of civilian positions within the District of Columbia and in the field services," was announced as next in order.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, this is the pay bill of the Government employees, and since we are so near the foot of the calendar, and since we are reaching it so much earlier than we expected, I would ask that it be passed until we complete the call of the calendar. Then we will have time to take it up and consider it, I think, satisfactorily to every one.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, that is entirely agreeable to me, provided that when we reach the end of the calendar as printed we may recur for a moment to the bill which I asked to have go over temporarily, and if at that time the Senator from Washington shall not have returned to the Chamber, he authorized me to say that he has no objection to the passage of the bill.

Mr. BROOKHART. I have no objection.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Then I shall be very glad to accede to the request of the Senator from Iowa.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Iowa? The Chair hears none, and the bill will be passed over without prejudice to be taken up as suggested by the Senator from Iowa and the Senator from California.

JOHNS-MANVILLE CORPORATION

The bill (S. 1547) for the relief of the Johns-Manville Corporation was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have a request from a Senator that this bill shall go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

MAJ. CHARLES F. EDDY

The bill (S. 3942) for the relief of Maj. Charles F. Eddy was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to credit the account of Maj. Charles F. Eddy, Finance Department, United States Army, on account of the loss of public funds amounting to $2,872.85, for which he was responsible, and which were intrusted to Warrant Officer Clark T. Browning, United States Army, at Fort Bragg, N. C., on or about January 14, 1928, who embezzled these funds and deserted the service.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

STOCK-RAISING HOMESTEADS

The bill (S. 3949) to amend section 10 of an act entitled "An act to provide for stock-raising homesteads, and for other purposes," approved December 29, 1916 (Public, No. 290, 64th Cong.), was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys with an amendment, on page 2, line 7, after the word "made" insert a comma and the words "but any mineral location or entry made hereunder shall be in accordance with certain rules, regulations, and restrictions as may be described by the Secretary of the Interior," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following be added as an additional proviso to section 10 of an act entitled "An act to provide for stock-raising homesteads, and for other purposes," approved December 29, 1916 (Public, No. 290, 64th Cong.):

"Provided further, That the withdrawal from entry of lands necessary to insure access by the public to watering places reserved hereunder shall not apply to deposits of coal and other minerals in the lands so withdrawn, and that the provisions of section 9 of this act are hereby made applicable to said deposits in lands embraced in such withdrawals heretofore or hereafter made, but any mineral location or entry made hereunder shall be in accordance with such rules, regulations, and restrictions as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN P. WHIDDON

The bill (S. 4234) authorizing the purchase of certain lands by John P. Whiddon was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to issue to John P. Whiddon, of Inverness, Fla., patent for lots 7 and 8, and lots 4 and 5, section 9, township 19 south, range 20 east, Tallahassee meridian, Fla., upon payment for the same at the rate of $1.25 per acre.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SETH DEAN

The bill (S. 4327) to relinquish the title of the United States to land in the claim of Seth Dean, situate in the county of Washington, State of Alabama, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all the right, title, and interest of the United States in and to section 41, all in township 3 north, range 1 east, St. Stephens meridian, Washington County, Ala., containing 640 acres, as shown on a plat of survey made by Thomas Freeman, surveyor of United States land south of Tennessee, approved January 26, 1849, and segregated thereon as the claim of Seth Dean be, and the same is hereby, released, relinquished, and confirmed by the United States to the equitable owners of the equitable titles thereto, and to their respective heirs and assigns forever, as fully and completely, in every respect whatever, as could be done by patents issued according to law: Provided, That this act shall amount only to a relinquishment of any title that the United States has, or is supposed to have, in and to any of said lands, and shall not be construed to abridge, impair, injure, prejudice, or divest in any manner any valid right, title, or interest of any person or body corporate whatever, the true intent of this act being to concede and abandon all right, title, and interest of the United States to those persons, estates, firms, or corporations who would be the equitable owners of said lands by reason of long continuous possession under color of title with claim of ownership, or otherwise, under the laws of the State of Alabama, including the laws of prescription and limitation, in the absence of the said interest, title, and estate of the United States.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from South Dakota the number included in this list, and the aggregate amount which will be added?

Mr. NORBECK. This is the bill about which the Senator was talking to me this afternoon. It carries about half a million dollars. There are twelve or fourteen hundred names in it. The increases are very moderate, and the committee has worked very carefully, and has held them down in pretty good shape.

Mr. KING. To which war does it refer?

Mr. NORBECK. To the Civil War.

Mr. KING. I have no objection.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate recur to the consideration of Calendar No. 1138, House bill 12814, to increase the efficiency of the Air Corps.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is only one more bill on the calendar.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I understand, but I also understood that there was a unanimous-consent agreement for the taking up of some other bill when that one is finished. I wanted to put my request in before we reached that. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK] agrees that if he may present his amendment and have a vote on it, he will not interpose any further objection to the passage of the bill. Inasmuch as the committee was unanimous, inasmuch as everyone has agreed to the passage of the bill, and agreed on its necessity, I hope the Senator will let us consider it. I would be willing to agree to a limitation of 10 minutes for each side on all debate on the bill.

Mr. KING. The understanding is we will complete the calendar before that request is granted?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Yes; complete the call of the calendar before taking up Calendar No. 1138.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, could that not go over until we complete the call of the calendar?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Yes; that is the condition on which I make the request, that we complete the calendar and then go to that.

Mr. HEFLIN. I ask for the regular order. We can do that after we get through with the calendar. We have some other resolutions to take up a little later on.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I am asking that we complete the call of the calendar, and then take up Calendar 1138.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, have we not an understanding that we are going to take up the bill affecting the salaries to-night? I would not want to see anything interfere with that.

Mr. McKELLAR. As I understand the Senator from Pennsylvania, Calendar No. 1200, the salary bill, comes before the bill to which he is now referring.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I thought that bill had been passed over.

Mr. McKELLAR. But we are to return to it.

Mr. COPELAND. I do not think we ought to pass over the salary bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The salary bill will be considered after the consideration of the next bill on the calendar, which is the last bill to be called.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Regular order!

ENGINEER FIELD CLERKS, AMERICAN EXPEDITIONARY FORCES

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, I ask the Senate to reconsider the vote by which the adverse report on Senate bill 3210 was adopted, and that the bill be allowed to remain on the calendar.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

ADDITIONAL BUILDINGS FOR LIBRARY OF CONGRESS

The bill (H. R. 9355) to provide for the acquisition of certain property in the District of Columbia for the Library of Congress, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PAY AND ALLOWANCES, MILITARY SERVICE

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, I now ask that we return to Calendar No. 1038, Senate bill 3692, to amend the act entitled "An act to readjust the pay and allowances of the commissioned and enlisted personnel of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, Coast and Geodetic Survey, and Public Health Service," approved June 10, 1922, as amended. The Senator from Washington has now returned to the Chamber.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs with amendments, on page 2, line 9, after the word "officers," insert the following: "with creditable records"; on page 3, after line 22, insert a new section, section 4, in the following language:

SEC. 4. That nothing contained herein shall be construed so as to reduce the pay, allowances, emoluments, or other benefits, including the benefits of the act of June 10, 1926 (44 Stat. L. 725), that any person now in the service is receiving at the date of the passage of this act.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to readjust the pay and allowances of the commissioned and enlisted personnel of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, Coast and Geodetic Survey, and Public Health Service," approved June 10, 1922, as amended, is hereby further amended by striking out in paragraph 12 of section 1 of said act the following clause, lines 12, 13, 14, and 15 of said paragraph, volume 42, Statutes at Large, page 627, "Commissioned warrant officers on the active list with creditable records shall, after six years' commissioned service, receive the pay of the second period, and after 12 years' commissioned service, receive the pay of the third period," and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"Commissioned warrant officers with creditable records on the active list shall receive pay as follows: During the first 10 years of commissioned service, the pay of the second period; after 10 years of commissioned service, the pay of the third period; after 20 years of commissioned service, the pay of the fourth period."

SEC. 2. That section 7 of said act is hereby amended by substituting a colon for the period, volume 42, Statutes at Large, page 629, line 4, and adding the following proviso at the end of said paragraph:

"Provided further, That when the total base pay, pay for length of service, and allowances for subsistence and rental of quarters authorized in this act for any commissioned warrant officer shall exceed $5,000 a year, the amount of the allowances to which such officer is entitled shall be reduced by the amount above $5,000; and the pay and allowances of a commissioned warrant officer receiving the pay and allowances of the second pay period shall not exceed $3,158 a year for the first three years of commissioned service, $3,258 a year for the next three years of commissioned service, $3,358 a year for the next three years, and $3,458 a year for from 9 to 10 years' commissioned service."

SEC. 3. That section 10 of said act is hereby amended by striking out in paragraph 1, lines 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5 of said paragraph, volume 42, Statutes at Large, page 630, the following:

"That on and after July 1, 1922, the monthly base pay of warrant officers of the Navy and Coast Guard shall be as follows: During the first 6 years of service at sea, $153; on shore, $135; during the second 6 years of service at sea, $168; on shore, $147; after 12 years' service at sea, $189; on shore, $168," and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"That hereafter the monthly base pay of warrant officers of the Navy and Coast Guard shall be as follows: During the first 6 years of service, $153; during the second 6 years of service, $168; after 12 years' service, $189."

SEC. 4. That nothing contained herein shall be construed so as to reduce the pay, allowances, emoluments, or other benefits, including the benefits of the act of June 10, 1926 (44 Stat. L. 725), that any person now in the service is receiving at the date of the passage of this act.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, I understand the Senator from Washington wants to offer an amendment.

Mr. JONES. I desire to offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. The Senator from Washington proposes to add a new section, as follows:

SEC. 5. That the Director of the Coast and Geodetic Survey shall have the relative rank and the pay and allowances of rear admiral, lower half of the Navy.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I have no objection to the amendment of the Senator from Washington.

Mr. KING. Is this a bill for the purpose of advancing people in the Coast Guard Service to the rank of admiral and rear admiral? I thought it was a bill for the purpose of readjusting the compensation of certain persons in the Coast Guard Service.

Mr. JONES. Let me explain. Under existing law the Director and the field engineer of the Coast and Geodetic Survey have relative rank as officers of the Navy. They are embraced in the title of this act.

The director of the survey is the only head of a bureau in the Department of Commerce who is getting less than $7,500 a year. Every other one is getting at least $7,500 a year. I think the Senator is fully acquainted with the ability and the work of Col. E. Lester Jones. He is the man who is at the head of the Coast and Geodetic Survey at this time. He has about 1,500 employees under him. There are two under him who get the same pay he now receives, and there are 7 or 8 or 9 under him who get more pay than he receives now. It does not seem to me that that is right. The services of Colonel Jones, I am sure, equal the service of the head of any bureau of the Department of Commerce, or any other department, for that matter. I know the Senator has been acquainted with him for a long time. I have been brought in close touch with him, and I think if any of the heads of these bureaus deserve compensation equal to that of the heads of bureaus of other departments, Colonel Jones does. In addition to serving as the head of the Coast and Geodetic Survey, he is on the International Boundary Commission, for which he gets no increased pay. He does not even get his traveling expenses in connection with the International Boundary Commission.

Mr. KING. The Senator misapprehended my inquiry. I did not understand that this was a measure for the purpose of advancing persons in the Coast Guard and the Geodetic Survey to higher positions.

Mr. JONES. I am not thoroughly familiar with the other features of this bill, but it seemed to me from the title that this amendment was very appropriate.

Mr. FLETCHER. Will not the Senator state his amendment? I quite agree with all he says.

Mr. JONES. I will ask that the amendment be read.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment.

Mr. JONES. As I said, the law now places these officers on an equality in rank with those in the Navy.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, when the Coast Guard and the Geodetic Survey were made a part of the Navy, I think I was chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs. We fixed the pay and allowances of the head of the Coast and Geodetic Survey at those of a captain. There has been no possibility of any increase. All the other chiefs of bureaus in the Navy get the pay of rear admirals. All this amendment does is to extend to Colonel Jones what the chiefs of all other bureaus receive.

Mr. HALE. No, Mr. President; I think the Senator is in error in that. The chiefs of bureaus in the Navy get the pay of rear admiral of the upper half.

Mr. SWANSON. This is limited to the lower half. This would provide for less than the others get.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT OF SALARY RATES IN THE CIVIL SERVICE

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under the unanimous-consent agreement the Senate reverts to Calendar No. 1200, and the Chair now lays the bill before the Senate.

The bill (H. R. 6518) to amend the salary rates contained in the compensation schedules of the act of March 4, 1923, entitled "An act to provide for the classification of civilian positions within the District of Columbia and in the field services," was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The bill had been reported from the Committee on Civil Service with amendments.

The first amendment of the Committee on Civil Service was, under the heading "Professional and scientific service," on page 2, line 16, before the figures "$2,400," to strike out "and" and after the same figures to insert a comma and "$2,500, and $2,600," so as to read:

Grade 1 in this service, which may be referred to as the junior professional grade, shall include all classes of positions the duties of which are to perform, under immediate supervision, simple and elementary work requiring professional, scientific, or technical training as herein specified but little or no experience.

The annual rates of compensation for positions in this grade shall be $2,000, $2,100, $2,200, $2,300, $2,400, $2,500, and $2,600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 2, before the figures "$3,000," to strike out "and," and after the same figures to insert a comma and "$3,100, and $3,200," so as to read:

Grade 2 in this service, which may be referred to as the assistant professional grade, shall include all classes of positions the duties of which are to perform, under immediate or general supervision, individually or with a small number of subordinates, work requiring professional, scientific, or technical training as herein specified, previous experience, and, to a limited extent, the exercise of independent judgment.

The annual rates of compensation for positions in this grade shall be $2,600, $2,700, $2,800, $2,900, $3,000, $3,100, and $3,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 13, before the figures "$3,600," to strike out "and" and after the same figures to insert a comma and "$3,700, and $3,800," so as to read:

Grade 3 in this service, which may be referred to as the associate professional grade, shall include all classes of positions the duties of which are to perform, individually or with a small number of trained assistants, under general supervision but with considerable latitude for the exercise of independent judgment, responsible work requiring extended professional, scientific, or technical training and considerable previous experience.

The annual rates of compensation for positions in this grade shall be $3,200, $3,300, $3,400, $3,500, $3,600, $3,700, and $3,800.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator in charge of the bill a question. I have received two or three letters from employees of the Government claiming that the bill discriminates against the lower paid employees of the Government. I have not had the opportunity to examine it carefully to see whether that is correct. One letter came to me saying that there is a joker in the bill which discriminates against the lower paid employees. I will state for myself that I think the lower paid employees in the District of Columbia are the ones who should have consideration. I am not objecting to the terms of the bill relating to those higher paid, but I hope that the Senator is certain that the bill really does justice to the lower paid employees. I would like to have a statement from the Senator.

Mr. BROOKHART. With the Senate amendments I think there is no doubt that we have taken care of that proposition fully.

Mr. McKELLAR. Indeed, that is the very purpose of the Senate amendments. It is to equalize and benefit the lower paid employees of the Government.

Mr. JONES. I am glad to know that.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, what does the Senator mean by "Senate amendments"? Does he mean the amendments reported by the Senate committee?

Mr. BROOKHART. Yes.

Mr. FLETCHER. They are not yet adopted.

Mr. McKELLAR. The amendments referred to by the Senator from Iowa are the very amendments that the Senator from Florida and the Senator from Washington are talking about.

Mr. FLETCHER. They are the amendments reported by the committee?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes.

Mr. BROOKHART. If the Senator from Washington will get the report——

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. BROOKHART. I yield.

Mr. BLAINE. The complaints which the Senator from Washington has received, I rather assume, are complaints that related to the bill as it read before the Senate committee recommended its amendments.

Mr. JONES. Yes; I think that is true.

Mr. BLAINE. I received the same complaints and objections and suggestion that there was a joker, and the joker was pointed out; but I think all those objections have been overcome.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator from Iowa a question. We have reached now the amendment on page 3, line 14, as I understand, which proposes to insert two new increases, one of $3,700 and the other of $3,800. We are told that the total required under the Senate bill will endanger its being signed by the President because of too much money being necessary to carry out the terms of the bill. I want to ask the Senator whether, if that be the case, it would not be well not to amend the higher-paid positions, but leave those as the House bill left them and leave some of those positions without increases in order not to increase the total amount to a point where the President might veto the bill.

Mr. BROOKHART. I am glad to answer the Senator's question and when the bill is explained I think he will see why all these amendments should be adopted.

I invite now attention to the report, page 4, to the schedule that is printed there. Since all the amendments come under the same explanation, I will start with the first one in group 1, under professional and scientific services.

The existing law is set out there, with the compensation of the various steps under grade 1. If the Senator will count them, he will see there are seven of them. Under the Welch bill as it came from the House those were reduced to five in number. They are the five that are underneath the last five of the existing law. That produced this sort of confusion. Steps 1 and 2 are crowded up, and so are all the others, but steps 6 and 7 have no place to go. They will stay in No. 5 of the new classification. The two of $2,500 and $2,600 are the two that were added by the committee amendment. We did that in order to make the same number of steps in the new law as were used in the old law. That gives a uniform advancement to all of the employees and there is no confusion by grading seven steps instead of five.

Under the Welch bill as it came from the House that $2,300 in the old law, next to the last, would go up to $2,400, but the $2,400 would stay where it was. That is the injustice which the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] mentions. It was the highest step of the lowest grades where the discrimination occurred.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senate committee amendment makes it mandatory.

Mr. BROOKHART. The Senate committee amendment makes it mandatory for these increases. They average $140 to $200 in the first grade. There is a similar proportion that runs through all the Senate amendments. We have treated everybody in proportion and alike as nearly as possible.

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. COUZENS] had in the tax bill some higher-paid cases in the Treasury Department. They were taken out of the tax bill and put into this bill. We have not disturbed those, because there seemed to be special reason for the adoption of those salaries.

We have just added enough steps to those to make it uniform and get rid of all the confusion of every kind. We know from the way we have amended it exactly where everybody is coming out, but if we crowd seven steps into five, then we would have to figure, by astronomy and astrology and I do not know what, to find out where everybody went and what salary he would get. There was some dissatisfaction with that arrangement, of course.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President——

Mr. BROOKHART. I yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. GEORGE. I direct the Senator's respectful attention to the provisions on page 23 of the bill. He will recall that in committee we believed it to be necessary to add the same number of steps at the top of the grade as were taken off at the bottom of the grade, so that in making the adjustments the heads of the departments and those charged with the task might without any difficulty comply with the provisions in rating the positions of the employees affected and so that they might retain in the classification schedule the same relative positions as they hold at the time the law goes into effect. By the addition of the steps at the top of the group that provision of the law will be easily administered, and it will make certain to the employees just what increase in salary they will get, without depending upon the uncertainty involved in a decision of the chief clerk and the classification board.

Mr. BROOKHART. The Senator's suggestion is absolutely correct. The provisions on page 23, in reference to the relative positions, are such that it was feared they could not be administered at all under the arrangement of the bill as it came from the House, but it is perfectly simple and perfectly easy with the Senate committee amendments.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, will the Senator come back to my question which I asked at the beginning of the discussion, as to whether, in view of the fact that it is said the Senate amendments will increase the cost of the bill to such an extent that it may be vetoed, it would not be wise not to make the increases made in the Senate committee amendments of $3,700 and $3,800, and also in the higher grades that are increased by the Senate committee amendments?

Mr. BROOKHART. There are only a few employees in those grades, and it would not make much difference in the total amount, but I think that I can explain to the Senator a little later that we will not have that difficulty about the cost of the bill.

Mr. DILL. I want to say to the Senator that I have no objection to those in the higher grades receiving a proportionate increase, but if the bill is to hang upon the question of passage or defeat, or whether it will be signed or vetoed by the President is to depend upon whether or not it increases the cost to $18,000,000, then I hope the bill may be so worded as to increase the lower-paid employees and allow the others to wait.

Mr. BROOKHART. I am in accord with the Senator's suggestion in that proposition, but I will explain to him the situation about the cost of the bill, so I think that question will not arise in any serious way.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. BROOKHART. Certainly.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I want to see the bill passed, and passed as it ought to be passed—upon its merits. I am growing a little tired of word being sent over to Congress via grapevine every few days that if Congress dares to do certain things a veto will be interposed. I think we have a Government of three coordinate branches, each independent of the other; that each branch ought to assume its own responsibilities and pursue its own course of right without interference by any other branch, without any kind of coercion or threat by any other branch. I am in favor of Congress, in connection with this bill and every other bill, doing the thing that in its judgment seems right and taking the responsibility for its acts. I am in favor then of the Executive pursuing the course that to him seems right, and taking the responsibility for his acts.

The idea of Congress legislating, to use a very poor figure of speech, under the Executive gun, and pursuing a course that is not in accordance with its own judgment lest a veto might come, is obnoxious to the very spirit of the Government and is destructive of the independence of Congress. It is just as unjustifiable as if Congress were to send word to the President that if he dared veto a certain bill they would cut off his salary or would resort to some other coercive measure. That is not the business of the Congress; it is not the proper thing to do; and it is just as improper for us to change our course of legislation because of an Executive threat.

I would not take the time of the Senate at this hour of the evening to make these remarks if this intimation had come with reference to this single bill, but we have had it repeatedly through the entire session. So far as I am concerned, I propose to vote for what I think I ought to vote for, taking the responsibility for my own act; and if the President then sees fit to veto a bill that the majority of Congress have concurred in, he must accept that responsibility. It is time to cease the practice of Executive interference with legislative conduct; and I repeat that any such attempt is quite as unjustifiable on the part of the Executive as it would be if the Congress undertook to coerce the Executive.

I am not charging the Executive has done these things, but it has been talked throughout this session with reference, not only to this bill, but to many other bills, "If you do not make some changes, a veto will come." That has been so persistent that I have arrived at the conclusion that this word is sent down here for the purpose of directing and interfering in matters of legislation. Let us do the thing on this bill and on every other bill that in our judgment is right, and let the Executive pursue his own course and accept his own share of the responsibility.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President——

Mr. BROOKHART. Before I yield to the Senator from New York, I want to say that, so far as I am personally concerned I am in entire accord with everything the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] has said; but I wish, further, to say that, so far as the committee is concerned, there has been no threat or suggestion come to us from the Executive. If there is any thought of vetoing this bill, we know nothing about it. The committee has proceeded upon the merits of the question and has every confidence that it will receive that kind of consideration when it reaches the Executive.

Mr. REED of Missouri. If the Senator from Iowa will pardon me for a moment longer, I desire to say that my remarks were prompted by the statement made by my good friend from Washington [Mr. DILL], who undoubtedly spoke as he did because he thought the interest of the bill might demand that kind of consideration.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, may I say that I wish we might have a President, and I should not object if it were the Senator from Missouri, who would set such an example as the Senator has so well suggested this evening. I am perfectly willing that the Congress shall do as the Senator suggests; but I recognize the situation, as every other Senator should, that we are nearing the closing days of the session. This bill may or may not become a law, depending upon the judgment that we use under the circumstances; and a substantial increase to those who are receiving extremely low salaries is of such great importance to them that I have not worried particularly about the theory of government in this bill, which we so often disregard in the case of other legislation.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, I should like to proceed briefly with the explanation, and then have the remaining committee amendments considered.

Mr. COPELAND. I desire to ask a question before the Senator proceeds, because I should like to have him answer it in his remarks. I should like to say, first, that I am in the fullest accord with what the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] has said. Certainly it is our duty to do what we think is right, and then the President must do as he thinks best. I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa if he will, in his explanation, point out why on page 4 of the report, in the first group, in grade 5, I observe in the Welch bill the rates are lower than in the existing law; and that occurs also in grades 6 and 7, and on the next page, page 5.

Mr. BROOKHART. In the case of grades 5 and 6 there has been a division of the old grades; they do not exactly compare, and when we take the two together there have been added grades that really increase all of them. The salary of nobody is reduced.

Mr. COPELAND. That does not mean, then, that there is an actual decrease anywhere?

Mr. BROOKHART. No; the bill affirmatively provides against any decrease in salary.

Mr. COPELAND. I want to be sure that there is an increase everywhere.

Mr. BROOKHART. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. COPELAND. Because, certainly, one in reading the report would get the impression that in certain grades there was a decrease rather than an increase.

Mr. BROOKHART. There might be that impression from the way that is arranged, but it does not work out that way, because, as the Senator will notice, there are new grades added down below.

Mr. COPELAND. Then it does mean that in every grade, all along the line, there will be an increase?

Mr. BROOKHART. Absolutely.

Mr. COPELAND. I am glad to hear that.

Mr. BROOKHART. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Iowa yield to me for just a moment?

Mr. BROOKHART. I will yield for a moment.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, if the Senate is to render the Federal employees any relief at this session, it must be done in the next 37 minutes, because this session to-night must end at 11 o'clock. I, therefore, beg the friends of the Federal employees to let the Senator from Iowa proceed with his explanation to the end, and let us vote on this bill before the clock strikes 11.

Mr. BROOKHART. I will finish my explanation in a very few moments if I am not interrupted. The only other question, I think, which I need answer at this time is the question asked by the Senator from Washington as to the cost of the bill. It is estimated by the Budget Bureau that the cost will be twenty-three million and odd thousand dollars. They have explained how they made that estimate. They took the average allowed under the old law and the average allowed by the Welch bill, added them up, subtracted one from the other, and reached the figure $23,000,000.

The appropriations under the old law have never permitted the payment of the full average provided under the old law, and when that is taken into consideration it reduces the $23,000,000 estimate down to about $20,000,000, which is approximately the sum this bill will cost. It will probably cost a little more than that, because after we arrived at these figures, we added 5 cents an hour for the charwomen and some others who work hard and are really most entitled to an increase.

If I am mistaken in the figures and if the cost will go beyond the point we claim it will go, we will correct the matter in conference. We can not secure that evidence to-night, but I have the evidence, and I think it is quite conclusive, in support of the position that I have taken. Therefore, Mr. President, I should like to proceed with the committee amendments.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the committee amendment last stated is agreed to.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question. On page 23 of the bill, at the beginning of section 2, the following language appears:

> Upon the passage of this act the board shall forthwith make a survey of the classes of civilian positions in the various field services, exclusive of the Postal Service, Foreign Service, and employees in the mechanical and drafting groups whose wages are now or have heretofore been fixed by wage boards or similar authority.

Do I understand that the particular classes referred to are left out at their own request?

Mr. BROOKHART. Yes. That provision is inserted for the purpose of securing information. We did not have accurate information as to the number of employees in some of the services referred to, and that provision is really to enable a census to be taken of such employees.

Mr. HALE. I have heard some complaints from employees in the mechanical group who say that they wanted to come under the provisions of this bill. Is that true?

Mr. BROOKHART. Those excluded were left out at their own request.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The next amendment of the committee will be stated.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 22, before the figures "$4,400," to strike out "and," and after the same figures to insert a comma and "and $4,600," so as to read:

> Grade 4 in this service, which may be referred to as the full professional grade, shall include all classes of positions the duties of which are to perform, under general supervision, difficult and responsible work requiring considerable professional, scientific, or technical training and experience, and the exercise of independent judgment.
> The annual rates of compensation for positions in this grade shall be $3,800, $4,000, $4,200, $4,400, and $4,600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, line 7, before the figures "$5,200," to strike out "and," and after the same figures to insert a comma and "and $5,400," so as to read:

> Grade 5 in this service, which may be referred to as the senior professional grade, shall include all classes of positions the duties of which are to perform, under general administrative supervision, important specialized work requiring extended professional, scientific, or technical training and experience, the exercise of independent judgment, and the assumption of responsibility for results, or for the administration of a small scientific or technical organization.
> The annual rates of compensation for positions in this grade shall be $4,600, $4,800, $5,000, $5,200, and $5,400, unless a higher rate is specifically authorized by law.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Subprofessional service," on page 6, line 13, before the figures "$1,320," to strike out "and," and after the same figures to insert a comma and "and $1,380," so as to read:

Grade 1 in this service, which may be referred to as the minor subprofessional grade, shall include all classes of positions the duties of which are to perform, under immediate supervision, the simplest routine work in a professional, scientific, or technical organization.

The annual rate of compensation for positions in this grade shall be $1,020, $1,080, $1,140, $1,200, $1,260, $1,320, and $1,380.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, line 23, before the figures "$1,560," to strike out "and," and after the same figures to insert a comma and "and $1,620," so as to read:

Grade 2 in this service, which may be referred to as the undersubprofessional grade, shall include all classes of positions the duties of which are to perform, under immediate supervision, assigned subordinate work of a professional, scientific, or technical character, requiring limited training or experience, but not the exercise of independent judgment.

The annual rates of compensation for positions in this grade shall be $1,260, $1,320, $1,380, $1,440, $1,500, $1,560, and $1,620.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, line 7, before the figures "$1,740," strike out "and," and after the same figures to insert a comma and "and $1,800," so as to read:

Grade 3 in this service, which may be referred to as the junior subprofessional grade, shall include all classes of positions the duties of which are to perform, under immediate supervision, subordinate work of a professional, scientific, or technical character, requiring considerable training or experience, but not the exercise of independent judgment.

The annual rates of compensation for positions in this grade shall be $1,440, $1,500, $1,560, $1,620, $1,680, $1,740, and $1,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, line 17, before the figures "$1,920," to strike out "and," and after the same figures to insert a comma and "and $1,980," so as to read:

Grade 4 in this service, which may be referred to as the assistant subprofessional grade, shall include all classes of positions the duties of which are to perform, under immediate supervision, subordinate work of a professional, scientific, or technical character, requiring considerable training or experience, and, to a limited extent, the exercise of independent judgment.

The annual rates of compensation for positions in this grade shall be $1,620, $1,680, $1,740, $1,800, $1,860, $1,920, and $1,980.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, line 4, before the figures "$2,040," to strike out "and," and after the same figures to insert a comma and "$2,100, and $2,160," so as to read:

Grade 5 in this service, which may be referred to as the main subprofessional grade, shall include all classes of positions the duties of which are to perform, under immediate or general supervision, subordinate work of a professional, scientific, or technical character requiring a thorough knowledge of a limited field of professional, scientific, or technical work, and the exercise of independent judgment, or to supervise the work of a small number of employees performing the duties of an inferior grade in the subprofessional service.

The annual rates of compensation for positions in this grade shall be $1,800, $1,860, $1,920, $1,980, $2,040, $2,100, and $2,160.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, line 16, before the figures "$2,400," to strike out "and," and after the same figures to insert a comma and "$2,500, and $2,600," so as to read:

Grade 6 in this service, which may be referred to as the senior subprofessional grade, shall include all classes of positions the duties of which are to perform, under immediate or general supervision, subordinate but difficult and responsible work of a professional, scientific, or technical character, requiring a thorough knowledge of a limited field of professional, scientific, or technical work, and the exercise of independent judgment, or to supervise the work of a small number of employees holding positions in grade 5 of this service.

The annual rates of compensation for positions in this grade shall be $2,000, $2,100, $2,200, $2,300, $2,400, $2,500, and $2,600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, line 2, before the figures "$2,700," to strike out "and," and after the same figures to insert a comma and "$2,800, and $2,900," so as to read:

Grade 7 in this service, which may be referred to as the principal subprofessional grade, shall include all classes of positions the duties of which are to perform, under general supervision, subordinate but responsible work of a professional, scientific, or technical character requiring a working knowledge of the principles of the profession, art, or science involved, and the exercise of independent judgment, or to supervise the work of a small number of employees holding positions in grade 6 of this service.

The annual rates of compensation for positions in this grade shall be $2,300, $2,400, $2,500, $2,600, $2,700, $2,800, and $2,900.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, line 14, before the figures "$3,000," to strike out "and," and after the same figures to insert a comma and "$3,100, and $3,200," so as to read:

Grade 8 in this service, which may be referred to as the chief subprofessional grade, shall include all classes of positions the duties of which are to perform, under general supervision, subordinate but difficult and responsible work of a professional, scientific, or technical character, requiring a thorough working knowledge of the principles of the profession, art, or science involved, and the exercise of independent judgment, or to supervise the work of a small number of employees holding positions in grade 7 of this service.

The annual rates of compensation for positions in this grade shall be $2,600, $2,700, $2,800, $2,900, $3,000, $3,100, and $3,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Clerical, administrative, and fiscal service," on page 10, at the end of line 2, before the figures "$1,560," to strike out "and," and after the same figures to insert a comma and "and $1,620," so as to read:

CLERICAL, ADMINISTRATIVE, AND FISCAL SERVICE

The clerical, administrative, and fiscal service shall include all classes of positions the duties of which are to perform clerical, administrative, or accounting work, or any other work commonly associated with office, business, or fiscal administration.

Grade 1 in this service, which may be referred to as the underclerical grade, shall include all classes of positions the duties of which are to perform, under immediate supervision, the simplest routine office work.

The annual rates of compensation for positions in this grade shall be $1,260, $1,320, $1,380, $1,440, $1,500, $1,560, and $1,620.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, at the end of line 10, before the figures "$1,740," to strike out "and," and after the same figures to insert a comma and "and $1,800," so as to read:

Grade 2 in the service, which may be referred to as the junior clerical grade, shall include all classes of positions the duties of which are to perform, under immediate supervision, assigned office work requiring training or experience but not the exercise of independent judgment.

The annual rates of compensation for positions in this grade shall be $1,440, $1,500, $1,560, $1,620, $1,680, $1,740, and $1,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, at the end of line 20, before the figures "$1,920," to strike out "and," and after the same figures to insert a comma and "and $1,980," so as to read:

Grade 3 in the service, which may be referred to as the assistant clerical grade, shall include all classes of positions the duties of which are to perform, under immediate or general supervision, assigned office work requiring training and experience and knowledge of a specialized subject matter or the exercise of independent judgment or to supervise a small section performing simple clerical operations.

The annual rates of compensation for positions in this grade shall be $1,620, $1,680, $1,740, $1,800, $1,860, $1,920, and $1,980.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, at the end of line 6, before the figures "$2,100," to strike out "and," and after the same figures to insert a comma and "and $2,200," so as to read:

Grade 4 in this service, which may be referred to as the main clerical grade, shall include all classes of positions the duties of which are to perform, under immediate or general supervision, responsible office work requiring training and experience, the exercise of independent judgment or knowledge of a specialized subject matter or both, and an acquaintance with office procedure and practice, or to supervise a small stenographic section or a small section performing clerical operations of corresponding difficulty.

The annual rates of compensation for positions in this grade shall be $1,800, $1,860, $1,920, $1,980, $2,040, $2,100, and $2,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, line 20, before the figures "$2,400," to strike out "and," and after the same figures to insert a comma and "$2,500, and $2,600," so as to read:

Grade 5 in this service, which may be referred to as the senior clerical grade, shall include all classes of positions the duties of which are to perform, under general supervision, difficult and responsible office work requiring considerable training and experience, the exercise of independent judgment or knowledge of a specialized subject matter or both, and a thorough knowledge of office procedure and practice, or to supervise a large stenographic section or any large section performing simple clerical operations or to supervise a small section engaged in difficult but routine office work.

The annual rates of compensation for positions in this grade shall be $2,000, $2,100, $2,200, $2,300, $2,400, $2,500, and $2,600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, line 10, before the figures "$2,700," to strike out "and," and after the same figures to insert a comma and "$2,800, and $2,900," so as to read:

Grade 6 in this service, which may referred to as the principal clerical grade, shall include all classes of positions, the duties of which are to perform, under general supervision, exceptionally difficult and responsible office work requiring extended training and experience, the exercise of independent judgment or knowledge of a specialized and complex subject matter, or both, and a thorough knowledge of office procedure and practice, or to serve as the recognized authority or adviser in matters requiring long experience and an exceptional knowledge of the most difficult and complicated procedure or of a very difficult and complex subject, or to supervise a large or important office organization engaged in difficult or varied work.

The annual rates of compensation for positions in this grade shall be $2,300, $2,400, $2,500, $2,600, $2,700, $2,800, and $2,900.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, line 23, before the figures "$3,000," to strike out "and," and after the same figures to insert a comma and "$3,100, and $3,200," so as to read:

Grade 7 in this service, which may be referred to as the assistant administrative grade, shall include all classes of positions the duties of which are to perform, under general supervision, responsible office work along specialized and technical lines requiring specialized training and experience and the exercise of independent judgment, or as chief clerk to supervise the general business operations of a small, independent establishment or a minor bureau or division of an executive department, or to supervise a large or important office organization engaged in difficult and specialized work.

The annual rates of compensation for positions in this grade shall be $2,600, $2,700, $2,800, $2,900, $3,000, $3,100, and $3,200.

The annual rates of compensation for positions in this grade shall be $2,600, $2,700, $2,800, $2,900, $3,000, $3,100, and $3,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Clerical-mechanical service," on page 22, line 11, after the word "be," to strike out "50" and insert "55"; and in the same line, before the word "cents," to strike out "55" and insert "60," so as to read:

Grade 1 shall include all classes of positions in this service the duties of which are to perform the simplest operations or processes requiring special skill and experience.

The rates of compensation for classes of positions in this grade shall be 55 to 60 cents an hour.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 22, line 17, after the word "be," to strike out "60" and insert "65"; and in the same line, before the word "cents," to strike out "65" and insert "70," so as to read:

Grade 2 shall include all classes of positions in this service the duties of which are to operate simple machines or to perform operations or processes requiring a higher degree of skill than those in grade 1.

The rates of compensation for classes of positions in this grade shall be 65 to 70 cents an hour.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 22, line 23, after the word "be," to strike out "70" and insert "75," and in the same line, before the word "cents," to strike out "75" and insert "80," so as to read:

Grade 3 shall include all classes of positions in this service the duties of which are to operate machines or to perform operations or processes requiring the highest degree of skill, or supervise a small number of subordinates.

The rates of compensation for classes of positions in this grade shall be 75 to 80 cents an hour.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That completes the committee amendments.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. HARRISON. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BRATTON (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON]. I am informed that if he were present he would vote as I intend to vote. I therefore feel at liberty to vote and vote "yea."

Mr. COPELAND (when Mr. WAGNER'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. WAGNER] is necessarily detained from the Senate. If he were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. WALSH of Montana (when his name was called). I have a pair on this question with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DALE]. I am advised, however, that if he were present he would vote as I shall vote. I accordingly vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. HALE. My colleague [Mr. GOULD] is absent from the Chamber. If he were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD]. I believe that he would vote "yea" on this question, but I am not sure about it; so I transfer that pair to the Senator from Vermont [Mr. GREENE], and will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. NEELY. My colleague, the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF], is unavoidably absent. He is in favor of this bill, and I am authorized to say that if he were present he would vote "yea."

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. The junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] is unavoidably detained from the Chamber. If he were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. BROUSSARD. My colleague [Mr. RANSDELL] is unavoidably absent. If present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. ASHURST. My colleague, the junior Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN], is unavoidably absent. If present, he would take great pleasure in voting "yea."

Mr. SWANSON. My colleague [Mr. GLASS] is unavoidably detained from the Senate. If present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. HEFLIN. The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDWARDS] is unavoidably absent. I understand that if he were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. NYE. I desire to announce the necessary absence of my colleague [Mr. FRAZIER]. If present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. JONES. I desire to announce the necessary absence of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES]. If present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. HEFLIN. I desire to announce that the Senators from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS and Mr. OVERMAN] are necessarily absent. If present, they would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 48, nays 0, as follows:

YEAS—48

Ashurst	Dill	Locher	Reed, Mo.

So the bill was passed.

PROMOTIONS IN THE ARMY

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now revert to Order of Business 1138, House bill 12814, the Army promotion list bill.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, as I understand, the request of the Senator includes the idea that we will vote to-night on the amendment and the bill?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I hope so; and I am perfectly willing, so far as I am concerned, to divide the time fairly with the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. BLACK. If we can vote on both, I have no objection; but I would not want, for instance, if the amendment should be carried, then to have the matter go over, so it would not be disposed of.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. The bill could not pass without the Senator having a chance to offer his amendment.

Mr. BLACK. I understand that.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, under the order under which we are proceeding, I understand that an objection can be made at any time before the bill is finally disposed of.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. That is true, Mr. President.

Mr. BLACK. The idea I have is this: If we go through the proceeding, and should adopt the amendment, I want the agreement to include the fact that we will go on with the bill.

Mr. FLETCHER. We can go on until 11 o'clock.

Mr. BLACK. Then, if I can get the amendment up and get it passed, and the bill should be allowed to go over indefinitely, we could not be any nearer a conclusion than we are now.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I am sorry; I am not asking for agreements with anybody. I am trying to get consideration for a bill on which everybody is agreed, and I am willing to give full consideration to the Senator's amendment; but I can not stipulate in advance that the Senate will be willing to pass the bill after they have heard the debate, no matter what happens.

Mr. BLACK. Then I ask unanimous consent that we go ahead and dispose of this bill and the amendment, and vote on it by 11 o'clock.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection. It will be necessary to have a quorum call.

Mr. SWANSON. The Senator said "11 o'clock." He had better say "five minutes to 11," because at 11 o'clock we automatically adjourn.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator from Pennsylvania if this is such a bill that we can afford to make an agreement of that sort?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. This bill means so much to the Army that I am almost willing to jeopardize the success of the bill by making the agreement in order to get it considered. The amendment of the Senator from Alabama in my judgment would go far toward ruining the morale of the commissioned officers of the Regular Army; but I am depending on the good sense of the Senate, after they have heard it explained, not to adopt that amendment.

Mr. JONES. I want to ask the Senator if the amendment that he refers to is the bill that was reported by the Senator from Alabama, about which I am receiving so many communications?

Mr. BLACK. Yes, sir; that is the amendment.

Mr. JONES. I should object myself to any agreement of that sort.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I hope, Mr. President, we can go ahead with the consideration of the committee amendment, and that, in the time that we have, we may hear an explanation of what it is that the Senator from Alabama proposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to reverting to House bill 12814? The Chair hears none.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 12814) to increase the efficiency of the Air Corps, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That the aggregate number of commissioned officers of the Regular Army and Philippine Scouts on the active list shall not exceed the number now or hereafter expressly authorized by law, and all such officers, except officers of the Medical Department, chaplains, and professors, shall be designated as promotion-list officers. The number of promotion-list officers in each of the grades below brigadier general shall be such as results from the operation of the promotion system prescribed in this act, and shall not be otherwise limited: Provided, That except as otherwise in this act specifically prescribed, the number of promotion-list colonels, lieutenant colonels, and majors shall not exceed 6 per cent, 8 per cent, and 26 per cent, respectively, of the maximum authorized number of promotion-list officers of all grades, and the number of promotion-list field officers shall not be less than 26 per cent of the maximum authorized number of promotion-list officers of all grades.

SEC. 2. That, subject to such examination as shall have been required by authority of law, promotion-list officers in the grades of second lieutenant, first lieutenant, captain, major, and lieutenant colonel shall be promoted to the respective next higher grade when their names appear first in their grade upon the promotion list, and when, under provisions of this act, they are credited with 3, 10, 15, 20, and 26 years of service, respectively: Provided, That the promotion of lieutenant colonels, majors, and captains credited with 26, 20, and 15 years of service, respectively, shall be deferred so long as necessary to prevent the maximum percentages hereinbefore prescribed for the respective next higher grades being exceeded, and, in so far as necessary to maintain the prescribed minimum of field officers, captains credited with less than 15 years of service shall be promoted in the order of their standing upon the promotion list.

SEC. 3. That to provide the Air Corps for the time being with the minimum necessary number of colonels, lieutenant colonels, majors, and captains, officers commissioned in the Air Corps in the respective next lower grades who are on duty requiring them to participate regularly and frequently in aerial flights may be temporarily promoted in the order of their relative standing upon the promotion list in such numbers as will cause the total number of officers then commissioned and serving in the Air Corps in the grade of colonel to be not to exceed 2 per cent, in the grade of lieutenant colonel not to exceed 4 per cent, in the grade of major not to exceed 15 per cent, and in the grade of captain not to exceed 30 per cent, of the total number of officers commissioned in the Air Corps: Provided, That no officer shall be temporarily promoted more than one grade. Officers in any grade serving under temporary commissions shall be in addition to the maximum limiting percentage for such grade hereinbefore prescribed in this act. Officers temporarily promoted under provisions of this act shall maintain their positions on the promotion list, shall not vacate their permanent commissions, shall be regularly promoted as prescribed in this act for all other officers, and each temporary appointment shall terminate upon acceptance of the corresponding permanent commission. Officers of the Air Corps holding temporary commissions in any grade shall take rank in the Air Corps next after officers of the same grade regularly commissioned therein.

SEC. 4. Length of service for promotion under this act shall be computed as follows:

First, each promotion-list officer originally commissioned in the Regular Army prior to July 2, 1920, without prior Federal commissioned service, whose active commissioned service shall have been continuous since acceptance of original commission, shall be credited with the full period from the date of such original commission;

Second, each promotion-list officer commissioned in the Regular Army or Philippine Scouts prior to July 2, 1920, who is not included in the category defined in the preceding subparagraph shall be credited with a length of service equal to that accredited to the officer of said category whose name appears nearest above his on the promotion list;

Third, each promotion-list officer originally commissioned in the grade of second lieutenant in the Regular Army or Philippine Scouts after July 1, 1920, shall be credited only with the period of service from the date of such original commission: Provided, That each promotion-list officer not included in any of the foregoing categories and each officer of said categories whose original relative position on the promotion list shall have been changed or affected by sentence of court-martial, by special enactment, by discontinuity of his active service, or by suspension from promotion, shall be credited with such length of service for promotion as the Secretary of War shall determine to be appropriate to his relative position on the promotion list.

SEC. 5. That all prior statutory provisions governing the termination of active service of officers shall, except as otherwise specifically prescribed in this act, continue in full force and effect and be administered as now provided by law: Provided, That the limited and unlimited lists of retired officers of the Regular Army and Philippine Scouts are hereby merged into one list to be known as the Regular Army officers' retired list, which shall comprise the names of all such officers who shall have been lawfully retired from active service, and hereafter the number of officers who may be retired and carried on said list from time to time shall be such as shall result from the administration of the various statutes authorizing such retirement without other limitation: Provided further, That, excepting section 190, Revised Statutes of the United States, all laws or parts of laws restricting the freedom of persons on the retired lists of the Regular Army, who are otherwise eligible to accept any civil office or employment, or affecting their retired status or retired pay on account of holding any civil office or employment and receiving the compensation thereof, are hereby repealed in so far as they apply to said persons; and any such persons who may be employed in any civil office or position under authority of the United States shall be entitled to receive the full compensation allotted to such office or position without regard to such person's retired pay: Provided further, That when any officer of the Regular Army or Philippine Scouts shall have served 35 years or more, including all service counted toward eligibility for voluntary retirement under existing laws, including this act, he shall, if he makes application therefor to the President, be retired from active service and placed upon the retired list: Provided further, That when any officer of the Regular Army or Philippine Scouts shall have served 40 years as a commissioned officer in active service in the Army of the United States, or is 60 years old, he may, without action of a retiring board, be retired from active service, at the discretion of the President, and placed upon the retired list: Provided further, That in computing eligibility for voluntary retirement of officers of the Army each officer shall in addition to all service now credited under existing laws be credited with additional constructive credit equal to one-half the time, if any, that he shall have been actually detailed to duty involving flying, except in time of war: Provided further, That flying officers of the Air Corps who become physically disqualified for flying duty shall be eligible for retirement for physical disability.

SEC. 6. That during each fiscal year promotion-list officers who were originally appointed in the Regular Army or Philippine Scouts prior to July 1, 1920, or as of that date, may file applications to be transferred from the active list in the manner hereinafter provided, and the President is hereby authorized, on or before June 30 of each fiscal year, to designate for transfer from the active list from among such applicants who shall have been recommended for such transfer by a board of general officers, such number as shall not exceed 1 per cent of the maximum authorized number of promotion-list officers of all grades.

Officers designated for transfer from the active list under provisions of this section shall be ordered to their homes as soon as practicable after such designation and, upon expiration of such leave of absence with full pay as may be granted under existing law, shall be transferred to the retired list with retired pay at the rate of 2½ per cent of active pay, multiplied by the number of complete years of service, but not exceeding 30 years, with which credited for pay purposes, excepting non-Federal service: Provided, That each computation of service and pay of an officer designated for transfer from the active list under this section shall be as of the date of such designation: Provided further, That any officer originally appointed in the Regular Army as of July 1, 1920, at an age greater than 45 years, may, if he so elects, in lieu of retired pay at the rate hereinbefore provided, receive retired pay at the rate of 4 per cent of active pay for each complete year of commissioned service in the United States Army, not exceeding 75 per cent of active pay.

Officers designated in any fiscal year for transfer from the active list shall, for purposes of computations under provisions of this act, be deemed to have been transferred from the active list during the fiscal year in which designated, notwithstanding the deferment of separation as herein authorized.

SEC. 7. That except as specifically provided in this act, nothing therein shall be held or construed to discharge any officer from the Regular Army or to deprive him of the commission which he holds therein, or to reduce the rank or pay, active or retired, of any officer therein. The provisions of this act shall be effective beginning July 1, 1928, and all laws and parts of laws, in so far as the same are inconsistent herewith or are in conflict with any of the provisions hereof, are hereby repealed as of that date.

Mr. JONES. I wish the Senator from Pennsylvania would explain the bill and the amendment.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Yes; I shall be glad to do so.

In 1920 the national defense act authorized an increase in the enlisted strength and the commissioned strength of the Army; and the maximum of the commissioned strength was fixed at 12,000 officers. There were then commissioned in the Regular Army less than 7,000 officers, and it became necessary to take in additional officers amounting to more than 5,000 in number. We had almost 150,000 officers of experience in the World War; and the opportunity was offered to them to come in and, by competitive examination, stand for new commissions in this increase of the Army. The act under which they were invited to come in provided that captains and first and second lieutenants should be grouped together and ranked in the order of their commissioned experience.

A very large number of those temporary officers came in and took the examination. They took it at many places—some of them on the Rhine, some of them here, some of them in the Philippines, some in San Francisco—and while the effort was made to have all of those examinations uniform, necessarily the men were marked by different boards of officers. Necessarily the candidates were differently qualified.

I think it is fair to say that the members of our Army in France were more strictly marked, on the whole, than were those of the Army here. They were marked by officers who had led these men in combat, who had tried them out.

However that might be, it was realized that whatever injustices might result would be atoned for by the grouping of these company officers, so-called, all together, without distinction of captains or lieutenants, in the order of their commissioned experience. That really was necessary, because some branches of the Army, like the Judge Advocate General's Department, did not have any lieutenants at all; and there was one actual case where an officer was commissioned two days before the armistice as a captain in the Judge Advocate General's Department. Obviously, it would be unjust to rank him ahead of a first lieutenant of Infantry who had served through many battles and been in command of men for many months. However, that was the law, and it was very plain.

Over 5,000 officers were admitted at that time, almost all of approximately the same age, and all of them within 18 months of one another in the length of their experience. That group of officers constitutes on the promotion list what is known as the "hump." It is obvious that those who are at the upper end of the "hump" will go on in normal promotion, will become colonels, will be eligible for appointment as general officers, and will go through the normal course of an officer of the Army; while those at the bottom, perhaps equally meritorious, will be so clogged in promotion by this great group of officers of the same age that some of them actually will retire as captains when they reach the age of 64.

The effort to ameliorate that condition has engaged the attention of the Military Affairs Committees of both the Senate and the House for the last five or six years. Many suggestions have been made. Almost all of them are unsatisfactory to somebody.

It is suggested by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK], in a bill which he has introduced and in the amendment which he is about to offer, that the promotion list ought to be all taken apart again from the way it was made eight years ago, and that the captains ought to be put ahead, and then the first lieutenants, and then the second lieutenants, and that they ought to be separately ranked on the promotion list in accordance with the grades under which they were commissioned in 1920.

The trouble with that is that it upsets an arrangement that has been standing for those eight years. It fixes their rank now on the promotion list in accordance with the entirely fortuitous circumstance of the rank they were given by the examining board back in 1920; and we can not get an appreciation of the consequences that it will work until we take some particular cases.

I know the time is limited, and I do not mean to filibuster against my own bill; but I want the Senate to bear with me just a moment while I give some typical cases that will happen; and I am going to give the names, because the officers themselves will not in the least mind my doing so.

Here is Capt. George P. Hays; age, 36; appointed from Oklahoma; graduated from the first training camp. In October, 1917, he accepted appointment as a second lieutenant of Field Artillery in the Regular Army. He had not yet reached a captaincy on June 30, 1920.

The amendment of the Senator from Alabama would drop that man 800 files on the promotion list, although he has been awarded the congressional medal of honor for distinguished gallantry in action above and beyond the call of duty in action against the enemy in July, 1918. He had seven horses shot from under him while establishing contact with neighboring command posts and batteries. In his new position under this proposed amendment he would have put ahead of him about 350 officers of less service than his and about 500 of equal service, and there would be a group 1,200 numbers ahead of him of 20 officers who had not even been commissioned at the time that man won the medal of honor. Of those 20 officers, 17 are in staff branches, 9 quartermasters, 4 in the Finance Department, 1 in ordnance, 1 in chemical warfare, 2 Judge Advocate General, 1 Air Corps, 1 Infantry, 1 Engineers. That is a typical case. I could go on on; I have a package of them. I could give 50 such cases. That is the reason in brief why so many of us object to the bill of the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. SWANSON. What does the Black amendment do?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. It takes the whole promotion list apart, builds it over again, putting all the captains on top, then first lieutenants, then the second lieutenants, so that a captain of two days' service before the armistice would rank a first lieutenant who had been in the Army from April, 1917, when the war was declared.

Mr. SWANSON. What does the committee bill provide?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. The War Department suggested, and it was considered by the committee but not accepted by any of us that we have a system of plucking boards and promotion examinations which would accelerate departures from the list, and in that way speed up promotions. We were not willing to trust any group of officers with such arbitrary power, but we did agree with the Senator from Alabama, and he agreed with us, that there was a way which, taken in conjunction with either his plan or ours, might be used, and might be used by itself. That is the language as reported in the committee amendment, which is unanimously reported by the Committee on Military Affairs. It provides, in substance, that we shall have a certain percentage of these 12,000 officers who may be colonels, not over 6 per cent; a certain percentage, not over 8 per cent, who may be lieutenant colonels; a certain percentage, not over 26 per cent, who may be majors, and so on. It provides that according to the years of their commissioned service these officers shall be promoted, so that if an officer has been three years a second lieutenant he shall be promoted to be a first lieutenant, regardless of what the condition of the promotion list is. If an officer has been 10 years first lieutenant, including the preliminary 3 years as a second lieutenant, he shall be promoted to be a captain. After 15 years' total service, he shall be promoted to be a major. After 20 years he is to be promoted to be a lieutenant colonel, and after 26 years to be a colonel; of course, beyond that, promotions by selection.

Mr. SWANSON. Will we not soon have twice as many colonels as we have now, and have the Army top-heavy?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. We do not want to be top-heavy, and we realize that more than 40 per cent of field officers makes our Army unwieldly, although many of them are available for training, and have independent detached assignments. So we control that process by putting on these limited percentages of 6, 8, and 26 for these promotions.

I can say this of the committee bill: That it falls short of what I think is necessary for complete correction of this condition. The Senator from Alabama, I think, would say the same thing, except that neither of us can agree with the other about what it is on which it falls short.

We are both agreed that what the committee bill does is wise. The Senator from Alabama wants to go further and reopen the promotion list. I want to let it stand as it is, and institute this system of promotion examinations and the plucking board.

That is why the committee, after wrestling with this all through the winter, reported out a bill which includes only those elements on which everybody is agreed, and that is the committee amendment now before the Senate.

Mr. SWANSON. How many does the Senator propose to pluck a year, so many from each grade?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. We do not pluck anybody. We have stricken out all that part of the bill. We have negatived that suggestion of the department.

Mr. SWANSON. You do not retire anybody?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. We do not force anybody out of the Army except as is done at present.

Mr. SWANSON. Does the Senator know how many colonels we will have in 10 years time?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Not over 6 per cent.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, has the War Department ever worked out a plan that would prevent this injustice?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. No; Mr. President, they never have. They say that to open the promotion list now would cause more injustice than it would correct; and I agree with them.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I realize, of course, that there are not enough Senators here to vote on a measure of this importance to-night. But I will take only three or four minutes, although I feel that my bill should have come up first, because it came out some weeks ago.

This bill was reported unanimously, because I thought I saw in it a chance to get promotion legislation, not because I thought it met the situation, for I do not. There are two things wholly separate and distinct. One of them is a rearrangement of the promotion list, the other is getting rid of the hump in the promotion list. They have no connection with each other whatever, except that by reason of the hump many of the World War officers who served have been put back behind younger men, so that their promotion is hopelessly blocked, and that happened in this way: An examination was held. It was a fair examination. The rules were promulgated at great length. Men were invited to come into the Army. They were told, "If you stand an examination, you shall have a commission of the kind you apply for, if you meet the test."

Many men applied, most of whom had served. They were granted commissions of first and second lieutenants and captains, some of them majors. Immediately on their getting their commissions, however, the War Department interpreted the law to mean that they should all be scrambled up together. In the main, the older officers had been made captains. That was in line with the instructions from the War Department, that the older men should be at the top, as was right, so that promotion might not be stopped. The younger men being at the top, and not retiring until they get to be 62, the result is that when there is a large group of older men below them the older men are permanently blocked. They will retire as captains and majors. But if that can be worked around so that those men who stood the examination for captain will be on top, as they were promised they would be, then they will retire at the age of 62. My insistence is that this Government has no right, it is not fair and it is not honest, to invite men to come into the Army and say, "Meet the test," and then immediately take the bread out of their mouths that they have earned by the sweat of their brows.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I want to call the Senator's attention to the fact that I was on the committee when the promotion act of 1920 was passed, and I remember working on it at the time. The act itself was a very fair act, but the Regular officers of the Army misconstrued it and treated it virtually as if no law ever passed, and inserted in lieu thereof a law of their own in regard to the matter, which brought about the very condition of which the Senator is now speaking. I protested against it with all the fervor of which I was capable at the time, and denounced it as an outrageous affair, and I still think so, and I am glad the Senator, even if it is at this late date, is taking measures to correct it.

Mr. BLACK. That is the point I wanted to get to. These men stood the examinations and they were made captains. They were entitled to their places as captains. I say that if it had been 40 years, they have had something taken away from them which was theirs, and the injustice ought to be remedied. That is the difference between me and those who believe the other way. Talk about rearranging the promotion list; certainly it was rearranged, but it was not rearranged to give to men that which they earned which was taken away from them without fault of their own and given to others.

The Senator has referred to instances of men getting the distinguished-service cross. There is a man down in North Carolina who got the distinguished-service cross, who was given as distinguished a decoration as could be given in the Army. He is 45 years of age. He is a captain and he will die a captain if this rearrangement is not made, while these provisional second lieutenants, who shot up like sky rockets overnight, without standing an examination, have gotten the benefit of that which was earned by the captain to whom I have referred.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JONES in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment. The Chair understands the Senator from Alabama does not propose to offer his amendment.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I object to taking any further action on this bill, because it is too late to take action on it with the small number of Senators who are now present.

ADDITIONAL REPORTS OF THE COMMITTEE ON THE LIBRARY

Mr. FESS, from the Committee on the Library, to which were referred the following bills and joint resolutions, reported them severally without amendment and submitted reports thereon as indicated:

A bill (S. 3848) creating the Mount Rushmore national memorial commission and defining its purposes and powers (Rept. No. 1176);

A bill (H. R. 7903) to authorize the erection at Clinton, Sampson County, N. C., of a tablet or marker in commemoration of William Rufus King, former Vice President of the United States;

Joint resolution (S. J. Res. 132) to create a commission to secure plans and designs for and to erect a memorial building for the National Memorial Association (Inc.), in the city of Washington, as a tribute to the negro's contribution to the achievements of America (Rept. No. 1177); and Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 263) authorizing the president and fellows of Harvard College to erect on public grounds in the District of Columbia a monument to Maj. Gen. Artemas Ward.

Mr. FESS also, from the Committee on the Library, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 9194) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to acquire land and erect a monument on the site of the battle between the Sioux and Pawnee Indian Tribes in Hitchcock County, Nebr., fought in the year 1873, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 1178) thereon.

MOUNT RUSHMORE NATIONAL MEMORIAL COMMISSION

Mr. FESS. It is quite obvious that we can not vote on the Army promotion bill to-night, and I ask unanimous consent to call up a report I have just submitted from the Committee on the Library and that it be immediately considered. It is Senate bill 3848.

There being no objection, the bill (S. 3848) creating the Mount Rushmore National Commission and defining its purposes and powers was considered as in Committee of the Whole and it was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That a commission is hereby created and established, to be known as the Mount Rushmore national memorial commission (hereafter referred to as the commission), to consist of 12 members, who shall be appointed by the President. The members shall serve at the pleasure of the President, who shall fill all vacancies that from time to time occur.

The members of the commission shall serve without compensation, except that their actual expenses in connection with the work of the commission may be paid from any funds appropriated for the purposes of this act or acquired by other means hereafter authorized: Provided, That the secretary may be paid such reasonable stipend for his services as may be determined by the commission. Such expenses shall be paid by the treasurer of the commission upon the order of the secretary thereof, and then only when approved and countersigned by the chairman of the executive committee.

SEC. 2. The commission when appointed shall organize by electing a chairman, a vice chairman, a secretary, and a treasurer: Provided, That a treasurer may be selected outside of the commission and may be a bank or trust company. Such treasurer shall execute a bond so conditioned and in such amount as shall insure the protection of funds coming into his possession.

The commission may also create from its own membership an executive committee of five, which shall exercise such powers and functions within the purview of this act as may be authorized by the commission.

SEC. 3. The purpose of the commission is to complete the carving of the Mount Rushmore national memorial to consist of heroic figures of Washington, Jefferson, Lincoln, and Roosevelt, together with an entablature upon which there shall be cut a suitable inscription to be indited by Calvin Coolidge, and to landscape the contiguous grounds and construct the entrances thereto. Such memorial is to be constructed, according to designs and models by Gutzon Borglum, now owned or contracted for by the Mount Harney Memorial Association of South Dakota.

SEC. 4. The commission is authorized—

(a) To receive and take over all property, contracts, rights, and moneys now in the hands of and possessed by the Mount Harney Memorial Association, including memoranda, records, sketches, models, and the incompleted figures on Mount Rushmore.

(b) To receive, solicit, and collect funds and pledges to cover the expense of finishing such memorial, and to pay out the same upon properly receipted vouchers to persons entitled.

(c) To designate solicitors to collect funds and pledges for the prosecution of its work and pay such solicitors such expenses and compensation as it may deem proper.

(d) To employ the services of such artists, sculptors, landscape architects, and others as it shall determine to be necessary to complete said memorial, including the landscaping of the grounds and construction of the entrances thereto.

(e) To procure, by purchase or gift, such tools, machinery, structures, and equipment as are necessary and proper to complete such memorial with expedition and economy; and generally,

(f) To exercise such powers and functions as are necessary and proper to carry out the purposes of this act.

SEC. 5. That one-half of the cost of such memorial and landscaping shall be borne by the United States, and an appropriation of not to exceed $250,000 is hereby authorized for the purpose. Upon requisition of the executive committee herein provided for, the proportionate share of the United States shall be advanced to the treasurer of said commission from time to time by the Secretary of the Treasury out of any available appropriation, and in sufficient amounts to match the funds collected from other sources by said commission, whether such funds are in the hands of its treasurer or have already been expended upon such memorial by the commission or by its predecessor, the Mount Harney Memorial Association: Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury shall first be satisfied that the funds received from sources other than the United States are actually available in the hands of the treasurer of the commission or have been properly expended in carrying out the purposes of this act.

SEC. 6. That such commission, on or before the 1st day of December of each year, shall transmit to Congress a report of its activities and proceedings for the preceding year, including a full and complete statement of its receipts and expenditures.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TABLET FOR WILLIAM RUFUS KING

Mr. FESS. On behalf of the junior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 7903) to authorize the erection at Clinton, Sampson County, N. C., of a tablet or marker in commemoration of William Rufus King, former Vice President of the United States. The junior Senator from North Carolina is very anxious to have this bill passed. It authorizes an appropriation of $2,500 to erect a marker in honor of William Rufus King, who was once a Member of this body, was President pro tempore of the Senate and Vice President of the United States—the only man in the history of the country who took the oath of office outside of the country.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, and it was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is authorized and directed to erect a tablet or marker in commemoration of William Rufus King, former Vice President of the United States, at the place of his birth, Clinton, Sampson County, N. C., on ground furnished by such town, after the plans and specifications for such tablet or marker have been submitted to and approved by the Commission of Fine Arts.

SEC. 2. There is authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to carry out the provisions of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MONUMENT TO MAJ. GEN. ARTEMAS WARD

Mr. FESS. I also ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 263) authorizing the president and fellows of Harvard College to erect on public grounds in the District of Columbia a monument to Maj. Gen. Artemas Ward.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and it was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Director of Public Buildings and Public Parks of the National Capital be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to select a suitable site and to grant permission to the president and fellows of Harvard College to erect, as a gift to the people of the United States, on public grounds of the United States in the city of Washington, D. C., a monument in memory of Maj. Gen. Artemas Ward commemorative of the services rendered by him to his country during the war of Independence: Provided, That the site chosen and the design of the memorial shall be approved by the Commission of Fine Arts, that it shall be erected under the supervision of the Director of Public Buildings and Public Parks of the National Capital, and that the United States shall be put to no expense in or by the erection of the monument.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, Senate Joint Resolution 141, being identically with the joint resolution just passed, will be indefinitely postponed.

RECESS

Mr. McKELLAR. The hour of 11 o'clock has arrived.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the unanimous-consent agreement, the Senate stands in recess until 12 o'clock noon to-morrow.

The Senate thereupon (at 11 o'clock p. m.), pursuant to the order previously entered, took a recess until to-morrow, Thursday, May 17, 1928, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS

Executive nominations received by the Senate May 16 (legislative day of May 3), 1928

MEMBER OF UNITED STATES SHIPPING BOARD

Hutch I. Cone, of Florida, to be a member of the United States Shipping Board for a term of six years from June 9, 1928, vice William S. Benson, term expired.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, May 16, 1928

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Spirit of the Most High God, this is a solemn moment. We believe that the impulse which we have to offer Thee our praise is Thy voice within, so we turn to that throne which is forever glorified by our Saviour's death. Father in Heaven, magnify Thyself in our hearts and deeds. Enable us to covet the best things and treasure them. May we set ourselves toward this day with happy hearts, glad faces, and new desires. God help us to love the little child, the mother's prayer, and the beggar's soul. With ready hearts and willing hands, may we help the old world along and look not with disdain upon the truants who are far from home and Heaven. Hear us for Thy blessing upon the land we love best, and be our refuge and everlasting friend. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its principal clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to a bill of the following title:

S. 1341. An act to amend the act entitled "An act to provide that the United States shall aid the States in the construction of rural post roads, and for other purposes," approved July 11, 1916, as amended and supplemented, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 4448. An act to amend section 4 of the act entitled "An act to extend the period of restrictions in lands of certain members of the Five Civilized Tribes, and for other purposes," approved May 10, 1928.

HOUSE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 36

Mr. MARTIN of Louisiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of a resolution, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a concurrent resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Concurrent Resolution 36

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the President is requested to return to the House of Representatives the bill (H. R. 9568, 70th Cong., 1st sess.) to authorize the purchase at private sale of a tract of land in Louisiana, and for other purposes, for the purpose of permitting the correction of an error in the enrolled bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

MAURICE P. DUNLAP

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table H. R. 9411, for the relief of Maurice P. Dunlap, and agree to the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table House bill 9411, with a Senate amendment, and agree to the Senate amendment. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Maryland whether he is authorized to take this action by the committee?

Mr. LINTHICUM. I am.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill and the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment.

The Senate amendment was agreed to.

CADET ADRIAN VAN LEEUWEN

Mr. MORIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. 7887) placing Cadet Adrian Van Leeuwen on the retired list be recommitted to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that House bill 7887 be recommitted to the Committee on Military Affairs. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MUSCLE SHOALS

The SPEAKER. This being Calendar Wednesday, the unfinished business is Senate Joint Resolution 46. The House automatically resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 46, providing for the completion of Dam No. 2 and the steam plant at nitrate plant No. 2 in the vicinity of Muscle Shoals for the manufacture and distribution of fertilizer, and for other purposes, with Mr. NEWTON in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the resolution.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. MORIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer a clarifying committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MORIN: On page 25, line 15, after the word "that," strike out the words "an increased" and insert in lieu thereof "the maximum."

Mr. MORIN. Mr. Chairman, that is a clarifying amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield to me to offer an amendment?

Mr. MORIN. Yes.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Tennessee rise?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. I asked the gentleman from Pennsylvania to yield for the purpose of offering an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. There is an amendment pending which the gentleman from Pennsylvania has presented. Does the Chair understand that the amendment which the gentleman from Tennessee desires to offer is an amendment to the committee amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. No; it is not.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment may be again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

There was no objection.

The Clerk again read the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MORIN: On page 25, line 13, after the word "of," strike out the word "equalizing" and insert in lieu thereof the word "increasing."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Mr. Chairman, I have passed up an amendment to the Clerk's desk, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania has yielded to me.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will be very glad to recognize the gentleman on his amendment; but in view of the fact that the chairman of the committee is on his feet asking for recognition upon an amendment, the Chair will first, in accordance with custom, recognize the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Chairman, I make this point of order, that a Member can not pass up an amendment and claim recognition over others who are asking for recognition.

The CHAIRMAN. In accordance with custom, the Chair is recognizing the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. BYRNS. I think the Chair is clearly right; but I want to call the attention of the Chair to this fact, that I was on my feet.

I am not objecting to the recognition of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MORIN], but I was on my feet asking for recognition when the gentleman from Pennsylvania took me off my feet. I insist that after the gentleman from Pennsylvania has been recognized I should be recognized in view of the fact I was first on my feet.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair wants to recognize gentlemen in proper order, but the gentleman from Pennsylvania had sent to the Clerk's desk certain amendments, and the Chair recognized the gentleman.

Mr. BYRNS. I make no complaint about that, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield for one question?

Mr. MORIN. I yield.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Has the gentleman seen my amendment?

Mr. MORIN. Yes; I have a copy of the gentleman's amendment and, Mr. Chairman, I will accept it as a committee amendment and offer it for the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment which the gentleman from Pennsylvania has just offered.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MORIN: On page 25, line 17, after the period, strike out all down to and including the period on page 26, line 2.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. LINTHICUM) there were—ayes 64, noes 26.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORIN. Mr. Chairman, I have another amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MORIN: On page 13, line 5, after the word "name," change the period to a comma and add "but only for the enforcement of contracts and the defense of property."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Massachusetts rise?

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, I think this is a very undignified way to legislate, without having any explanation of the amendments at all. An amendment was just adopted here with very few people in the committee knowing what it means. It seems to me when these amendments are offered, whether they are committee amendments or amendments of individuals, we have the right for one hour to debate them here, and there ought to be some explanation of the scope of the amendment and its purpose.

Mr. MORIN. If the gentleman desires to debate the amendment, he has that privilege. We do not desire to debate the amendment because we do not want to consume unnecessary time. The amendment simply struck out of the bill certain language which the committee thought it unnecessary to have in the bill.

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. Why is it unnecessary? If the committee does not wish to give any explanation of these amendments, all right. We should know that that is to be their attitude when they are asked for an explanation.

Mr. BACON. Perhaps they have not an explanation to give.

Mr. QUIN. The gentlemen must understand that we have only one hour of debate left on the bill.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Can the gentleman return to page 13 without unanimous consent?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the amendment to the Senate bill is one amendment to which an amendment may be offered from line 1, page 1, to any point thereafter.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Is the time which is being consumed in offering these amendments taken out of the one hour of allotted time?

The CHAIRMAN. No; the time that is consumed in presenting an amendment is not taken out of the hour.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Will the Chair state whether or not the time consumed by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FROTHINGHAM] is taken out of the hour?

The CHAIRMAN. That was taken out of the hour.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Do I understand it will be in order to debate, under the five-minute rule, any of the pending amendments that have not yet been adopted to the bill?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state, and the Chair would like to have the attention of the members of the committee, that one week ago the debate was confined to one hour upon the bill and all amendments thereto. The Chair feels that there are a number of gentlemen who have substantial amendments to offer, and, of course, if they are recognized they will be entitled to five minutes in support of their amendment. Then the Chair will endeavor to recognize those in opposition to the amendment, but debate under the five-minute rule on a pro forma amendment would necessarily be out of order, because it would be an amendment in the third degree.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, a further parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. The most substantial amendment pending before the committee is the so-called Snell substitute. Is the gentleman from New York to understand that all debate upon the Snell substitute has come to an end and that that can not be discussed?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that debate is not exhausted upon the Snell substitute, because, as the Chair recalls it, there has been no speech either for or against it.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the Snell substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. There is pending before the committee an amendment which has been reported and which is ready to be voted upon, unless the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MORIN] desires recognition.

Mr. MORIN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say that I am offering clarifying amendments. It does not in any way change the bill in effect. If I were to take five minutes on each amendment and another Member five minutes in opposition, we would consume 40 minutes. I do not desire to delay the House, as these amendments are only to clarify the bill.

Mr. CLARKE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MORIN. Yes.

Mr. CLARKE. Who prepared these amendments? Were they submitted to the committee?

Mr. MORIN. These amendments were prepared in the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. McSWAIN. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania will allow, they were prepared more than a week ago and have been in possession of the committee for more than a week.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 12, line 18, after the word "hereby," insert "authorized to be appropriated, and when appropriated to be."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 14, line 19, after the word "sale," insert the word "concentrated."

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MORIN].

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 23, line 12, insert after the word "sale," "until such shall be needed for the manufacture of concentrated fertilizer or its ingredients in no case."

Strike out the word "not" at the beginning of line 13.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can not recognize the gentleman, as that is an amendment in the third degree.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. Mr. Chairman, first we ought not to include anything further in the bill authorizing the manufacture of fertilizer, and second, I think we ought to have here in the House a proper consideration of these amendments. The committee says that these are perfecting amendments. They may be perfecting amendments, but, I dare say, that there is not a dozen Members on the floor of the House who know what this amendment means or what the other amendments mean. We are not considering them in their proper manner. This is of vast concern. It puts out of business an industry that has invested $300,000,000. It takes from the Government $140,000,000 and turns over to the corporation to be formed $10,000,000, and it gives to the corporation $1,300,000 which the United States is receiving as income from Muscle Shoals.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order that the gentleman is not speaking to the amendment.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I am speaking to the amendment because it deals with the manufacture of fertilizer, and I am talking about the manufacture of fertilizer and the further extension of the power under this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair wants to say this: The committee has limited debate to one hour. There are a number of substantial amendments being offered and under the rule are entitled to debate. Therefore the Chair feels that gentlemen speaking against any particular amendment should confine themselves strictly in opposition to that particular amendment. The gentleman from Maryland will proceed in order.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, we are considering the Military Affairs Committee's substitute for the Norris Senate Joint Resolution 46. This substitute coming out of the Military Affairs Committee has been reported favorably by the committee without ever giving its opponents an opportunity to be heard. It undertakes to place the United States Government into the fertilizer business in opposition to an industry which has some $300,000,000 invested in their various enterprises.

The fertilizer industry since the deflation after the World War has lost more than $200,000,000 in business, and is to-day just about able to hold its own, and is entering upon what we had hoped was an era of prosperity. It could compete with any Government enterprise if it had an equal opportunity, but it is not proposed to give it an equal opportunity, because the Government enterprise is to have, as I have said, $10,000,000 cash out of the Treasury of the United States which these very fertilizer industries by virtue of taxation helped to accumulate in that Treasury. The corporation is to have turned over to it $140,000,000 of Government property without expense, and without the payment of any interest thereon and without taxation.

The income now derived from water power of $1,300,000 per annum can easily be increased by long contracts to $3,000,000 or $4,000,000 per annum. All this property belonging to the National Government—to the taxpayers of the country—to the fertilizer industries as well as others, is to be turned over to this Government enterprise to enter into competition with individual producers. What is to become of all the stockholders, big and little, of this fertilizer industry? What is to become of their plants and equipment? Who are to employ their workmen, mechanics, clerks, managers, and so forth? Is not this the taking of private property without due process of law and without compensation? Is it not really the invasion of eminent domain by which property is taken without just compensation?

If the Government is to enter upon this socialistic scheme in reference to the manufacture of fertilizer, if Congress will go that far in order to operate or employ Muscle Shoals, is it not a menace to all other private enterprises? Can the stockholders of any great enterprise throughout the country feel secure in their holdings when the Government is willing to take such a vigorous stand in reference to one of the basic industries of the country?

I am unalterably opposed to the Government entering into business in competition with private industries. I had hoped the Republican slogan, "Less government in business and more business in government," would appertain at least to the party which benefited by that slogan. This bill authorizes clear competition—operating with money furnished by the United States Treasury. To promote this competition the corporation is authorized to give away from 5 to 15 per cent of its total product. Muscle Shoals was organized for the purpose of producing nitrates in time of war, and in time of peace to produce nitrates to be used in fertilizer, and all additional electrical power was to be sold and the money covered into the United States Treasury.

The actual wording of the national defense act is this—

For the production of nitrates or other products needed for ammunitions of war and useful in the manufacture of fertilizers and other useful products.

There is not one word in there which would indicate that the Government contemplated embarking upon the manufacture of fertilizers. The idea I had in mind from this was that the Government would manufacture nitrates that could be sold and used in fertilizer, which would not only help the farmer by reducing the price of nitrates, but would help the fertilizer manufacturers by giving them a cheaper basic product.

Why apply the whole energy and plant to the manufacture of fertilizers, driving that industry to the wall, when under the defense act and the words "other useful products" the Government might well enter upon other enterprises which perhaps would not do the vast injury the centering upon one commodity would do, but nevertheless would be just as socialistic and just as foreign to our system of Government as anything could possibly be?

This bill will convert the whole plant into the production of fertilizers, nitrates, and their by-products. If successful, it will drive the fertilizer industry to the wall, so that in peace times you will have produced fertilizer perhaps cheaper than the present manufacturers can produce it, because of the fact that you have the millions of money and property belonging to the National Government—because there are no overhead charges, taxes, or interest on the money invested—rather has it an income from the power itself in addition to the vast property turned over by the National Government aggregating $140,000,000, together with $10,000,000 in cash, a total of $150,000,000.

Suppose you make a great success by virtue of this Government property and Government money, and the fertilizer industry becomes a wreck and no longer able to compete. What will the farmers do in the event of war when the property is taken over for the production of nitrates for war purposes and the fertilizer industry has ceased to exist? A sad plight for the farmer under such a circumstance. I should pity him, indeed, because it would not be his fault; he has made no effort to have the Government undertake such a vast proposition, and as has been stated by one member of the committee, not a farmer has advocated the bill, nor did one appear before the committee asking for its enactment into law.

The opponents, the manufacturers of fertilizer, as I have said, are ingloriously called a Fertilizer Trust by the advocates of this bill, thrust aside and given no chance to lay their case, which involves their all, before the committee. Suppose the fertilizer man should criticize the Government operation, should demonstrate that it actually is costing the Government more to produce fertilizer than it is bringing. Suppose he should go so far as to say that his fertilizer is better than that produced by the Government, and should bring expert testimony to show this to be a fact. Where would he land under the provisions of this bill? Why, he would be indicted, if found guilty of these acts, would be cast into prison perhaps for 15 years, or perhaps he would have to pay a fine of $25,000 for having advocated his goods and his processes in competition with that of the National Government.

There has been a constant effort put forth to have the people believe that the fertilizer industry is profiteering on the farmer, when the real fact of the matter is that for the past seven years it has been compelled to sell its goods at cost and many times less than cost, and to-day is receiving only 9 per cent above pre-war prices, while all other industries and producers, including agriculture, are receiving from three to four times that much increase on their prices.

I do not believe that Government manufacture of fertilizer, even though it should succeed and be able to make it cheaper than the industries are making it, will benefit many farmers. It can certainly not be sold to the far-off farmer, with the added freight rates, any cheaper than the local fertilizer man is selling it to-day. There is bound to be discrimination among the farmers, because the Government goods can certainly not be sold to a very far-reaching radius because of high railroad rates at the present time.

The fertilizer industry has endeavored to establish its plants throughout the country and along water transportation to save the very freight rates of which I speak and make short-distance delivery. I hold no brief for the fertilizer industry. I am interested in it because it is one of the vital industries of the great metropolis of Baltimore, because it is unfair to socialize one great industry, destroy its property rights, render its stock valueless, injure stockholders and owners throughout the country.

I am opposed to the bill because I am quite sure, even with the valuable property and rights transferred to it, it can not succeed, and means, in the vernacular, the throwing of good money after bad. My view is that this plant should be used in times of peace for the manufacture of power, and that this power should be sold to the highest bidder; that it should be so equipped that in time of war it can manufacture nitrates, rendering us independent of all the world. As we are compelled to import all nitrates, it might be well to manufacture nitrates to be used in fertilizer. I want to see this great property completed, but I do not wish to see its completion at the ruin of a vast number of our citizens. I am opposed to socialism, and I regard this as a great step in that direction. When Congress decides to become socialistic, when the day comes that we shall have embraced sovietism, God forbid, then socialize all industries; but do not set the precedent in that sad direction merely because we own some property and do not know what to do with it. Let the Government keep out of business except for governmental purposes.

We have created commissions for the construction of great buildings in this country; we have placed in the hands of the War Department millions of dollars for the deepening of our rivers and channels; we have established many departments and bureaus for the handling of Government business. Why not establish some commission to handle this valuable property and leave it to that commission to take charge of it and work out the problem in a business, governmental, and equitable manner, subject to the approval of Congress?

I sincerely trust this committee will be wise enough not to launch upon this half-baked, half-thought-out proposition, which sets a precedent for government in business. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to proceed for one minute out of order. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that we are proceeding in a very childlike and unreasonable way in considering this legislation. I believe for the good of the legislation itself the gentleman from Pennsylvania should withdraw his motion of last week and give us two hours to debate the amendments, so that Members and the people may know what we are doing. No one knows what we are doing. Everything is confusion and we should proceed in an orderly manner. Of course, if the House wants to go on in this way I am satisfied. I am asking this in the interest of good legislation and not to delay the passage of the bill. I am doing it in the interest of orderly procedure, and I wish the Chairman would join with me in bringing this about.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I demand the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MORIN: Page 29, in line 2, after the word "or," insert "wrongfully and unlawfully."

The CHAIRMAN The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Chairman, I ask for recognition.

Mr. REECE rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Tennessee to defer, as the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. REECE], a member of the committee, is asking recognition.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Chairman, I submit a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BYRNS. These amendments which come from the committee, which are not being debated, can be as well offered after the hour's debate has been concluded as now.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. They are completed now, I understand.

Mr. BYRNS. Why should the committee take up the time within this hour when vital amendments are ready to be offered?

The CHAIRMAN. The time taken in presenting the amendments is not taken out of the hour.

Mr. REECE. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. REECE: At the end of section 17, on page 26 insert: "Provided, That $2,000,000 of the capital stock authorized in this section shall be made available with which to begin the construction of the said Cove Creek Dam during the calendar year 1929: Provided, however, That the said amount shall be returned to the capital assets of the corporation out of the appropriations which hereafter may be made for the construction of said Cove Creek Dam."

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, on that I reserve the point of order. There is so much noise that I could not hear the reading of the amendment distinctly, but it occurred to me that it is probably subject to the point of order upon the ground that it makes an appropriation. I ask that the amendment be again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

There was no objection, and the Clerk again reported the Reece amendment.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment is in effect an appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Illinois on the point of order.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I make the further point of order that it is not germane to the section to which it is offered.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Tennessee on the point of order.

Mr. REECE. Mr. Chairman, section 17 provides an authorization which shall constitute the capital stock of the proposed corporation, and it further provides an authorization for the construction of Cove Creek Dam. The amendment provides that when the appropriations which constitute the capital stock of the proposed corporation are made, $2,000,000 shall become available with which to begin the construction of the dam.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair calls the attention of the gentleman to the fact that his amendment relates to section 17, which is the section in the bill that calls for the construction of the Cove Creek Dam.

Mr. CLARKE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to have the amendment again reported, because it is not clear in my mind, due to the confusion in the Chamber, whether this refers to Cove Creek or gold brick.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair calls the attention of the gentleman from Tennessee to the fact that while this section pertains to the construction of Cove Creek Dam, the amendment has to do with certain capital stock and the making of that capital stock available to begin the construction of the dam. There is nothing in section 17 of the committee amendment to the Senate bill which in any way has anything to do with the capital stock of the corporation.

Mr. REECE. The section makes an authorization for the construction of Cove Creek Dam, and my amendment seeks to authorize that part of the construction which is authorized in a previous section shall be made available for this purpose when so appropriated.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair again calls the attention of the gentleman from Tennessee to the fact that there is nothing in the section at all which relates to capital stock. It does authorize an appropriation, but there is nothing pertaining to capital stock. The gentleman's amendment clearly relates to the capital stock and makes $2,000,000 of the amount available for this purpose.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Would that amendment be germane to section 4, which provides for capital stock?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will rule on that point when the time comes, if it does come. The Chair is of opinion that the point of order should be sustained.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, may I add the suggestion that it adds to the powers of the corporation and should have come under that section.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order on the ground that it is not germane to the section.

Mr. REECE. Mr. Chairman, I offer another amendment at the same point in the bill, which should read——

Mr. CLARKE. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman from Tennessee is out of order, because all amendments should be submitted in writing.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman insists upon that point of order, the Chair must sustain the point of order.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will first recognize the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS].

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out sections 17 and 18 of the committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee moves to strike out sections 17 and 18. The Clerk will report his amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BYRNS: Beginning on line 1, page 25, strike out all of section 17 and section 18, ending on line 2, page 27.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Chairman, if my motion prevails, it will result in eliminating from the pending bill all reference to Cove Creek Dam, in Tennessee, and the authorization carried in this bill for the construction of that dam.

Every one concedes, I think, that Muscle Shoals should be used primarily for the benefit of agriculture. I have been doing what I could ever since the completion of the dam to secure this result. It will be recalled that immediately after the war it was proposed to scrap the $17,000,000 that had been expended toward the construction of the dam and the more than $100,000,000 spent on the two nitrate plants. It fell to my lot as a member of the Committee on Appropriations to lead the fight in the House for the money necessary to complete the dam. We are all anxious to see some disposition made of this property belonging to the United States Government at Muscle Shoals, but I am unwilling to vote for this bill which has been reported by the Committee on Military Affairs without hearings and without previous notice to the delegation from the State of Tennessee, whose sovereign proprietary and revenue rights are invaded.

It proposes to take from the State of Tennessee its legal rights, and is nothing more nor less than a gross usurpation of those rights. It seeks to deprive the State of Tennessee of its sovereign right to control and direct the use of its own natural resources which are held by the State in trust for the people, and, if passed, it will result in depriving its taxpayers of millions of dollars annually in revenue for all time to come.

Let no Member who votes for it be deceived as to the true intent of this bill. In order to put the Federal Government not only in the fertilizer business but also in the power business it proposes that the Federal Government shall enter into the State of Tennessee without the consent of the State and build a dam on Cove Creek for the storage of water and the generation of power. The State is to have no voice in the regulation, control, and distribution of the power thus generated. Neither the State nor the industries located within the State are to share in the benefits of this power, because the bill proposes to build a transmission line to carry this power into the State of Alabama to be used for the benefit of industry located at Muscle Shoals and to be sold by the Government. It proposes to collect revenue from the increased power resulting at the lower dams in Tennessee and to pay the same into the Treasury of the United States in perpetuity, although such revenue justly and properly belongs to the State of Tennessee. It has been estimated that this revenue will amount to more than $2,000,000 annually. Tennessee is being asked to surrender this amount to the Federal Government for all the years that are to come without any resulting benefits therefrom.

I know that an amendment was adopted here a few moments ago which strikes out of this bill certain language providing for contributions from these dams to be built on the lower part of the river; but I submit to you, gentlemen, that that amendment amounts to nothing, because under the Federal water power act the Federal Government already had the right to make an assessment upon those dams for the benefit of the Federal Treasury. That language was mere surplusage, and its elimination does not affect the situation in so far as the rights and interests of Tennessee and her citizens are involved in this bill. Let no Member be deceived by this eleventh-hour action of the chairman in offering this amendment. It concedes nothing to the State. The point is that Tennessee is to be deprived of these possible revenues, and particularly of any benefits of the power generated at Cove Creek, because it is to be denied any right to have a voice in its location. Not only that, but the bill takes from the taxable value of the county in which this dam is to be located more than 54,000 acres of land which will be flooded, without compensating benefits.

There never was a grosser usurpation of the sovereign rights of a State than is sought to be made under the terms of this bill. To carry out its purpose the proposed bill takes this particular dam out from under the express authority and terms of the Federal water power act, which provides that the States shall have a voice in the granting of a permit for power sites within the States and prescribing the conditions under which dams may be constructed. If these sovereign rights of Tennessee can be violated, as it is proposed to violate them here, then the same thing may be done in any sovereign State. It is not a local problem; it is a national problem. I appeal to the fairness of the House not to take this action until Congress has declared a national policy. [Applause.]

The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HILL], whose State is so greatly benefited at the expense of a sister State, admitted that such a national policy should be declared but he urged that this bill should be passed now and such a policy established at a later date. In other words, he made the astounding proposition that Congress take away the rights of Tennessee at this time for the benefit of his own State and later pass an act which would prevent such action in the future. All this is to be done under the guise of aiding navigation, when everyone knows that this is the plainest sort of subterfuge. You are asked to pass this bill which will legislatively declare this gross usurpation to be for the benefit of navigation and thus hamper and possibly defeat Tennessee in its effort to protect its rights in the courts. For everyone knows that it is the general practice of the courts not to controvert a fact legislatively declared even though it may be susceptible of proof that such declaration was not justified.

The passage of this bill will tend to delay water-power development in east Tennessee. The appropriations for the construction of Cove Creek Dam will depend upon future Congresses, and we all know how long such construction is frequently delayed, especially when it involves an expenditure of $37,400,000, which is the amount estimated as the cost of the dam. Pending construction, I think it exceedingly questionable whether private interests will be willing to build all of the lower dams until advised just what charges will be fixed and just what the policy of the Government will be toward releasing the water stored at Cove Creek.

The committee has made no report or estimate of the total cost of the plan proposed at Muscle Shoals and including Cove Creek, and Congress is being asked to approve this bill in the absence of approximate estimates as to the total cost. The other day in response to a question from me the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. WRIGHT] stated that the installation of a phosphoric-acid plant would cost perhaps $10,000,000, and that in his judgment no further appropriation would be necessary by Congress. In the hearings before the joint committee, however, Mr. Bell, representing the Cyanamid Co., represented that the whole expenditure for ammonium phosphate plants to absorb 40,000 tons of cyanamide in making the capacity production of ammonium phosphate would cost $35,000,000 without any working capital at all and that the phosphoric-acid plant would cost about $8,000,000. This represents the cost at total capacity, and it is, therefore, open to very serious question as to whether or not the committee has provided for the full capacity of fertilizer under a Government-operation plan by an authorized appropriation of only $10,000,000. Congress should have been furnished with more definite information on this subject and time should have been afforded in the consideration of this bill in order that all these questions might have been cleared up. Instead of that it is being rushed through without giving Members time and opportunity to discuss and consider it. The truth is that neither the Committee on Military Affairs nor anyone else knows to what extent it will involve the Government.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Tennessee in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, if there is anything I dislike to do it is to differ with my good friend Mr. BYRNS, whom I greatly admire and for whose opinion I have the greatest respect. But when he makes the statement that the striking out from this bill the provisions in reference to the other dams below Cove Creek and says that that does not affect the purpose of the bill I must disagree.

I am in a different position from my friend Mr. BYRNS, who comes from middle Tennessee. I come from east Tennessee. I live in Chattanooga, on the banks of the Tennessee River, and many of these dams are in my district and their developments are being held up.

The object and purpose of the amendment offered by me, and which has been adopted, was to strike from this bill in section 17 that part of said section which undertakes to direct the Federal Water Power Commission to assess contributions against all who build dams below Cove Creek on the Clinch River and the Tennessee River.

It is likely that the Federal water power act passed in July, 1920, would give the commission this authority; but that is a general act and this is a specific requirement. In the general act the Federal Water Power Commission has the discretion of determining these charges upon an equitable basis. The words in this act make the charges obligatory and specific. With this section stricken out it leaves the State of Tennessee and the rights that we claim in the same position as we are now. To have passed this bill without this section being eliminated would mean that no permits would be issued for these various dams below Cove Creek until the Cove Creek Dam was built.

I am in full sympathy with the amendment offered by our distinguished leader, Mr. GARRETT, on last Wednesday, which had for its purpose the rights of the State of Tennessee in these water-power projects; but that amendment we lost, so it seems to me that the section to which I have referred being eliminated, leaves us, from a legal standpoint, in the same attitude as we are at present under the Federal water power act. At least it does not complicate matters further by other legislation which tends to take from us our rights as a State.

It would have been well to have opposed and defeated the Federal water power act at the time of its passage; and if so, this conflict of authority between the State and the National Government would not have been so serious.

I am very sorry, indeed, to have to take a different position from some of my good friends in the Tennessee delegation, but I am somewhat differently located and interested in the advantages that might be acquired by this legislation.

Many of the dams that we desire to be developed are in my immediate section, and the building of the Cove Creek Dam would result in great benefit to my district. I am very anxious to see the Muscle Shoals proposition disposed of, and so are the people of my section. On account of our location and the headwaters for this great dam originating in east Tennessee furnishing the greater portion of the water for the Tennessee River, we are naturally tied up with Muscle Shoals. We can get no developments of the dams in east Tennessee until this Muscle Shoals proposition is disposed of. We want action; we want to be released; we want to take advantage of the wonderful natural resources that we have, but this we have been unable to do on account of our situation.

The Government has spent some $850,000 in the survey of the Tennessee River and its tributaries, and many dams have been located outside of these few that are specified on the Clinch and Tennessee Rivers, but not a single permit has been issued for the development of any of them. You will doubtless remember that when the Rivers and Harbors Committee would make their reports including certain amounts for this survey they would often refer to these wonderful dam sites and predict that this section would become the Ruhr district of America. The natural resources that we possess are worth nothing unless we are given an opportunity to develop them. Our sister States in the South have not been so handicapped. Between the years of 1922 and 1926, inclusive, there have been either preliminary permits or licenses issued by the Federal Water Power Commission for water-power developments in the following States, as follows:

	Horsepower
Alabama	683,800
Florida	96,000
Georgia	94,000
Kentucky	451,300
North Carolina	75,800
South Carolina	204,400
Virginia	100,000
Tennessee	None.

Under these conditions, is it not time for our people to become restless when the progress of our State is being handicapped? You can see from this our great anxiety for the disposition of Muscle Shoals. I feel with this section cut out of the bill that the rights of the State of Tennessee as to the dams below Cove Creek will remain just as they are now and probably the State of Tennessee and the Federal Government can settle these rights.

As to the Cove Creek Dam, I am frank to say that I think the Federal Government has the right to build a dam there, because such storage dam would affect flood control and navigation, which would give it constitutional authority. This dam should be built by all means, as it is the key to the whole situation. If built, as it should be built, it will be a storage dam and will cover 54,000 acres of land. The Tennessee River gets very low during the summer season, and this water would be held and turned loose when needed, thereby greatly benefiting navigation, and with two other dams built between Muscle Shoals and Chattanooga, where I live, we would have 9 feet of water for navigation on the Tennessee River. During winter and spring, when we have our heaviest rains, the water would be held, and the $250,000 damages along the Tennessee River that we have yearly would be averted. Speaking more especially of the city where I live—Chattanooga—it would lower the high-water mark 5.8 feet and thereby stop the great losses and suffering that sometimes occur and make available for uses much valuable property. It would also increase the horsepower of all dams below it from 100 to 110 per cent. If I remember correctly, the Government will get the benefit of increase of horsepower at Muscle Shoals of 124 per cent. It will not only increase the horsepower of these various dams, but it will decrease the cost of horsepower, which will make the dams more inviting and should give the public the benefit of cheap electricity, which would mean the rapid growth and development of our section of the country. As an illustration of the decrease in the cost of horsepower, let me cite you the figures of the Government engineer for two places: Construction cost per horsepower, without benefit of storage, White Creek, $1,464; with storage, $366. Construction, without storage, Chickamauga, $777; with storage, $262. Anyone who makes any study of this whatever can see the importance of Cove Creek Dam's construction. Should it be built by the Federal Government or by private capital? In the first place, it is extremely doubtful whether or not private capital would ever build it. I feel that I am violating no confidence when I state that I have been so advised by a person who is in a position to know. I am of the opinion that if it is ever built it will have to be built by the Government; and the Government should do it. If the Government owns and operates it, it will be used for flood control and navigation, and will also deal fairly with all those who build dams below; if a corporation builds it, it will be used strictly for power purposes, and will give said corporation control of the dams below, which would be a monopoly.

For the reasons stated, and the great advantages that would particularly result in my district, and which I think would be of great service to my State, I shall support this bill with this elimination.

Congress has been trying to dispose of Muscle Shoals for something over seven years, but has been unable to do so. We have tried to agree upon leases, without avail; and during this session of Congress only one corporation made any effort or offer to lease this property, and their proposition was so unreasonable that the Military Affairs Committee of the House refused to bring it out. Something must be done. The people demand it, and the interests of the people warrant it. The present bill is not what I would like, but legislation is generally a matter of compromise. I have always opposed putting the Government in business, and I know that the majority of this House has the same views; but the answer to that is that there has been no solution of this problem, and it looks as if there can be no solution and that the Government is already in business at Muscle Shoals; then why not make it a business that is profitable and one that will serve the great mass of the people who need assistance? The controlling feature in this bill with me is the releasing for development the wonderful dam sites in east Tennessee.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired. All time has expired.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. CONNOLLY of Pennsylvania) there were—ayes 56, noes 79.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. REECE rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Tennessee rise?

Mr. REECE. Mr. Chairman, I rise for the purpose of offering an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. REECE: At the end of section 4, on page 12, insert: "Provided, That $2,000,000 of the said capital stock shall be made available during the calendar year 1929 for the construction of Cove Creek Dam, as hereafter provided, when so appropriated."

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order, first, that the amendment is not germane to the section; and second, that it is in effect an appropriation.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard on the point of order.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, on the question of germaneness, this is not the section that deals with the powers of the corporation. This section deals only with the amount of the capitalization and the matter of its acquisition. It does not deal at all with the purposes for which the capital stock is used. There is another section which deals with that.

Mr. LAGUARDIA rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from New York rise?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the point of order. Section 4 is the section which authorizes the capital stock and it provides how it shall be made available. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee simply provides that of the $10,000,000 a part thereof, to wit, $2,000,000, shall be used for a specific purpose, as provided in the bill. It is not an appropriation, as the gentleman from Illinois suggests, for the simple reason that it is limited. The capital stock provided here is for what? For the purposes of the corporation, and surely it is germane, where the total capital stock is provided for, to take a part of it for a specific purpose as provided in the bill.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, in response, I beg to suggest that section 4 does not state any purpose as to how the $10,000,000 is to be used. It simply provides for the acquisition and for the amount of the capital.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. What does the gentleman believe it is for if not for the purposes of the corporation?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Section 4 does not state the objects of the corporation.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. REECE. No; not on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that the point of order is well taken. The section to which it is offered, section 4, pertains only to capital stock. The amendment provides that $2,000,000 of the capital stock shall be made available during a certain period for a particular purpose. The Chair is of the opinion the amendment is not germane to the section to which it is offered and therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. McMILLAN, Mr. COLLINS, and Mr. LINTHICUM rose.

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. McMILLAN: Page 14, line 19, after the word "sell," strike out the word "fertilizers" and insert in lieu thereof the words "fixed nitrogen."

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, as you know, I have only five minutes in which to discuss this amendment, and if you will bear with me for these few minutes I will call to your attention what I conceive to be an amendment that carries out the original provisions of the Muscle Shoals act of 1916, and that is to amend the bill to provide for the manufacture of nitrates.

It is assumed and agreed by everybody here that we want to make some disposition of this problem. I am one of those who has that opinion; but let us not come in here with some half-baked scheme to-day with the idea of putting the Government into competition with private business and legitimate industry. My contention is that with respect to this proposition we should confine it to the manufacture of nitrates. This is a product that the Military Affairs Committee of this House and Congress itself has said is needed in time of war, and in time of peace we can manufacture these nitrates for the benefit of the farmers of this country.

You have heard stated on this floor that we import nitrates from foreign countries, and under my amendment we will save at least $10,000,000 for the agricultural interests of our country.

My amendment simply provides that we confine this to the manufacture of nitrates and nitrogenous fertilizers and cut out this great big scheme of launching the Government into private business under a policy which I think the rank and file of the people of this country are against.

My friends, this amendment is offered in all seriousness, and I appeal to the membership of this House that on this occasion you go ahead and comply with the original act of 1916 and manufacture nitrates at this time for the benefit of the country in war times and in peace times for the benefit of the agricultural interests of our country.

Mr. WRIGHT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McMILLAN. I am sorry I can not yield, as I have only two more minutes.

My friends, I appeal to you in behalf of my amendment. There is not a man on this floor who can foresee or foretell when this country will have an emergency and confronted with war. We may wake up any morning and find a war threatening our country. If this is true—listen to me—if this is true and you have run out the fertilizer industry of this country by such legislation as is here proposed, what are your farmers going to do on that morning when the Government, under section 12 of this bill, has the right, as it ought to have, to come in and take over the operation of Muscle Shoals—for what purpose? For the purpose of the manufacture of munitions of war. I ask you, then, what is going to become of the agricultural interests, with the private fertilizer industries gone? I say to you, my friends, it is true you may have explosives for our soldiers to shoot, but I appeal to you—and, I think, very logically so—that while you will have explosives you will be lacking fertilizer to raise the bread that our soldiers should consume.

I tell you, my friends, this matter of going into competition with private business is a very big and broad problem to which, as one Member of this House, I am very much opposed.

I believe that confining this activity to the manufacture of nitrates and relieving the farmers of $10,000,000 to $12,000,000 of royalties paid to foreign countries annually will serve the purpose and we will enact some legislation here that the people of the country will heartily approve. [Applause.]

I want it distinctly understood that this amendment is offered purely for the purpose of securing legislation that will become a law and at the same time give the farmer some relief with reference to fertilizers. I can understand why those gentlemen located near Muscle Shoals should oppose this amendment, because they will be certain to get their fertilizers, and then they will probably be able to get them cheaper than we can in South Carolina, but what is the use of trying to pass a bill that has no chance in the world to become a law and allow this Muscle Shoals problem to remain, as my colleague [Mr. FULMER] has heretofore said, a political football to be kicked around from year to year. If my amendment is passed the Government should be able to make all of the nitrates needed by the farmers of this country, and they should be able to get nitrate of soda for at least $25 per ton. If so, this will mean something to agriculture that is worth while, and this is what I want to see done.

Another reason I am offering this amendment is, as I have already indicated, which is to the effect that unless we can get something of this kind it is generally understood that the President will veto the bill, which he has already indicated he would do under the existing provisions of the bill, and I sincerely trust that those who are really interested in securing cheaper and better fertilizers for the farmers of this country will support my amendment, because it will certainly give us cheaper nitrates and nitrogenous fertilizers, and this is what I am working for. [Applause.]

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

I want every man in this committee to understand what this amendment means. It is an amendment proposed by the fertilizer factories of the United States in order to keep Muscle Shoals from being operated for the benefit of agriculture. [Applause.] That is exactly what it means.

The fertilizer factories of this country would be happy to have only nitrates manufactured at Muscle Shoals. Why is all this howl made here when, with 8,000,000 tons of fertilizer used on the farms of the United States, this Congress, which is supposed to be the honest representative of the great mass of the people, is endeavoring to put a Government plant into operation capable of making only 2,000,000 tons of finished fertilizer?

This amendment is intended to kill the project. Every man who votes for this amendment that has been offered here is slapping the farmers of the United States in the face and kicking them in the ribs [laughter and applause], and the gentleman who offered the amendment knows it. He has offered at the behest of the fertilizer factories. Are you representing men who are engaged in making fertilizer or are you representing the people of the United States who must buy fertilizer, sow it on the ground, work in the rain and sun 13 months in the year to make food and raiment to sustain and clothe the American people? [Laughter and applause.] This is the man for whose benefit this legislation is brought here, and when you vote for such amendments as the gentleman from South Carolina has offered here, you are killing the bill.

Mr. SCHAFER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. QUIN. This is a fertilizer bill. This is, in a measure, a strict interpretation of section 124 of the national defense act, which meant not what the gentleman from South Carolina said, but meant for the plant to be operated for the purpose of making fertilizers in times of peace.

Mr. SCHAFER. Is the gentleman in favor of the Government entering into all types of business in this country like they are doing in Soviet Russia?

Mr. QUIN. I am in favor of the Government operating the plant that it owns. It built this plant, and the United States Congress voted to pay for it, and stated what we should do with it in time of peace, and that was to make fertilizer, and that is what I am voting for here. The Government ought to use it to do something for the people, and I am shocked that my good friend from Wisconsin, representing a splendid progressive citizenship, would vote against this bill. Every laboring man and every farmer in the United States will rise up and call this Congress blessed if it passes this measure. It would be a great progressive help to the farmer that would in my judgment be a consummation devoutly to be wished by the farmer and the great mass of people in this Republic. [Applause.]

Mr. WRIGHT. The gentleman from South Carolina said that the Congress authorized the manufacture of nitrates only when it authorized the construction of this plant. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the purpose there stated was for the production of nitrates or other products needed for munitions of war and useful in the manufacture of fertilizers and other useful products.

Mr. QUIN. I was on the committee and I know it was for the manufacture of fertilizer in time of peace. That is what this bill is for and I hope the House will stand by the committee. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. All time on this amendment has expired, and the question is on the amendment of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. McMILLAN].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. McMILLAN) there were 112 ayes and 75 noes.

Mr. WRIGHT and Mr. McMILLAN demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed Mr. MORIN and Mr. McMILLAN as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were 141 ayes and 89 noes.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, I have other amendments in order to make the bill consistent.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. McMILLAN: Page 10, line 18, after the word "manufacture," strike out "mixing, selling, or distribution of commercial fertilizer" and insert in lieu thereof the words "selling or distribution of fixed nitrogen."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer another amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 11, line 4, after the words "of producing," strike out "fertilizer" and insert the words "fixed nitrogen."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, I am offering these amendments to make the bill consistent with my first amendment which was adopted. I offer the further amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 11, line 6, after the word "said," strike out "fertilizers" and insert in lieu thereof "products."

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, the adoption of these amendments, of course, means that there will be no fertilizer for the farmer. You are going to manufacture nitrogen that you can not sell. You are not going to give the farmers anything. Under the Snell bill, unless he materially amends it, and under the bill before the committee, you are going to turn this nitrogen plant over to Doctor Cottrell, and here is what he says about this proposition:

Mr. WRIGHT. You would not think that it was practicable to go there, with the plant as it is now, and undertake to put out 40,000 tons of nitrogen in the form of nitrate of ammonia, would you?

Doctor COTTRELL. No, sir.

Mr. WRIGHT. You think that would be a losing proposition?

Doctor COTTRELL. We would simply have it accumulating on our hands. That is what it would amount to.

Mr. WRIGHT. There would be no sale for it in that form?

Doctor COTTRELL. No, sir; not immediately for agricultural purposes.

Mr. WRIGHT. Very well.

So, gentlemen, by voting this amendment into the bill you give the farmer no fertilizer.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has announced that a motion to strike out the last word is not in order, because it is an amendment in the third degree.

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, how much time is there left for debate under the original agreement?

The CHAIRMAN. Less than a half hour. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer another amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. McMILLAN: Page 12, line 4, after the words "production of," strike out "fertilizer" and insert "fixed nitrogen."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. We may just as well know what we are doing by the adoption of these various amendments. As the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. JAMES] has well told the committee, if we proceed to adopt these amendments there will be no fertilizers for the farmers of this country manufactured at Muscle Shoals. In my judgment there will be little for the farmers at Muscle Shoals if these amendments are adopted. If we deny fertilizers to the farmers at Muscle Shoals, we reverse a policy that has been the policy of the Congress of the United States since 1916. If gentlemen will read the debates held on this floor at the time that the construction of the plants at Muscle Shoals was authorized, they will find that at that time it was the declared intent of the Congress that those plants should manufacture and turn out finished fertilizers for the farmers. As far back as 1919 Mr. A. G. Glasgow, the nitrate director of the War Department, sought to get private parties to take over the plants at Muscle Shoals to manufacture finished fertilizers for the farmers. For weeks, days, months—yes; literally years—the Military Affairs Committee of this House and the Committee on Agriculture of the Senate have labored, have toiled in an effort to get some one to go to Muscle Shoals there to make finished fertilizers for the farmers. This House has three times said that these plants were to be used to manufacture finished fertilizers for the farmers. This House by a substantial majority passed the McKenzie bill, which provided for the acceptance of the offer of Henry Ford, under which offer Mr. Ford was to turn out finished fertilizers for the farmers. A little later in 1925 this House passed the Snell resolution providing for the Muscle Shoals inquiry commission, and in that resolution the House again stated that it was the intent of the House that the plants at Muscle Shoals should be used for manufacturing finished fertilizers for the farmers. For a third time the House made that same declaration in 1926 when it passed the joint resolution providing for the joint committee of the two Houses of Congress to negotiate for bids for the lease of the plants at Muscle Shoals.

Likewise on three different occasions the Senate of the United States has declared its intent that the plants at Muscle Shoals should be used for turning out finished fertilizers for the farmers. And now, after all these years, after these three declarations by the House and these three declarations by the Senate, are we to reverse that policy, are we to go back upon the original dedication of these plants to the turning out of finished fertilizers? Let us not deceive ourselves.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL of Alabama. I can not yield. I have only five minutes.

Let us not deceive ourselves. Those who come from the great farming districts, and who declare that they want to do something for the farmer, are now refusing to give him relief when they vote to take finished fertilizers out of this bill. I was surprised to see this amendment coming from my good friend from South Carolina [Mr. MCMILLAN], because I know that in one year's time the farmers of the State of South Carolina have expended $50,000,000 for the purchase of their fertilizers.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MCMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. MCMILLAN: Page 17, line 3, after the words "distribute the," strike out "fertilizers" and insert "nitrogen products."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. ALMON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. If this amendment is adopted, it takes the very heart out of the bill.

Every Muscle Shoals bill which has been before Congress and passed either House of Congress has provided for the manufacture of fertilizer. That means a complete fertilizer. Now, this amendment of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. MCMILLAN] proposes to strike out the word "fertilizer" and insert in lieu thereof "fixed nitrogen." We have promised the farmers all along that fertilizer would be made at Muscle Shoals when the plant was put into operation. Now, when this and other amendments offered by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. MCMILLAN] provided for in this bill will be limited to the production of fixed nitrogen I believe that we should keep faith with the farmers and provide in this bill for the making by the Government of a complete concentrated fertilizer at Muscle Shoals. We have been insisting and demanding all along that this be done, but now it seems that the fertilizer lobby has induced a sufficient number of Congressmen to vote to limit the production of the Government to fixed nitrogen and not allow the making of a complete fertilizer, as is provided in the Morin bill as reported by the Committee on Military Affairs. Those who are opposing the making of a complete fertilizer by the Government on the ground that it would be Government operation in competition with private capital and industries engaged in the manufacture of fertilizer in this country are mistaken. It means that the Government is going into its own business, the operation of its own plant for the benefit of its own people and in competition with foreign capital, the Chilean nitrate monopoly, with headquarters in London. [Applause.]

We have met in this historic House this afternoon to vote on and decide one of the most important issues which has been before Congress in many years. We are acting in the capacity of a jury to decide an issue made up between the strong and the weak. On one side is the great foreign monopoly, the Chilean corporation, the power monopoly, and the Fertilizer Trust. On the other side are those engaged in agriculture, the tillers of the soil, who earn their bread by the sweat of the brow. We have heard much talk recently about the Government going into business in competition with private industry. It has been overworked. This bill does not mean the Government going into competition with private industry; it simply means that the Government is going to carry on its own business for the benefit of its own people. If it means competition with any interest, it is with foreign interest, and not only foreign interest but a great foreign trust and monopoly, one which has bled the tillers of the soil for more than 40 years to the extent of at least $11,000,000 per year. [Applause.]

Our soil is being depleted and must be replenished with nitrogen. It is said by those who should know that there are 21,000,000 tons of nitrogen over every square mile. All other countries except ours have been, and are, operating great air-nitrogen plants for taking this essential plant food known as nitrogen from the air and fixing it into a solid substance to be used by the farmers as a fertilizer.

The fertilizer mixers do not produce nitrates, but buy it and the most of it is Chilean nitrate, and, as I have said heretofore, this forces the American farmer to pay tribute to a foreign country to the amount of $11,000,000 per year. So the Morin bill means competition not only with foreign capital but a great foreign monopoly which not only controls the price of Chilean nitrate but nitrate in all other forms.

The Congress in 1916, realizing its neglect of agriculture by providing for such plants, authorized and appropriated the money with which to construct such a plant; and it was thought then that it would be in operation in a very short time, but the selfish monopolistic interests of the power and fertilizer combinations have up to this hour defeated the will of the people; and we have continued to permit this great fertilizer octopus to furnish the American farmer with this high-priced inferior grade of fertilizer for which he pays tribute to a foreign Government to the extent of at least $11,000,000 per annum, and freight rates over more than 6,000 miles for a so-called fertilizer containing 85 per cent dirt and 15 per cent nitrogen. After eight years of continuous labor and effort on the part of our committee to which this subject was assigned they have brought to us by an almost unanimous report a bill carrying out the law of 1916, and one that will protect the farmers against the further imposition of this unreasonable and unjust fertilizer system. The committee has heard the evidence, had it reduced to writing containing several volumes of printed matter. The committee has also filed its report and has advised us as to what they thought should be done. So the issue has been made up and the evidence introduced, and it becomes our duty to render within the next few minutes a verdict involving the best interest and welfare of those who till the soil and feed and clothe the Nation. May we be given the wisdom and the courage to decide this issue between the strong and the weak in such a way and such a manner as to do justice to all. Ours is the greatest country on the globe. Our people have demonstrated that we are the greatest Nation of people in existence. Our form of Government is unequalled by any other in the galaxy of nations.

May we be able to resist the arguments of the lobby representing the pernicious trusts and monopolies and hear the appeal of the men and women on the farms crying out for farm relief, and who are not able to come here nor send a lobby. [Applause.] Some of the representatives they sent here to protect their interests have joined the ranks of the lobby opposing their best interest. They must look to us and to us alone to protect their interest.

Shall we produce our own nitrates by taking it from the air at the Government's air-nitrogen plant at Muscle Shoals or continue to buy it in the form of Chilean nitrate? As I have said heretofore, the war air-nitrogen plants in Germany are being operated for fertilizer purposes and the German farmers no longer pay tribute to the Chilean nitrate monopoly, but on the other hand Germany has become a large exporter of fertilizer and some of it is being imported into this country. Shall we continue to pay tribute to this foreign monopoly or shall our Government operate its plant at Muscle Shoals and save the farmers many, many millions of dollars? That is the issue to be settled at this time.

I shall be greatly disappointed if this bill is amended in such a way that the Government corporation provided for in the Morin bill will not be authorized to make a complete highly concentrated fertilizer. This is what I have stood for all along, so I appeal to you to vote down this and all other amendments which will prohibit the Government from making a complete high-grade fertilizer that can be sold to the farmers at a very much lower price than they are now paying. However, if it is changed I will have the satisfaction of knowing that I have done the best that I could to secure for the farmers of the country the very best and cheapest fertilizer possible. Some members of the House seem to have changed their views in regard to the bill since the arrival of the fertilizer lobby, but I shall stand firm in the interest of the farmers I have the honor to represent. I would not be disloyal and unfaithful to the people who have honored and trusted me for all the gold and silver and ranches of Albert Fall. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired. All time has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to state that in view of the fact that the gentleman from South Carolina has sent up quite a number of perfecting amendments, he thinks it would be better not to offer those now until the hour of debate has been concluded.

Mr. MCMILLAN. Then, in order to save time, I will ask unanimous consent that all these amendments may be considered en bloc.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COLLINS: Page 22, line 2, after the word "by," strike out "a reputable firm of certified public accountants" and insert in lieu thereof the words "the General Accounting Office"; on page 23, line 4, after the word "violated," insert "after the amount of damages has been fixed by the United States Court of Claims in proceedings instituted and conducted for that purpose under rules prescribed by the court."

The CHAIRMAN. The latter amendment is merely read for the information of the committee. The gentleman from Mississippi is recognized in explanation of his amendment.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the first amendment is offered so that the General Accounting Office shall make annual audits of this Government-owned corporation instead of the reputable firms of certified accountants.

Mr. ARENTZ. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ARENTZ. A few moments ago the Chair said the whole debate was over, and that the hour had passed, and that all debate on this amendment and other amendments had closed.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to inform the gentleman that we are running under the rules of the House and under the rule and order of the committee, limiting the debate to one hour. The debate a moment ago was exhausted on the particular amendment.

Mr. ARENTZ. Who specified that time?

The CHAIRMAN. That was provided by the rule of the House.

Mr. ARENTZ. Did you divide the time between the two sides, or how? For in several instances the Chair declared at an end all debate on certain sections and all amendments thereto.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair limits the time allowed to each Member to five minutes. The debate has closed on the particular amendment. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLINS] will proceed.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Chairman, the amendment merely strikes out the words "a reputable firm of certified public accountants," and authorizes the annual auditing to be done by the General Accounting Office of the United States Government. This bill creates a Government corporation, and the General Accounting Office, another Government agency, ought to do the auditing. The expense of auditing will be less and the work better done. All of us know of the splendid work that is done by the General Accounting Office, and its usefulness can well be utilized in this case.

That is the first amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. We can not hear the gentleman.

Mr. COLLINS. I will state it again. The first amendment permits the auditing of this Government-owned corporation to be done by the General Accounting Office rather than by a firm of certified public accountants. It is a governmental corporation, and some governmental agency ought to do the auditing; and the General Accounting Office has been set up for this purpose and similar purposes.

The next amendment deals with the question of damages that may arise when the plants to be operated are taken over by the Government in the case of war or national emergency. Section 12 permits the Government under these circumstances to take over the property of this corporation or any part of it for the use of the Government, and provides for the payment of damages that may be suffered by any party whose contract for the purchase of electric power or fertilizers or fertilizer ingredients is thereby violated.

There will necessarily be damages on account of the taking over. Under the terms of the act as it now stands there is no agency set up to determine the amount of these damages. The amendment that I offer authorizes the Court of Claims to fix the amount of the damages under rules to be prescribed by the court.

Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of this legislation. I think it is an excellent bill. It will have my support even if these amendments fail. I think, however, the amendments are meritorious, and if adopted will contribute to economic management. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is recognized.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, this is an opportunity I have long sought. While I do not doubt the absolute good faith of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLINS] who has just offered the amendment, I want to say that amendments have been offered to-day not because gentlemen wanted to help the bill, but because it was sought to destroy this bill. [Applause.]

It seems to me that when the American Congress is confronted with an unholy alliance between the Power Trust and the Fertilizer Trust, the American people have not a look-in or a chance. [Applause.]

The arrogance and brazen attitude of the lobbyists have been talked about in the cloakrooms and in the lobby; and just at the time the Federal Trade Commission has been exposing the indecent conduct of the Power Trust we find the House in the humiliating position of bowing and accepting their dictates. [Applause.]

I want to say, gentlemen, that the conduct of the lobby of the Power Trust and the conduct of the lobby of the Fertilizer Trust is living proof that the world's oldest profession is not limited to any one sex. [Applause.]

Why, gentlemen, when the Senate bill came over here, and the intent was to utilize this great plant and make power, we had the Power Trust opposing it; when it was sought to use one of the finest plants in the world to make fertilizer, then we found the Fertilizer Trust against it. Now we have a combination of the two. We have constantly heard a complaint against the high cost of fertilizer, yet we find Members who pretend to have the welfare of the farmers at heart bowing in humble submission and voting for amendments which destroy the purpose of the bill.

Gentlemen, for six years efforts have been made to get this great plant into the hands of private operators. Some of you gentlemen may talk about Government operation, but only yesterday you had a bill here which provided for the operation of the inland waterways barge line, and what was stated on the floor? The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON] stated frankly that the purpose was to let the Government operate as long as it was a losing proposition, and then, when the operation was on a profit-paying basis, it is to be given over to private operation. It requires no imagination to know just what will be said when that time comes. It will be argued that the Government lost money; that it is unable to operate; and after it is turned over to private operation it will thereafter always be used as an example against Government operation. It will be entirely forgotten that it took the Government to initiate the plan, develop it to the point of profitable operation, and then to be grabbed and gobbled by a private corporation to enjoy the profits. Yes; when that time comes I dare say that every one of the so-called conservatives will be ready with their made-to-order speeches against Government operation. I can not understand how these greedy, exploiting corporations can always manage to find enough "me-too" men to vote for their bills.

It was the same with the railroads. At the time this country was confronted with an emergency that required the greatest efficiency in the operation of the railroads the companies came cringing to Washington admitting that they were not able to perform the task. The Government took the railroads over and demonstrated the waste and loss of private operation. It took the Government to show how terminals could be used in common, how duplicate freight lines could be eliminated, and no matter what may be said the Government operated the railroads efficiently during a period of crisis when the operation was under every possible disadvantage.

I believe, and I do not hesitate to say so, in Government or State operation of water power for generating electricity. I believe that this gift of God to the people of the country belongs to all of the people and should be utilized for their benefit and not monopolized by any corporation for the purpose of exploiting the masses of consumers. As between the cost of Government operation and the cost to the people of excessive, exorbitant rates imposed by public utilities corporations the people of the country will save hundreds of millions of dollars under Government operation.

There is hope in this bill. There is still hope that we will be able to defeat its going into the hands of any private concern. Oh, there are many hanging around like hungry wolves hoping that this bill will be defeated, so that they will have another chance to grab Muscle Shoals. There is still hope that we will be able to save this priceless plant for the American people. There is hope that we may make it a model to establish what should be the reasonable and fair price for power and the reasonable and fair price for fertilizer. Under the McMillan amendment, which I am sure can not survive after the bill gets through conference, the farmer will derive no benefit, but the Fertilizer Trust will be able to get cheaper nitrates to increase their present exorbitant profits. It will not be long before the farmer realizes that. For that reason I am sure that such an arrangement will never be permitted to remain in the bill. But, gentlemen, let us pass the bill to-day and get it into conference. From the conference I am sure after the American people realize what is going on public opinion will be so crystallized that there will come a bill protecting the interest of the American people and carrying out their wishes and not the wishes of the power and fertilizer lobby that have been infesting Washington during the present session of Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired. The question is on the first amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLINS].

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is now on the second amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi, which, without objection, the Clerk will again report.

There was no objection.

The Clerk again read the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. REECE], a member of the committee.

Mr. REECE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. REECE: After section 17, on page 26, add a new section, 17–a, to read as follows:

"When the capital stock herein provided is appropriated the board of directors of the said corporation shall make available not to exceed $2,000,000 with which to begin the construction of the Cove Creek Dam during the calendar year 1929."

Mr. REECE. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of my amendment is to unlock the development of water power in the Tennessee Valley. The engineers estimate that the Tennessee Valley is capable of producing more than 2,000,000 horsepower of hydroelectric energy.

There is at this time a demand for this hydroelectric power by reason of the industrial development which is going on in east Tennessee. Private enterprise is ready to develop it, and has applications pending before the Federal Water Power Commission for permits to do so. The commission, however, has refused to grant permits for the construction of any dams until the policy relating to Cove Creek has been settled. The Cove Creek Dam, as you have been told, is to be used as a giant reservoir to impound the water for the purpose of regulating the flow of the Tennessee and the Clinch Rivers. Under the provisions of this bill the Government is being authorized to construct Cove Creek Dam, but it provides no time in which the construction of it shall begin, in consequence of which the development of water power may continue to be held in abeyance.

The amendment which I have submitted authorizes, when the capital stock of the Muscle Shoals Corporation has been appropriated, that not to exceed $2,000,000 shall be made immediately available with which to begin the construction of Cove Creek Dam, as provided in section 17 of the bill. If the bill is adopted and becomes a law, the Government has said it is going to construct the dam, but no appropriation may be made available for that purpose for a period of years; consequently we will continue to be held up in the development of our water power in the Tennessee Valley, which is the greatest asset we have in our State.

We do not care whether the Government constructs the Cove Creek Dam or not. We would prefer that private enterprise construct the dam, but if the Government is going to step in and say it is going to construct it, then I say some provision ought to be made for its early construction, so that other dams on the Tennessee River shall likewise be made available for construction by private enterprise. Applications are pending from private capital for the construction of all of these dams, but the Federal Water Power Commission will not grant permits for the construction of them, as I have said, until the policy relating to the Cove Creek Dam has been decided.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REECE. Yes.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I think the gentleman recognizes the fact that the construction of the Cove Creek Dam will expedite navigation on the Tennessee.

Mr. REECE. Certainly. It will expedite navigation on the Tennessee and likewise take care of flood control on the Tennessee.

I have discussed this amendment with various members of the committee, and it is my understanding they have no objection to it, and I certainly hope it may meet the approbation of the members of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. REECE].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I am presenting some perfecting amendments to my substitute, and I desire to have them read and then I ask to be recognized on the amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will report the amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SNELL to his substitute: Page 6, line 14, after the word "production," strike out the words "including a reasonable rate" and insert in lieu thereof the word "exclusive."

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from New York yield for a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. SNELL. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. BANKHEAD. There was so much confusion in the Hall that some of us could not hear the proposal of the gentleman from New York. I wish the gentleman would restate it.

Mr. SNELL. I asked to have the amendments which I have presented read, and then I desire to discuss them all at one time.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Amendments to the gentleman's substitute?

Mr. SNELL. Yes; they are perfecting amendments to my substitute.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I reserve a point of order against that at this stage of the proceedings, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do not think, until we have concluded the consideration of the committee substitute, it is in order to offer amendments to the gentleman's substitute or to discuss them.

The CHAIRMAN. There is pending now, and has been since a week ago, the substitute that was offered by the gentleman from New York, and the gentleman is now offering certain amendments and has requested to have the amendments read at this time for the information of the committee.

Mr. SNELL. Then I desire to be recognized in support of them. There is nothing out of order or unusual about that.

Mr. BANKHEAD. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman. Will this time be taken out of the one hour originally allotted?

The CHAIRMAN. The time which the gentleman consumes will be taken out, but not the time used in propounding the parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I mean the time the gentleman proposes to use in debating his amendment. Will that be taken out of the one hour fixed by the committee?

The CHAIRMAN. It will be.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, may I inquire how much time remains of the one hour?

The CHAIRMAN. About 12 minutes. The Clerk will continue reading the amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 7, lines 3 and 11, after the word "Agriculture," insert "or other designated agent."

Page 2, line 22, after the word "except," strike out "for a continuous output of 15,000 kilowatts" and insert "such amounts of either primary or secondary power as may be required from time to time under sections 9 and 10 herein."

Page 5, line 2, after the word "Agriculture," insert "or other designated agent."

Also, page 5, line 17, after the word "Agriculture," insert "or other designated agent."

Page 6, line 5, after the word "Agriculture," insert "or other designated agent."

Page 6, line 9, after the word "Agriculture," insert "or other designated agent."

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, whatever time I have taken in discussion of this bill has been taken in an honest attempt to present some constructive plan for the use and disposition of the property that we own now at Muscle Shoals.

Some reference has been made to the substitute which I have offered. I say here now on my reputation as a Member of Congress that whatever there is in the substitute that is good belongs to me; whatever there is in the substitute that is bad, or if it is all bad, belongs to me. I did not present my substitute to any one of the various lobbies that infest this Capitol. I never presented it to anyone until it became public property, and I did this purposely, because I expected some man would charge me with having had it written by some other person. I do not know my supposed friend Tom Martin, that my friend ALMON spoke about the other day, but the gentleman does him an injustice if he says or suggests that he wrote my bill, because he never saw it, and I never saw him.

Mr. ALMON. I did not say he did. I said that would be my guess.

Mr. SNELL. Now, in regard to my amendments, the only criticisms I have heard so far in regard to my substitute that were legitimate criticisms were that it did not provide enough power to do what I want done. I think this is perhaps a reasonable criticism and I have offered a perfecting amendment that will provide whatever power is necessary in order to carry out the provisions of sections 9 and 10 of the bill. In my judgment a large amount of the secondary power can be used for the provisions carried in this bill.

As to the question of interest charge, I have also stricken that out and made it without interest.

Another criticism that was raised by my friend from Michigan [Mr. JAMES]—and he raised it again here to-day—was that under the provisions of my substitute the Secretary of Agriculture would have to do the work of making these experiments and of manufacturing the nitrates or fertilizer, provided fertilizer was manufactured under my bill. I have amended the substitute to meet this criticism by providing "or any other designated agent." This means the President of the United States can designate the American Cyanamid Co., if he wants to, to make the experiments in the cyanamide plant at Muscle Shoals.

Mr. JAMES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. For a short question; yes.

Mr. JAMES. Will the gentleman explain lines 4 and 5 on page 2?

Mr. SNELL. I have not the time to do that, and the gentleman knows it.

Mr. JAMES. That is the gist of it.

Mr. SNELL. Now, as a matter of fact, the only charge that has been made against my substitute has been that it is a power bill. Let me simply say, gentlemen, that if selling power and taking the revenue from such sale and using the revenue to perfect the manufacture of nitrates, in order that we may give the farmers of this country cheaper fertilizer, means a power bill, then my bill is a power bill, and that is all the "power" there is in it, because it does not do a single thing for any of them except that.

Under the amendments which have been adopted the only thing Members of the House can do—provided they want to manufacture fertilizer at Muscle Shoals—is to vote for my substitute. Furthermore, the substitute I have offered does not provide for any additional appropriation. It does away with the conflict between the States as to the control of power, and in a word simply uses the property we own at Muscle Shoals at the present time for the benefits that it was originally created for, and that is the experiments in the manufacture of nitrates and for the sale of power. I feel that this is a real practical substitute and I hope it will be adopted by the House. [Applause.]

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SNELL. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. What might be behind the telegram that I have received this morning from the New York Farm Bureau Federation which says that unless the Snell bill is used to make fertilizer——

Mr. SNELL. Oh, I know nothing about it. I have received 50 telegrams to-day and I know they are all propaganda, because my initials were wrong in every telegram. [Laughter.]

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the issue now is very sharply drawn. I say with all due respect to the gentleman from New York—and I do respect him sincerely—that the bill that he has introduced, knowing the situation as I have acquired knowledge of it in the committee for the last five years—and I am going to ask members of the committee who are acquainted with the situation whether I am correct in this or not—that the substitute offered by the gentleman from New York will function in actual practice under the powers delegated to the Secretary of War to lease power and under the power delegated to the Secretary of Agriculture to make so-called experiments in agriculture will be a complete frustration of the original aim of section 124 of the national defense act and will amount purely and simply to a power proposition. [Applause.] Not only that, but it will amount to the delivery of power into the hands of the Alabama Power Co. at its own sweet price.

That company alone is in position to take the power and bid for it, and therefore will alone be in a position to fix the price.

Mr. SNELL. My bill provides for the Federal Government to lease the lines or build their own.

Mr. McSWAIN. Who is going to administer the law? The Secretary of War and his representative and the Secretary of Agriculture and his representative and we know their psychology and what will be the outcome.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman does not think the Secretary of War will be changed next year?

Mr. McSWAIN. When it comes to administering this bill it will be done by some major or captain who will administer it in the name of the War Department.

Now, gentlemen, the issue is plain. Under the bill as it has been amended by the efforts of the gentleman from South Carolina I am satisfied that it meets all of the requirements of the fertilizer companies, because they will get cheaper nitrogen. The farmer will get some benefit from the bill as amended. The fertilizer companies will be sure to go into competition with each other and give thereby the benefit to the farmer in the reduced price of nitrogen.

Furthermore, this bill, if we vote out the committee substitute, and if we vote down the Snell bill and send the bill to conference, it will be in conference, and any inconsistencies and conflicting provisions between the Norris bill can be ironed out and the bill as brought back by the conferees will settle, I hope, forever the question of Muscle Shoals, which has been agitating Congress for the past 10 years. So we are asking you to vote down the power proposition of my friend from New York and let us send this bill, which has been very badly mutilated but is still in the race, to conference when we may get something for the benefit of the farmers through the manufacture of nitrogen and nitrogen products. [Applause.]

So friends of the farmers will help vote down the Snell bill and support the committee bill as amended.

Mr. WELSH of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. WELSH of Pennsylvania: Page 17, line 5, after the word "States," add "and such fertilizers, after distribution among the several States, shall be subject to the tax that may be imposed by the several States upon fertilizers produced therein."

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the gentleman's amendment. It is not germane to the bill. It seeks to invoke the taxing power of the Government. That is not in this bill at all. The gentleman seeks to deal with the power of the Federal Government to levy taxes, or with the States to do the same thing. I make the point of order that it is not germane.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LAGUARDIA: Page 16, line 12——

Mr. RAMSEYER (interrupting the reading). Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order. The gentleman from New York [Mr. WAINWRIGHT], a member of the committee, has been demanding recognition.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can not recognize gentlemen simply because they are members of the committee. The Chair recognizes gentlemen who offer amendments and those who oppose amendments that have been offered. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 16, line 12, after the word "power" strike out the period, insert the following: "Provided, That preference shall be given to States, counties, and municipalities in the sale of such surplus power."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for one and one-half minutes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, this section provides for the distribution of surplus power to States, counties, municipalities, corporations, partnerships, and individuals. My amendment provides that preference should be given to the States, counties, and municipalities in accordance with the express wishes of the gentleman from New York and in accordance with the purpose of the bill. If this power is to be used in order to bring down the cost of power, unless we adopt this amendment, which is taken from the Norris bill, we will simply be producing power to turn over to the Alabama Power Co. This amendment should be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York [Mr. WAINWRIGHT] for one and one-half minutes.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, the way in which the committee bill has now been amended, leaves comparatively little to choose between it and the Snell substitute. They are both pure Government operation measures, both provide for Government operation of both the dam and the nitrate plants, but in my judgment of the two the committee bill offers the more effective medium for Government operation. It provides for the operation of the various plants through the medium of a Government corporation, which is preferable to delegating that responsibility to the Secretary of War and the Secretary of Agriculture as is provided in the substitute. The committee bill also provides for a fund to conduct the operation.

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. I can not yield. It provides a working capital to conduct the operation whereas under the Snell bill both the Secretary of Agriculture and the Secretary of War would start without a cent at their disposal. If we are really now to turn to Government operation as the alternative to abandoning these plants, we must at least put this corporation in funds to conduct the business. If gentlemen are now willing to favor Government operation of these plants at Muscle Shoals, then the committee's bill, in my judgment, affords the better method. Much as I would like, if I consulted my personal preference, to support the plan offered by a gentleman for whom I have so high a regard as my distinguished colleague from New York, I can now find no sufficient reason for breaking away from my committee and supporting this Snell substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I now offer the amendment for a vote which I presented for information.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would suggest that there are several amendments to the committee amendment, which would probably be better disposed of in the first instance. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MERRITT].

Mr. MERRITT. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 27, line 3, strike out section 19.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, I have several perfecting amendments which I desire to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina offers certain perfecting amendments in line with the amendment already adopted by the committee. The Clerk will report the amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. McMILLAN: Page 17, line 6, after the words "price of," strike out the words "fertilizers and."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MORIN) there were—ayes 128, noes 84.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. McMILLAN: Page 17, line 18, after the words "users of," strike out "commercial fertilizer" and insert in lieu thereof "fixed nitrogen."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 18, line 3, after the word "sell," strike out "the fertilizers, or the fertilizer" and insert in lieu thereof "fixed nitrogen or its ingredients."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 18, line 14, after the words "and sell," strike out "fertilizers" and insert in lieu thereof "fixed nitrogen."

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, what amendments are these?

The CHAIRMAN. These are all amendments introduced by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. McMILLAN]. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 19, line 2, strike out "concentrated fertilizers" and insert in lieu thereof "fixed nitrogen."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 19, line 7, after the word "nitrogen," strike out the comma and the remainder of the paragraph and insert a period after the word "nitrogen."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 19, line 18, after the word "of," strike out "said fertilizers in" and insert in lieu thereof "fixed nitrogen."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 19, line 20, after the words "use of," strike out "said fertilizers" and insert "of the same."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 20, strike out all of lines 6, 7, 8, and 9.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 23, line 3, after the words "power or," strike out "fertilizers or fertilizer" and insert the words "fixed nitrogen or its."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 23, line 7, after the words "used in," strike out the word "fertilizer" and insert the word "nitrates."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. WRIGHT. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia demands a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 108, noes 86.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 27, lines 12 and 23, strike out the word "fertilizers" and insert in lieu thereof "fixed nitrogen."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. There being no other amendments to the committee amendment, the Clerk will report the first amendment to the Snell substitute.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I think it would be better to put that in the order in which it comes in the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 2, line 22, after the word "except," strike out "for a continuous output of 12,000 kilowatts" and insert in lieu thereof "such amount of either primary or secondary power as may be required from time to time under sections 9 and 10 herein."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the first amendment to the Snell substitute.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HILL of Alabama) there were—ayes 117, noes 95.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 5, line 2, after the word "Agriculture," insert "or other designated agent."

In line 17, the same amendment.

Page 6, line 5, the same amendment.

Page 6, line 9, the same amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 6, line 14, after the word "production," strike out the words "including a reasonable rate" and insert in lieu thereof the word "exclusive."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 7, lines 3 and 11, after the word "Agriculture," insert "or other designated agent."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOCH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which I have sent to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HOCH to the Snell substitute: On page 3, line 7, strike out the period after the word "used," insert a semicolon, and add the following: "Provided, That in any contract of sale of power under this act the purchaser shall agree that any resale of such power to the ultimate consumer shall be at a price that is reasonable, just, and fair, as determined by the Federal Power Commission."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs upon the Snell substitute as amended to the committee amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MORIN) there were—ayes 119, noes 151.

So the Snell substitute was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is now upon the committee amendment as amended to the Senate resolution.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MORIN) there were—ayes 153, noes 61.

So the committee amendment as amended to the Senate resolution was agreed to.

Mr. MORIN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the resolution back to the House with the amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the resolution as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. NEWTON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration Senate Joint Resolution 46, providing for the completion of Dam No. 2 and the steam plant at nitrate plant No. 2 in the vicinity of Muscle Shoals for the manufacture and distribution of fertilizer, and for other purposes, had directed him to report the same back to the House with an amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the resolution as amended do pass.

Mr. MORIN. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution and amendment to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, on that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee demands the yeas and nays. Those in favor of ordering the yeas and nays will rise and stand until counted. [After counting.] Thirty-six gentlemen have risen; not a sufficient number.

So the yeas and nays were refused.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the resolution.

The resolution was ordered to be read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the resolution.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MORIN) there were—ayes 251, noes 165.

So the resolution was passed.

On motion of Mr. MORIN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was passed was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS—MUSCLE SHOALS

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, in view of the conflict of opinions relating to the action of both the House and the Senate upon Muscle Shoals, I offer some suggestions and observations for the clarification of the issues and to let the public know just what the issues now are, and just what the Congress has in mind with reference to Muscle Shoals.

NATIONAL DEFENSE

It can not be too often repeated nor too much emphasized that the primary object of Muscle Shoals is the safeguarding of the national defense. When in 1916 the Congress enacted the great national defense act which incorporated section 124, it was based upon the truth that without nitrates with which to manufacture explosives, our country would be utterly helpless in time of war. We have within the bounds of America, though rich in many mineral resources, absolutely no natural deposits of nitrates. Consequently, we have been forced to rely throughout our history upon Chilean nitrates. Even when the Panama Canal is open, Chile is a long way off from the Atlantic seaboard; and if an enemy fleet or enemy airplanes should destroy the locks of the Panama Canal, we would be cut off from Chilean nitrates and our battleships would be futile and our Armies helpless without explosives. Furthermore, during the World War it took 20 per cent, which is one-fifth, of all of our American shipping to transport nitrates from Chile to the United States. This cost us $550,000,000, of which $97,000,000 went to the Chilean Government itself as an export duty. The American taxpayers in time of war and the American farmers in time of peace have virtually maintained the Chilean Government by this export duty, without the imposition of any taxes by the Chilean Government upon the people of Chile.

DOMESTIC SUPPLY OF NITROGEN

It was therefore natural and reasonable that all thinking men should realize the necessity of having a domestic supply of nitrogen. For that reason section 124, providing for the establishment of such a plant as Muscle Shoals, was enacted in 1916. For the same reason General Pershing in his final report, dated March 29, 1920, called attention to the Muscle Shoals nitrate plant and commented upon the happy circumstance that this essential feature of making war may be used for the commercial manufacture of nitrogen in time of peace so as to return a reasonable profit on the investment and at the same time keep the plant in good condition for military purposes.

In fact, the truth is that the more nitrogen we fix in time of peace to be used as fertilizers and for other commercial purposes, the better equipped must our plant be in experience and in training, for the fixation of nitrogen in time of war. Furthermore, we can not afford to depend upon private industry to supply us with nitrogen in time of war. It is true that two or three private plants in this country are in operation, but no such nitrogen goes into fertilizer at the present time. Furthermore, the amount of nitrogen consumed in time of war increases more and more with each war, and we may anticipate that the next war, which will drop bombs from airplanes in vast quantities, will employ larger guns than ever and will use hand grenades and various other forms of explosives, and so will consume much more nitrogen, perhaps many times more per unit of time and per soldier, than any previous war. For illustration: The American Expeditionary Forces in its 110 days of fighting in France used more explosives than did all the Union Armies during the four years of war between the States of the North and the States of the South. Furthermore, the single battle in France of St. Mihiel used more explosives than did the Revolutionary Armies during the seven years of fighting. In fact, the small American Army is now using each year more nitrates as explosives, in the form of powder and other charges, just for target practice and experimental shooting, than did the American Armies use in fighting during any one year of the Revolutionary War.

MUSCLE SHOALS IS A WAR PLANT

So it is manifest that Muscle Shoals is an indispensable asset of national defense, just as a navy yard in Charleston, just as an artillery camp at Fort Bragg, N. C., just as an infantry camp at Fort Benning, Ga., just as the arsenal at Rock Island, just as the airplane factory at Dayton, Ohio, and just like any other activity of either the Army or the Navy in the cause of national defense. As previously stated, the $700,000,000 a year that we are spending for the Army and the Navy, for sailors and soldiers, for battleships and cannon, for pistols and rifles, would be worse than thrown away without an ample and abundant supply of nitrates with which to discharge the cannon, to fire the rifle, and to construct the bomb weighing 2,000 pounds or more to be dropped from the airplane.

WHERE AGRICULTURE COMES IN

But it so happens that this same nitrogen, so essential and indispensable for war, is the most vital plant food and that which is most needed in the American soils and especially in the soils of the Atlantic States and the South Atlantic States, which have been longest in use. Nitrogen is the vital and valuable part in nitrate of soda. It is the valuable part in every form of compost, or cottonseed meal, or fish scrap, or packer trimmings. This nitrogen is necessary to produce the vegetation and the grain, which in turn feed and fatten the animal, which in turn supports and sustains the life of man. Fortunately, therefore, this element of nitrogen, which constitutes 80 per cent of the atmosphere we breathe, may be employed in times of peace to multiply the products of the soil and thereby multiply animal life. This inert nitrogen we breathe, when fixed in combination with other elements such as oxygen, calcium, and various chemical combinations, is what the farmer needs most to hasten and hurry his crops to maturity. There is no by-product of the navy yard that is useful to the farmer; there is no by-product of the Army arsenal that is useful to the farmer; there is no by-product of any other military activity useful to the farmer. But, fortunately, the by-product of keeping Muscle Shoals in first-class condition for the manufacture of nitrates for war is highly valuable to the farmer and can make him independent of the producers of Chilean nitrates and of the Government of Chile that has lived upon the product of the labors of the American farmer.

WILL THE FARMER GET ANY BENEFIT?

While the action of the House of Representatives prohibits the manufacture of a finished fertilizer at Muscle Shoals and confines the activities of the corporation organized by the bill to the fixation of nitrogen and to the production of other forms of nitrogen, yet the farmer is bound to get much benefit from the production in mass quantities of nitrates at Muscle Shoals. How and why? For illustration, if the corporation operates to its capacity the existing plant, it can fix at least 40,000 tons of nitrogen per year, and perhaps 50,000 tons. This nitrogen can be sold and will be sold at less than one-half of what the fertilizer manufacturers are now paying for the nitrogen they import from Chile.

Since they can obtain this essential and highly valuable ingredient of fertilizers from Muscle Shoals at less than one-half of the present prices they are now paying for nitrogen, they must and will give the farmer the benefit of this reduced cost of producing finished fertilizers. There will be competition among the various manufacturers, bidding for the farmer's trade, and in this way the farmer will benefit. But if the fertilizer manufacturers should fail to permit this reduction in the costs of nitrogen to be reflected in the prices of the finished fertilizers, the farmers have it within their power to compel the fertilizer manufacturers to come to terms. The farmers can cooperate and combine their requirements and buy carload lots of nitrogen at Muscle Shoals. In the same way they can buy carload lots of phosphoric acid and of kainit containing potash, and the cooperative association can rig up a rather inexpensive mixing plant, and combine these three ingredients in the right proportions and distribute them among the cooperative associations. Furthermore, other States can follow the example of South Carolina and authorize some State officer just as South Carolina has authorized the warehouse commissioner to buy fertilizers or fertilizer ingredients and sell them to the farmers at actual cost. Thus the States can come in, and using the cheap nitrogen purchased at Muscle Shoals, help their farmers to cut in a very substantial way the present prices of fertilizers.

PLAN PROPOSED IS PRACTICAL

Mr. Speaker, I have been amazed at some of the propaganda literature which has been put out by the National Fertilizer Association. This literature tries to make the impression that the proposal contained in the substitute of the House Military Affairs Committee, and known as the Morin bill, is radical and novel and unexpected, and therefore constitutes a harmful surprise to the fertilizer industry. Let us look at the facts.

The Norris bill is in several respects more far-reaching and more destructive of the fertilizer industry than the Morin bill. Just why the fertilizer manufacturers did not raise a howl of protest against the Norris bill when it was in the Senate and after it passed the Senate, while it was before the Committee on Military Affairs, is difficult for me to understand. The Norris bill authorized the construction and operation of fertilizer factories not only at Muscle Shoals, "but anywhere in the United States." Thus, the number was unlimited and might be placed anywhere in the United States. The Norris bill did not confine activities at Muscle Shoals to mere experimentation, but authorized the "production of fertilizers in the largest quantities practicable and shall be disposed of at the lowest prices practicable." Furthermore, under the Norris bill all the money derived from the sale of power would constitute a special fund to be used for "the developing, manufacturing, and introducing of improved fertilizers and fertilizer practices for the purpose of reducing the cost of production and of increasing the efficiency of such fertilizers on American soils." This was a dedication of the proceeds of the sale of power for all time to come. Contrast that with the Morin bill.

Under the Morin bill the proceeds of power are to be used only during the first five years, which will manifestly be the experimental period when the cost of production per unit will be higher. Thereafter, for the next five-year period, one-half of the proceeds of power sale only shall be used in reducing the cost of producing fertilizers, and thereafter the fertilizer business shall not only be absolutely self-sustaining, but shall pay a profit upon the capital stock employed of 4 per cent.

The Norris bill does not contemplate any dividend upon the $10,000,000 capital stock which it authorized. Thus under the Norris bill the manufacture of fertilizer might become and could become a nation-wide activity. There could be a Government factory for the manufacture of finished fertilizers under the Norris bill in every State in the Union and in different parts of the same State. However much power might be produced and sold and however much revenue might be derived from the sale of power at Muscle Shoals, the same would be employed for all time to come in cheapening the costs of producing fertilizer. This provision in the Norris bill would be a perpetual and unlimited subsidy. For my part I believe that fertilizers after the experimental period is past should be upon a self-sustaining basis. The evidence before the special commission appointed by the President in 1925 was that it would take a campaign of education lasting from three to five years to instruct and educate the farmers in the proper and profitable use of concentrated fertilizers. Therefore the period of five years fixed in the Morin bill for the distribution of 5 per cent of the product is reasonable and the amount authorized to be donated is reasonable in the cause of education.

FEDERAL CORPORATION USUAL AND REASONABLE

Mr. Speaker, the effort has been made to produce the impression that the proposal of a corporation governed by five directors, as contained in the Morin bill, is radical and revolutionary. The very contrary is the case. The fact is that on April 19, 1920, Secretary of War Newton D. Baker appeared before the Military Affairs Committee in support of H. R. 10329, which was a bill contemplating the creation of a corporation almost identical with the proposal in the Morin bill. That bill will be found at page 831 of part 4 of the Muscle Shoals hearings printed in 1927. Furthermore, the commission, appointed by the President of the United States on March 26, 1925, in its report recommended virtually the same thing.

The majority of the commission, including John C. McKenzie, formerly an honored member of the House of Representatives, and former chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs and living in the State of Illinois; former Senator Nathaniel B. Dial, from South Carolina; and Mr. R. F. Bower, of Virginia, recommended that if no satisfactory private lease of the property could be negotiated, that a Government owned and controlled corporation be set up and the commission outlined in its report the structure of such corporation, and the Committee on Military Affairs followed that suggestion very closely in framing the Morin bill. Furthermore, Federal corporations to exercise Federal powers are too common to cause any surprise or shock. Since the establishment of the first national bank of the United States in 1793 to this good day, the Federal Government has used the power to incorporate organizations to carry on Federal projects. The various Federal land banks, the Intermediate credit banks, the Mississippi Barge Line, the Emergency Fleet Corporation, the United States Shipping Board, the War Finance Corporation, the United States Housing Corporation, the Panama Canal Railroad, and other corporate agencies that do not now come to my mind, are abundant proof that the proposal to operate Muscle Shoals by a corporation under the management of five directors is no reason to claim surprise.

FERTILIZERS ORIGINALLY CONTEMPLATED

Again, Mr. Speaker, a diligent and energetic effort has been made by the National Fertilizer Association to make the impression that the determination of the Committee on Military Affairs, as contained in the Morin bill, to manufacture fertilizers at Muscle Shoals, was an unexpected proposal and a great surprise to the fertilizer industry. There can be no just reason for any such contention. In the first place, as previously shown, the Norris bill, which had passed the Senate by more than a 3 to 1 vote, was a more broad fertilizer proposition than the Morin bill.

In the next place, in the act of June 3, 1916, known as the national defense act, in section 124 the word "fertilizers" was expressly used twice. The common and usual understanding of "fertilizers" is not a single element of plant food, but two or more elements mixed and finished in proper proportions and ready for use by the farmer. Again, on April 24, 1922, the Committee on Military Affairs made its report, which became a part of the public records of the country, and section 2 of that report provided that whoever might "use the property at Muscle Shoals" should be "obligated in the strictest terms to the manufacture and sale to the public of fertilizers in time of peace."

This report was signed by such men as Hon. FRANK L. GREENE, now Senator from Vermont; Hon. JOHN F. MILLER, still a Representative from the State of Washington; Hon. Richard Wayne Parker, then a Member of Congress from New Jersey; the Hon. PERCY E. QUIN, from Mississippi; and the Hon. WILLIAM C. WRIGHT, from Georgia.

Then, on March 26, 1925, the President of the United States appointed a commission to investigate Muscle Shoals, and that commission, consisting of five men, included the Hon. John C. McKenzie, formerly a Member of Congress from Illinois; and the Hon. N. B. Dial, formerly a Senator from South Carolina. That commission appointed by the President made its report, dated November 14, 1925, and the concluding paragraph of that report is as follows:

> It is with great reluctance that we turn toward Government operation, being well advised of all of the infirmities inherent in such an undertaking. The great investment of the Government at Muscle Shoals, however, the importance of its continued maintenance as a part of our national defense, the crying need of agriculture for more and cheaper fertilizer, and the favorable opportunity for meeting that need, all compel us to disregard our prejudices, for we are convinced that to permit longer this great investment to stand idle when it can be of such great service to our people would be little less than a public calamity.

This commission of the President in 1925 plainly advised the public, including the National Fertilizer Association, that the Government might any day turn to the manufacture of "fertilizers" to supply the "crying need of agriculture for more and cheaper fertilizers."

Again, a committee consisting of seven members of the Military Affairs Committee was appointed to hear and consider proposals for the lease of the Muscle Shoals property in 1927, and that committee made a report on March 3, 1927, which was approved by the full committee, and reported to the House and printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and became a part of the records of the Nation. That report contained the following paragraphs:

> 1. That the property shall at all times be subject to the absolute right and control of the Government for the production of nitrates or other ammunition components of munitions of war and that nitrate plant No. 2 must be kept available therefor by the purchasers, lessees, or users of the property.
> 2. That the purchasers, lessees, or users of the property shall be obligated in the strictest terms to the manufacture and sale to the public of fertilizers in time of peace.
>
> 3. That any proposal for the purchase, lease, or use of the Muscle Shoals property of the United States Government must be for the entire property except the so-called Gorgas plan and the transmission line therefrom.
>
> 4. In the consideration of any offers for Muscle Shoals that it be a prerequisite that such offer contain a stipulation that the lessee, operating agency, or owner, as the case may be, be required to return to, or account for to, the Government either in cash or by way of reduction in the price of the fertilizer manufactured, the profits from the sale of power which would have been used in the manufacture of fertilizer in case there had been no discontinuance in the manufacture thereof; that the manufacture of fertilizer may be discontinued only when there shall be such excess accumulation of fertilizer stocks as shall be in excess of the reasonable or prospective demands for such fertilizer, and such manufacture shall be resumed upon reduction to a reasonable degree of such accumulated stock of fertilizer.
> 5. That any bid must contain a provision for the forfeiture of the power rights and fertilizer provisions if there is any failure to produce nitrates in the amount of at least 40,000 tons per year, provided that such forfeiture as may not be due to the neglect, misconduct, or fault of the lessee, shall not include the loss of the reasonable value of the property at the time of the forfeiture, but the lessee shall be reimbursed by the Government for the reasonable value of such property then and there belonging to the lessee and essential to the operation of the plants.

Furthermore, when the Henry Ford proposal was before the Congress, surely every man, woman, and child in the United States heard that proposal discussed, and the main and essential feature thereof was that Henry Ford proposed to manufacture "cheap fertilizers" at Muscle Shoals, and proposed to carry on experiments to see if the electric furnace and electrochemistry could not do for the "fertilizer business" what they have done for industry, and especially for the automobile industry; that is, to see if it would not be possible to produce in vast and unprecedented quantities plant food in concentrated form that could be shipped to great distances with slight freight costs and at very low prices, so that agriculture might receive the benefit and assistance of modern science.

The Ford offer bill passed the House of Representatives and went to the Senate, and, while the same never passed the Senate, the Senate did pass a bill which provided for the manufacture of fertilizers. Furthermore, the Hon. Oscar Underwood, then a Member of the Senate, was the author of a bill that contemplated the manufacture in mass quantities of "fertilizers" at the lowest possible costs.

RESULT OF REVIEW

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, this brief review of the history of the legislation relating to Muscle Shoals must show that from the very beginning the plan and purpose was to manufacture "fertilers," and that plan was kept constantly before the country by the Ford offer bill of 1922 and by the recommendations of the President's commission in 1925 and by every other step that has been taken by Congress looking to the disposal of Muscle Shoals property. Therefore it can not be fairly and justly claimed that there was any surprise in the proposal of the Morin bill to manufacture fertilizers. If the fertilizer manufacturers did not appear before the House Military Affairs Committee and demand hearings with respect to the Norris bill, how could it be expected or anticipated that they would desire to be heard on the Morin bill? As a matter of fact, everybody must understand that the Morin bill is technically and in a parliamentary sense, as well as in a broad and logical sense, a mere amendment to the Norris bill. The Norris bill proposed to use the power at Muscle Shoals to "manufacture fertilizers," either directly by the operation of the machinery at Muscle Shoals or indirectly by the use of the money derived from the sale of power at Muscle Shoals to establish "fertilizer factories in any part of the United States." When that bill came before the House committee it was either to be turned down in toto or to be amended in part or to be amended by a substitute.

The committee decided to set up a practical, businesslike corporation with restrictions and limitations that should have made the Norris bill far more acceptable to the House of Representatives. The committee bill, known as the Morin bill, took the operation of the Muscle Shoals property and the various other fertilizer factories that it contemplated out of the hands of the Secretary of Agriculture, who is a mere Cabinet officer, perhaps with no business experience, and certainly too busy with politics and general administration to pay any proper attention to the Muscle Shoals property. The Morin bill placed the administration in the hands of five competent business men, constituting a continuing board of directors, who would be paid on a per diem basis and not on a yearly salary basis. Furthermore, the Morin bill confined the activities for the manufacture of fertilizers to Muscle Shoals alone and cut out all reference to fertilizer plants elsewhere in the United States. Furthermore, the Morin bill did not approve that part of the Norris bill which contemplated the dedication of the net proceeds from the sale of power at Muscle Shoals to the subsidizing of fertilizers forever. On the contrary, the Morin bill provided that such subsidy should be continued during the period of starting up and experimentation, to wit, the first five years, and that one-half thereof should be continued for the next five years, and that thereafter the fertilizer business should be put upon an absolutely self-sustaining basis, and, furthermore, should pay dividends upon the capital stock, and that thereafter the total net proceeds from the sale of all power should be turned into the Federal Treasury to reimburse the Government for its original investment at Muscle Shoals.

PATENT RIGHTS

Much scare-head propaganda has been circulated against the Morin bill, charging that it violates the rights of patentees for the benefit of the farmers. If those who instigate such propaganda would read section 19 of the bill, they would find that the authority mentioned in that section has been the law since the act of Congress approved June 25, 1910, which act was amended on July 1, 1918, and if they will follow the construction of that act by the Supreme Court, they will find that in the case of Crozier v. Krupp (224 U. S. p. 290) the Supreme Court sustained this act of Congress and fully expounded the relation of the Government of the United States to the rights of patent holders. It must be remembered that the Government itself, by act of Congress, confers whatever rights patentees may have, and therefore it is in the power of the Government to confer those rights upon condition; and one of the conditions is and has ever been the right of the Government itself to use the process or machine described in the patent without any power in the patentee to restrain such exercise by the Government. Before the act of 1910 there was no relief for patentees except to present a bill in the form of a claim to Congress. By the act of 1910 such patentees were given the right to bring an action for compensation in the Court of Claims.

CRIMINAL PENALTIES

Also much propaganda has been employed to frighten the timid because of the criminal clauses contained in the Morin bill. An entirely strained, unnatural, and unreasonable construction was put upon a part of the language contained in subdivision C of section 20, and the propagandists tried to make it appear that if any agent or salesman for a fertilizer manufacturer went out to sell his goods in competition with the goods manufactured by the Government at Muscle Shoals and should claim that his goods were superior or cheaper and should thereby tend to discourage purchases from the Muscle Shoals corporation, and thus finally tend to defeat its purposes, such agent or salesman would be liable to a heavy fine or long term of imprisonment.

I respectfully submit, after an experience at the bar extending through 29 years, that no such possible construction would even be thought of by any judge before whom any case might be brought. The Subdivision C of section 20 deals with a case where any person, for financial reward, enters into any conspiracy or collusion, express or implied, with the purpose of defrauding the corporation or to defeat its purposes, then such person shall be deemed guilty of a crime and be liable to a heavy fine or long imprisonment. Now, the words "defeat its purposes" must be construed in connection with the "receiving of financial benefit," and in connection with the prohibition against "conspiracy" and in connection with the provision to "defraud the corporation." When the context is considered, it means that "if any person shall for profit enter into a conspiracy to defeat the purposes of the Muscle Shoals corporation," he shall be guilty of a crime. In order to make sure that no strained and unnatural construction could ever be put upon its language, the committee offered an amendment which was accepted by the House, so that the conspiracy to defeat the purposes of the corporation must be "wrongful and unlawful" in order to constitute a crime.

TEAPOT DOME SCANDALS IMPOSSIBLE

The purposes of section 20 are to prevent any scandals at Muscle Shoals. Without these criminal teeth in the law there would be danger from the selfish and disloyal cupidity of the employees of the corporation. It is entirely within the range of human probability that such employees may be subjected to great temptation, either from the fertilizer manufacturers, or from the purchasers of fertilizers, or from the purchasers of electric power, or from other persons, firms, and corporations having business transactions with the Muscle Shoals corporation. Therefore, the committee was very careful to safeguard the corporation by including these criminal clauses. The committee well knows that the mere fear of discharge by an unfaithful employee after discovery is not a sufficient deterrent to insure honesty. But if the employee knows that he will face the penitentiary for disloyalty, then he will be ten times more careful and thus ten times more honest in fact than he might otherwise be.

COVE CREEK DAM CLAUSES

Mr. Speaker, there has been much discussion about sections 17 and 18 authorizing the construction of a great reservoir dam in Clinch River in the State of Tennessee and called the Cove Creek Dam due to the fact that it is situated near a point where Cove Creek enters the Clinch River. It must be remembered that the Madden bill, which was pending in Congress in the Sixty-ninth Congress and also in the Seventieth Congress, contemplated not only the tying up of the Cove Creek Dam for at least eight years, even if it should ever be built by the American Cyanamid Co. or the Government. But the Madden bill also tied up four dams in Clinch River below the Cove Creek Dam. We received only a very mild protest against the said provisions of the Madden bill. Two members of the committee are from the State of Tennessee and were present when the State of Alabama presented its claims before the committee in 1927, and the committee never understood that the State of Tennessee was making any special claim to any of the power to be developed at Cove Creek, such as the State of Alabama has made to the power at Muscle Shoals. The committee was compelled to assume that the State of Tennessee was cooperating in the development of the Tennessee River within the bounds of Tennessee, just as it had always cooperated in the development of the Tennessee River within the bounds of the State of Alabama. The committee knew that vast sums of money had been authorized and expended in the survey of the Tennessee River Basin within the limits of the State of Tennessee. These surveys by the Corps of Engineers, extending through many years and at great expense, have estimated a total possible horsepower development within Tennessee of over 2,000,000. Furthermore, the committee has convincing testimony from various experts that the construction of the proposed dam at Cove Creek on Clinch River will practically double the power produced at the Wilson Dam at Muscle Shoals.

This doubling of power is due to the fact that the flood waters of the Clinch River will be retained and impounded, and will be discharged as needed in order to regulate and render more uniform the flow of water in the Clinch River below the dam, and thus in the Tennessee River below its junction with the Clinch River. The prime power developed at Cove Creek will be very limited, only about 8,000 horsepower, with a maximum installation to take care of flood conditions of about 200,000 horsepower. But all the power above the minimum of prime power will be secondary power and of little commercial value. The result of thus impounding the waters of the Clinch River will be to exert a very powerful control over the flood waters of the Clinch River and of the Mississippi River below the Cove Creek Dam. It will thus safeguard the cities along the Tennessee River, such as Chattanooga and all the towns and villages and industries as well as low farm lands. The problem of flood control is an urgent and imperative duty of Congress. Both the House and the Senate recently voted a policy as to flood control to the effect that it is a national obligation and should be paid for in full out of the Federal Treasury.

IMPROVEMENT OF NAVIGATION

Undoubtedly the result of building the Cove Creek Dam will be to increase the navigability of the Tennessee River. It will prevent the excessive and destructive flood waters which are also preventive and destructive of regularity of navigation and destructive of the very agencies of navigation, to wit, boats, barges, landings, and wharves.

Furthermore, to render uniform the flow in the Tennessee River will deepen its channels and make possible the floating of commerce upon the river even during dry seasons, and thus insure regularity of commerce. It had occurred to the committee, therefore, that to confer upon the State of Tennessee and her citizens the enormous blessing of protecting her cities, towns, and villages and industries and farm lands from destructive floods, and to render her great river navigable so that the valuable mineral and forest products as well as manufactured products, might find their way to the markets, would be highly appreciated by the people of the State of Tennessee.

As has been stated, the Cove Creek Dam, with the navigation facilities and power house and transmission line, would involve a total expenditure of nearly $40,000,000 of Federal money. But more than that, to construct said Cove Creek Dam and to operate it so as to double the power developed at Muscle Shoals will also double the power that can be developed at any one of the 11 dams that can be built between Cove Creek Dam and Muscle Shoals. Thus the attractiveness to private capital to go in and construct said 11 dams is greatly enhanced and in fact doubled.

By an amendment in the House the obligation on the part of the builders of the dams below Cove Creek to contribute to the maintenance and operation of the Cove Creek Dam was stricken out. Furthermore, an amendment was inserted providing that the Cove Creek Dam should be commenced pursuant to appropriations by Congress some time within the calendar year 1929 and that the rights of the State of Tennessee shall not be prejudiced by the passage of this act.

It is true that under the division of sovereign powers between the Federal Government and the State of Tennessee there is a certain right in the State of Tennessee with reference to navigable streams within her borders. But it must be admitted that the rights of the State of Tennessee are subordinate to the right in the Federal Government to control navigable streams in the interest of interstate commerce and for the control of destructive floods.

Furthermore the rights of the State of Tennessee and of every other State in the Union, as well as the rights of private individuals, are subordinate to the supreme and sovereign right of the Nation to defend herself in war. Now, the war power is a continuing and perpetual power. The war power does not come into existence merely when war is declared by Congress.

The war power exists in times of peace to prepare the Nation and the resources of the Nation, both human and material, for the possible emergency of war. Hence, there is just as much power in the Federal Government in peace to build a dam in the State of Tennessee for the purpose of doubling the power to be developed at Muscle Shoals in the State of Alabama, as there is and was in time of war for the Federal Government to build the Wilson Dam at Muscle Shoals. If the Federal Government can build one dam in the State of Alabama, it can build two dams in the State of Alabama, even if the second dam is for the purpose of aiding and assisting the first dam to develop power. There may be two dams with only one power house. If the Federal Government has the power to build two dams in the State of Alabama in order to develop power at one power house, so the Federal Government has the power to build one dam in Alabama and another dam in the State of Tennessee, so that the dam in the State of Tennessee may double the power developed in the power house in the State of Alabama.

The Federal war-making power knows no State lines, and no State can raise its hand to restrain or forbid or limit the Federal war-making power, either in peace or in war. The net result of the claim of the State of Tennessee to the effect that she is entitled to claim some benefits of a direct financial kind, whereby her own State revenues may be increased, amounts to the following proposition: That in the exercise of the Federal duty to control flood waters, the Federal Government, even though it pays 100 per cent of the expenses, must also pay to the State a tribute for the privilege of exercising flood control within the State. Furthermore, the proposition of the State of Tennessee amounts to this:

That in order to enable the Federal Government to exercise its control over interstate commerce, and therefore over navigation, the Federal Government must pay such tribute to the State of Tennessee as that State requires as its condition for granting its consent to the Federal Government to control interstate commerce within the State of Tennessee. Furthermore, the proposition advanced by the State of Tennessee amounts to this: That to enable the Federal Government to exercise its right to prepare to make war, by making the most vital and essential commodity for war, to wit, explosives, and therefore to enable the Government to defend its life by preparing to resist the invasion of foreign foes, the Federal Government must obtain the consent of the State of Tennessee for the establishment by the Federal Government within the State of Tennessee of one of its great instrumentalities and agencies of national defense. If these conditions of the State of Tennessee could be sustained, then the supremacy of the Constitution and of the laws of the United States would end. If the State of Tennessee can fix the conditions and limitations under which the Federal Government can prepare to make war, and under which the Federal Government can regulate interstate commerce within its borders, then every other State can impose the same or similar restrictions, conditions, limitations, burdens, tributes, and taxes, and therefore the Federal Government itself will prove to be a powerless, helpless creature of the imagination, incapable of defending its own life.

ADVANTAGES TO TENNESSEE

It does seem that since Tennessee is to receive the benefits of flood control and the advantages of navigation upon the upper waters of the Tennessee River, that these benefits will more than sufficiently offset for the surrender by her of her abstract rights in the bed of the stream and in the water flowing over the bed of the stream. But, in addition, the State of Tennessee receives other benefits. The 11 dam sites below the Cove Creek Dam will be doubled in value, since their power-producing abilities are doubled.

Since these dam sites will become so valuable they will be quickly developed by private capital. Such multiplied power development, resulting in cheap electric power, will bring a quick and vast development in industry along the Tennessee Valley. This development will bring hundreds of millions of dollars into the State of Tennessee for investment, and will increase her population at least a million people within 10 or 15 years. These additional investments, and this increased and expanded industry, and this growth of population, should be the strongest possible inducement for the State of Tennessee to open wide the door of invitation to the Federal Government to build the Cove Creek Dam. It can not be expected that private capital will build Cove Creek Dam in such a way as to produce the indirect benefits of flood control and increased navigability of the river below the dam. It is no concern of private capital to bring about flood control of streams nor to render streams more navigable. Private Capital and private operation at Cove Creek Dam would be for the production of power only. If the same concern that owned and operated Cove Creek Dam for power alone were operated in sympathy with and for the benefit of the 11 dams below Cove Creek, then there might be times when the stream below Cove Creek Dam, and especially the Clinch River, would not be navigable at all; and the navigability of the Tennessee River itself might be seriously affected. Furthermore, Cove Creek Dam might be operated in private hands in such a way as to magnify and increase the serious problem of flood control. Hence, if the Federal Government should not build the Cove Creek Dam, then the State of Tennessee and her citizens might lose the benefits of flood control, and might miss completely the improvement of navigation in the Tennessee River. Futhermore, private capital might never build the Cove Creek Dam. That being so the 11 dam sites below Cove Creek Dam would remain rather unattractive to private capital. Therefore if the Federal Government does not enter the field it may be many, many years before that section of Tennessee affected by the Cove Creek Dam would begin to develop industrially and commercially. With the power of the Federal Government and her nearly $40,000,000 poured into that section to start the wheels of industry turning and to begin to draw the tides of population, and to set in motion the investment of private capital, the rapid and enormous development of that section of the Tennessee Basin is assured.

WHAT IS THE CONCLUSION OF THE WHOLE MATTER?

From the foregoing considerations we must conclude that the businesslike and practical thing to do is to retain that feature of the Morin bill setting up a corporation governed by five directors appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate, and direct them to proceed with the fixation of nitrogen at Muscle Shoals, with power to sell any surplus electric current, but bearing in mind that the demands for nitrogen fixation may increase in the future, so the contracts for the sale of electric power should be for short periods of time or with an option on the part of the Muscle Shoals corporation to cancel the contract upon one year's notice, so as to release the power for the manufacture of nitrogen to be used as a fertilizer ingredient. The board can devise rules whereby the prices of finished fertilizers will reflect the reduced cost of nitrogen. The board can carry on experiments and develop other and more economical processes for fixing nitrogen and work out plans for mixing the nitrogen with other fertilizer ingredients so as to give the farmers full instructions just how to get the fullest benefit of the cheap nitrogen to be manufactured at Muscle Shoals.

RETAIN COVE CREEK

The conferees should retain the Cove Creek proposition in the bill not only to double the power at Muscle Shoals but also for the benefit of the people of the State of Tennessee in controlling flood waters and to make the Tennessee River navigable as a business proposition. To deny to the Federal Government, as the State of Tennessee virtually is seeking to do, the power to build Cove Creek Dam for the three purposes of national defense, flood control, and navigation would be to deny the supremacy of the Constitution of the United States and of the laws made in pursuance thereof. To deny to the Federal Government the power to build a dam at Cove Creek in Tennessee for the purpose of increasing the power developed at Muscle Shoals, in the State of Alabama, would be the same as if the State of Alabama denied the power of the Federal Government to build Wilson Dam.

To deny the power of the Federal Government to build Wilson Dam for the purpose of fixing atmospheric nitrogen in order to secure the national defense, would be to deny the right of the National Government to make gunpowder, and would therefore carry the right to deny to the Federal Government the power to manufacture rifles and cannon and battleships and airplanes. It is not in the power of any State, whether of Tennessee or Alabama, to limit by taxation or otherwise the activities of the Federal Government in aid of national defense or in aid of interstate commerce. Neither the State of Tennessee nor the State of Alabama can question the motives of the Federal Government when it declares that it is exercising a constitutional power. No State can deny the right of the Federal Government to prepare for war in time of peace. No State can say that the Federal Government can build a dam to operate a plant to manufacture explosives in time of war, and at the same time deny the Federal Government the power to build and operate said plant in time of peace. It will not suffice to admit that the war power exists in time of war and does not exist in time of peace to prepare for war. The complete answer would be that the war power would be futile unless there existed the power to prepare, by training men and constructing guns and building battleships and manufacture explosives, before the commencement of war. To admit the right of the State of Tennessee to tax Federal property, constructed in the State of Tennessee for the purpose of performing the constitutional functions of national defense and aiding navigation and controlling flood waters, would be to admit the impotency and incompetency of the Federal Government to preserve its very existence. To admit such a power in a State thus to tax Federal property would paralyze at one blow the integrity and vigor of the Federal constitutional government. Such admission would include, as a logical consequence, the right of the States to tax post offices, to tax salaries of Federal officers, to tax customhouses, to tax mints, to tax navy yards, arsenals, and munition plants, and to impose conditions upon the Federal Government for exercising any of its powers within the domain of a State.

I must make it plain beyond adventure of misunderstanding that there never has been the slightest disposition to disregard, or fail to respect, the rights of the State of Tennessee, or of Alabama, or of any other State. The original draft of the Morin bill and the reported bill, both contained the requirement that the Cove Creek Dam shall be so operated as to increase the low flow of water in the Clinch River and in the Tennessee River, thus aiding navigation, and thus doubling the value of the dam sites below Cove Creek Dam. It was manifest that the flood-controlling influence of the Cove Creek Dam would be for the direct benefit, financial, and humanitarian, of the people of Tennessee. Since the dams below Cove Creek are not required to contribute toward the expenses of the Cove Creek Dam, said dam sites are practically doubled in value and their speedy construction insured. It thus occurred to the committee, having two Tennessee Members on the committee, that the expenditure of nearly $40,000,000 by the Federal Government at Cove Creek would be conferring immediate and enormous financial benefits upon the State of Tennessee and her people. We still think that marvelous industrial development will follow quickly and surely after the construction of Cove Creek Dam. With navigable waters, with ample locks and navigation facilities, with numerous power plants, it is certain that hundreds of millions of dollars of money will quickly flow into that part of Tennessee for investment in various forms of industry. To prove my sincerity in making this statement of kindly feeling and friendship for the State of Tennessee and her splendid people, I declare how happy I would be, how proud of my accomplishment, and how sure of the approval of my constituents, if I could inform the people of South Carolina that the Federal Government would spend approximately $40,000,000 dollars within our borders, and that as a result of such expenditure hundreds of millions of private capital would quickly flow into our State, and at least a million other citizens would come to live with us, to manage, and to work in our new industries! I feel sure that upon such an announcement all our people would rejoice, and no man would think for a moment of taxing the property in which the Federal Government had invested $40,000,000 for the benefit of our own people, and if any man should think of such a thing, he would not dare utter it for fear that such declaration would deter the responsible officers of the Federal Government from making that enormous investment. We have been very proud to secure the promise of an appropriation of $420,000 to construct a Federal Building in Spartanburg, S. C., and to have prospects of obtaining $25,000 for a monument at the Cowpens battle field, and no South Carolinian will ever think of taxing this Federal property, but on the contrary will offer not only encouragement, but aid and assistance to the Federal Government in the exercise of these powers.

Mr. LOWREY. Mr. Speaker, I am certainly for the Morin bill. The Military Affairs Committee and many more of you already know that I am very vigorously advocating its final passage. I have a peculiar interest in it. The committee which drafted it has done me the honor to adopt not only the general plan and policy of my own Muscle Shoals bill, which I introduced in the Sixty-ninth Congress, and again in this Congress, but has even adopted many of the details of my bill, following the very language of it through paragraph after paragraph. I thank the committee, and I am gratified at having been able to contribute so much to the solution of this most difficult Muscle Shoals problem.

When the Morin bill is finally passed, as I believe it will be, we shall have waded through the mire of misleading statements and distorted facts and half truths and plain lies propagated by selfish and greedy and unscrupulous interests, and shall have reached a sane and practical and happy solution of this problem that has vexed and perplexed Congress for eight years. And we shall have made a proper disposition of this great Muscle Shoals plant upon which there has been expended more than $140,000,000 of public money, and which is located at one of the most important and valuable water-power sites that God has given to the people of this great Nation.

We have made a necessary provision for the national defense, along the lines of the original intention of Muscle Shoals. During the World War we were entirely dependent on Chile for nitrates, a necessary ingredient of explosives. Those Chilean nitrates cost us $550,000,000, nearly four times as much as the Muscle Shoals plant has cost, and it took one-fifth of our total tonnage of ships to carry those nitrates from Chile to America. If our ships had been driven from the seas by the German U boats, or if our Panama Canal had been captured or destroyed, we would have been deprived of a supply of gunpowder and explosives, and our armies and ships and guns would have been helpless and useless. Another war now would find us in very much the same situation. We are still without any appreciable supply of domestic nitrogen, and are still importing huge quantities of nitrates for fertilizer and peace-time uses from Chile and other foreign countries. Those who have put out the pernicious propaganda that Muscle Shoals is now incapable of the production of nitrates in large quantities on an economical basis have—deliberately or not—been guilty of endangering our national security. Under the Morin bill, Muscle Shoals will become a domestic and Government controlled source of supply of nitrogen for the use of our Army and Navy, without which the money we spend on Army and Navy is worse than wasted.

We have also done something for the farmer. Will you Members who claim to want to aid agriculture listen to this? The element of nitrogen is just as necessary to the farmer as to the soldier. It is the basis of all fertilizer, and an absolute necessity to plant life. Germany has turned her war-time nitrate plants to the production of nitrates for fertilizer, has given her farmers cheap plant food in abundance, making her lands which have been in cultivation for centuries produce more to the acre than our freshest and richest farms, and is actually shipping into this country the same kind of nitrates that the Muscle Shoals plant is capable of producing. We are paying to the Chilean Government $10,000,000 per year in export duties alone, besides the actual price of the nitrates and the freight on them. Why should our farmers have to pay exorbitant prices to a foreign nitrate monopoly and a premium to a foreign government on every pound of fertilizer they buy? We have a plant, built and paid for with the people's money, standing idle instead of supplying our farmers with fertilizer, because private interests hold up the bugaboo of the "Government in business." I believe in encouraging private endeavor. And I believe that minorities have rights that are sacred, and that in following the democratic principle of majority rule we should carefully avoid any ruthless disregard for the interests of a minority. The bill as reported by the committee put the Government further into the fertilizer business than my original bill did, but the amendments proposed by the gentleman from South Carolina take it back to my plan to have the Government produce nitrates, in competition, if you please, with foreign producers of that element of fertilizer, but not in competition with local fertilizer factories which are strictly mixers of fertilizer. Who objects to our competing with a company whose offices are in London?

Again, we have entered a wedge to split the solidarity of the power interests of this country. The size and the strength and the viciousness of the power monopoly that exists is just becoming fully understood since the Federal Trade Commission began to look into its activities. An industry which has carried on such an insidious propaganda program as has the power industry, going even to the extent of slipping textbooks into the schools which would teach our children that it is right and proper for the Electric Power Trust to have monopolistic control in every community and wrong and improper for the Government to undertake to shake off its strangle hold by operating a Government-owned power plant, has placed itself beyond the pale of our consideration. An industry which has spent a hundred thousand dollars in one State, and perhaps four times that amount in another State, in order to elect men to the United States Senate who will do its bidding, is an enemy of the people and need not appeal to me. I am not concerned that the Morin bill may hurt that industry. I shall be happy that we have saved a great Government-owned electric power plant from the grasping greed of syndicates and trusts and turned it to the real service of providing for our people electric power at reasonable cost to make their burdens lighter, their homes happier, and their lives better worth living.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman and my colleagues of the House, I have invariably supported every measure that has been offered in the House to this date for the disposition of the Government's Muscle Shoals properties that would guarantee fertilizer production in time of peace to our farmers. I voted for the Ford offer and I supported the joint resolution creating a committee of the two Houses to negotiate a lease of the Government's power and nitrate plants at Muscle Shoals that would be "as good or better" than the Ford proposition. While primarily I am opposed to Government operation of the Muscle Shoals plants, in order to finally dispose of the Muscle Shoals controversy and begin to realize some benefits from the tremendous investment the Government has made at Muscle Shoals I am willing to vote for the committee's Government operation bill, provided it is amended in certain particulars.

It is my understanding that certain members of the Military Affairs Committee of the House, in the closing days of the last session of Congress, called on the Secretary of War—and so far as I know these Members voiced the sentiment of the majority of the committee—and requested the Secretary as chairman of the Federal Power Commission not to grant any preliminary permit to any power company for the building of the Cove Creek Dam. As a result of this request, I am advised that the power commission did refuse to act on applications made by power companies to develop this property.

The proposed Cove Creek Dam is in my congressional district, and hence my very great interest in the project. When it is built it is proposed to install 200,000 horsepower. This dam will be 225 feet high; the area of the reservoir will be nearly 55,000 acres, which is almost 85 square miles. The capacity of the reservoir will be 86,000,000,000 cubic feet, or approximately 500,000 acre-feet. This dam will more than double the primary power at every proposed dam below Cove Creek. The proposed Cove Creek Dam will cost from twenty to thirty million dollars, and its regulated flow will more than double the primary power at Wilson Dam. Therefore the increased value to the Government's power property at Wilson Dam abundantly justifies the Government in making this development.

The committee's bill, however, does not definitely provide for the prompt building of Cove Creek Dam, and this is the source of my objection. Section 17 of the committee's bill authorizes the Secretary of War, with appropriations hereafter to be made available by Congress, to construct this dam, but this is entirely too vague and uncertain. Who on this floor can guarantee the action of a future Congress? No Member of this House can, with any degree of reason, guarantee this appropriation. What then does the committee's bill actually do with respect to Cove Creek? The bill in very definite terms ties up Cove Creek Dam indefinitely.

I understand it to be the intention of the Military Affairs Committee in this bill to protect the public and save the people to be served with power from the Cove Creek Dam from exploitation by the power companies. I believe I have the right, and I know I have a duty to perform in the interest of the people of my district, to ask the great committee responsible for this bill to amend section 17 by providing that not less than two million of the ten million which the bill makes available be employed to start forthwith the work of constructing the Cove Creek Dam, and let Congress at its next session return this two million to the corporation created in this bill. And if the committee will not agree to such a just and reasonable amendment, let the committee consent to strike from the bill entirely those sections dealing with the proposed Cove Creek Dam. If Congress will not agree to as promptly as possible build the Cove Creek Dam, then let Congress release Cove Creek to the people of Tennessee, who are ready, willing, and anxious to assume right and responsibility of its development. This is common equity and justice is all we ask.

Although opposed to Government operation, if the bill can be amended to make the necessary funds available to immediately start the construction of Cove Creek Dam, or if in the alternative Cove Creek is stricken from the bill, I will vote for the committee's bill; and in this position I believe I reflect the sentiment of the majority of the delegation from my State. If Congress is unable to legislate for a satisfactory disposition of Muscle Shoals, and industrial development is to be held up longer, even after 10 years of delay, shall this also operate to tie up Cove Creek and other dam sites on the Tennessee River and thus obstruct and stifle all industrial development and opportunity to which this section is justly entitled? I appeal to your sense of fair play, and I know you will agree with me that such rank discrimination is not only unreasonable but unjust as well.

Let the House either agree that the Government shall immediately start the construction of Cove Creek Dam under the terms of this bill, or let the House release Cove Creek Dam and let it be built by the power companies desiring to build it. I favored the Madden bill and regret that the House was not given an opportunity to vote on it. I was for the Madden bill because it provided that the Government should proceed as promptly as possible with the construction of the Cove Creek Dam.

I agree with my colleagues from Tennessee that the sovereign rights of the State of Tennessee ought to be respected by the Federal Government in its plans for Government development and operation of power plants in Tennessee. If, however, the House is unwilling to respect Tennessee's sovereign rights, and the Military Affairs Committee demands that the State of Tennessee shall surrender her rights, then let the House at least be willing to build Cove Creek Dam and not take away Tennessee's rights and do nothing at Cove Creek but tie up the dam and prevent anybody else from building it.

Again, let me say I will vote for the bill, opposed to Government operation as I am, provided the bill is amended so Cove Creek Dam can be built now. This promise to build it if and when Congress decides to make the necessary appropriation to build it does not appeal to me. In the name of the people of my district I appeal to the House either to agree to build Cove Creek Dam now for the Government and by the Government, or release your strong hold on Cove Creek Dam and let the people of my State see if they can not arrange this important development. The Military Affairs Committee owes it to itself, it owes it to this House, it owes it to my district, it owes it to Tennessee, it owes it to the South, either to put up the money to build Cove Creek Dam or get out of the way and let somebody else put up the money to do so.

H. R. 12379. An act granting the consent of Congress to Howard Seabury to construct, maintain, and operate a dam to retain tidal waters in an unnamed cove which is situated and extends from Cases Inlet into section 28, township 21 north, range 1 west, Willamette meridian, in Pierce County, State of Washington.

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A further message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its principal clerk, announced that the Senate had concurred in the following concurrent resolution:

House Concurrent Resolution 36

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the President is requested to return to the House of Representatives the bill (H. R. 9568) entitled "An act to authorize the purchase at private sale of a tract of land in Louisiana, and for other purposes," for the purpose of permitting the correction of an error in the enrolled bill.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS

Mr. TEMPLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of Mary E. Bradshaw (H. R. 7709), no adverse report having been made thereon.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed out of order for five minutes.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object, merely for the purpose of asking unanimous consent that all Members may have five legislative days in which to extend their remarks on the bill just passed, the Muscle Shoals bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that all Members may have five legislative days in which to extend their remarks on the bill just passed. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

MILITARY SERVICE OF REPRESENTATIVE CONNERY

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, ladies and gentlemen of the House, on last Friday during the debate on the disabled emergency officers' bill the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON] in a speech stated as follows:

> No man, not even including my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY], ever rejected a commission because the compensation was not on the basis he desired. I never heard, before my friend spoke yesterday, of any man rejecting a commission and preferring to fight in the ranks. I have myself been a private soldier, and I know what devolves upon a private soldier in war, and if I did not have great faith in my friend from Massachusetts I should suspect his veracity when he assures me that he declined a commission.

A little later the gentleman said:

> I want the Members of the House to feast their eyes on one man [Mr. CONNERY] who refused to accept the honor of a commission, who refused to accept the salary, who refused to accept the social position and the best of everything that the Army had to offer, and instead chose to cast his lot among the lowly and the louse-bitten.

I will ask the Clerk to read a letter from my former commanding officer, Edward L. Logan, who during the war was Col. Edward L. Logan, of my regiment, the One hundred and first Infantry of the Twenty-sixth Division, American Expeditionary Forces, and who until last month was major general commanding the new Twenty-sixth Division, and was retired with the rank of lieutenant general. Colonel Logan was my colonel during the war.

The Clerk read as follows:

OFFICES OF EDWARD L. LOGAN,
Boston, Mass., May 15, 1928.

Congressman WILLIAM P. CONNERY,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN CONNERY: My attention has been called to a statement made by Congressman HUDDLESTON, of Alabama, in which he has flippantly and doubtingly referred to your refusal to accept my nomination of you to go to the officers' school for a commission. This matter was so well known in the regiment—that I had on several occasions offered you this opportunity—that I had long since supposed it was a matter which could never be raised in question by anyone, and I was astounded upon reading the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to find that the offer many times made, and as often refused by you, should have been questioned during the course of the debate.

I know you have every reason to know how proud I am of the service which you rendered to the officers and men of the regiment during all the war, in the fearless and efficient performance of your duties as a soldier and as the color sergeant of the regiment, and I have several times since your return had occasion to state how generous you were with your time and with your talents in making happy the lot of the enlisted men who served with you in the One hundred and first Infantry.

There was never a time when nominations were made for the officers' school that I would not have been happy and proud to have nominated you, and the only reason that you did not accept these nominations when tendered to you was your most unselfish and generous desire to remain in intimate and patriotic service and comradeship with the enlisted men of the One hundred and first Infantry, with whom you had crossed the seas.

Indeed, after the armistice, at a meeting of the officers held in March, I quite recall stating to them, and in your presence, of this conspicuous unselfishness on your part, and you may be sure that you have always my affection and esteem, not only for the splendid service which you rendered as an enlisted man and color sergeant of the regiment but for this generous refusal of the honors which might easily have been yours.

I am sorry that the Congressman from Alabama is apparently unable to appreciate the patriotic viewpoint which you so splendidly maintained in subordinating your service and ambitions as an enlisted man rather than accepting the honors and emoluments of an officer.

You might, however, call to his attention the conspicuous examples rendered by a nephew of the president of Harvard College, James H. Lowell, a distainguished lawyer of our city here, who likewise refused this opportunity of promotion, and of the grandson of a great United States Senator of Vermont, Richard C. Evarts, also a distinguished Boston lawyer, who, too, declined.

I could cite further the unselfishness of Jimmie Loughlin, who, when offered an opportunity to receive a commission, said that he figured he could do very much better service for the cause by remaining an enlisted man in the headquarters company of the regiment.

I suggest that perhaps you might like to call the attention of Congressman HUDDLESTON of Alabama to these examples of self-sacrifice of New England soldiers, of which you and these other men are but examples.

With my kindest regards to you and best wishes, and with the hope that I can be of service to you at any time, I remain,

Affectionately yours,

EDWARD L. LOGAN.

[Applause.]

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, I had no desire whatever to have this letter read before the House for the purpose of self-praise or self-gratification, but I wanted the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON] to know that when I said I could have been an officer during the war, I spoke the truth.

I thank you, gentlemen. [Applause.]

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

Mr. MORIN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I am not going to object, but we have several bills that we would like to take up to-day. This is Calendar Wednesday and the Committee on Military Affairs is entitled to the day, but I shall not object to this request.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY] not only on his patriotic record but on the "swiftness" of his witness. He certainly is a fine witness, but he a little bit overswore himself when he testified that the gentleman was not alone, as I had thought he was, in having rejected a commission, and that there were two others who were equally patriotic. I should have expected he would say that the gentleman was the only one he had ever known who was so patriotic.

I do appreciate the patriotism and self-sacrifice of any man who chooses to serve in the ranks instead of as a commissioned officer. I have had experience as a private soldier and I know what the difference is, and I want to say that the man who has done this can not be overpraised.

I am sure my friend Mr. CONNERY did not misunderstand the friendly and jocular—not "flippant"—spirit in which I called attention to his patriotism. No other Member misunderstood and no intelligent person could have done so. If it were not that this witness is his witness, and of my respect for Mr. CONNERY, I should say that not only is he a voluble witness but is asinine to have so misunderstood me. [Applause.]

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. BERGER. Mr. Speaker, I have probably taken less time of the House than any one here and therefore I ask unanimous consent, in order that I may explain various bills that have been introduced, that I may have 45 minutes in which to address the House next Saturday.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that on next Saturday after the disposition of matters on the Speaker's table and following the special orders, he may be permitted to proceed for 45 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

BILLS REPORTED BY COMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURE

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, acting upon suggestions made, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks, by having printed in the RECORD, a brief résumé of bills reported by the House Committee on Agriculture in the nine years in which the Republicans have been in the majority, and of which I have had the honor to be chairman.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAUGEN. H. R. 7413, Public, No. 22, by Mr. HAUGEN, Sixty-ninth Congress, which required the marking of the net weight on wrapped hams and bacon, thus guaranteeing full weight to the consumer and obviating deception; also requiring the inspection and marking of horse meat shipped in interstate commerce, which brings horse meat under the meat inspection law and affords protection to the consumer; also amending the United States warehouse act, and extending the Weeks Act by providing appropriation to purchase forest lands under that act. Also one repealing the so-called daylight savings act which worked such inconvenience, hardship, and injustice to the farmers, and city people as well, which was vetoed by the President, and finally passed over the President's veto.

H. R. 7893, Public, No. 450, Sixty-sixth Congress, by Mr. HAUGEN, a most important amendment to the food control act, to permit collective bargaining by any cooperative association of farmers, dairymen, gardeners, or other producers of farm products, which relieved farmers from persecution and unwarranted prosecution so unjustly imposed upon them from coast to coast; relieving them from fighting lawsuits at great expense, to justify or defend their right to make collective sales; for instance, farmers in California and Chicago in making collective sales of milk, were arrested, put through the third degree, were tried and finally acquitted, and in Ohio men in good standing were taken out of their beds in the middle of the night and placed in jail, and, as stated by Mr. John Miller in his testimony, they were put in hospital wards reeking with vermin, and served food that they could not taste or touch. In January, 1918, officers of farm organizations were indicted, required to give bail at a cost of from $200 to $300 premium to the surety companies, and it cost them $15,000 to fight their way out of the trouble. What was true in that case was also true in others. So far as I know, in every instance, all were acquitted. Evidently the prosecution was not to prevent profiteering, but simply to persecute.

H. R. 8624, Public, No. 63, Sixty-sixth Congress, by Mr. HAUGEN, the District of Columbia rent act, establishing a rent commission to regulate rents in the District of Columbia, to hear complaints, and to adjust controversies, thus saving the tenants from the clutches of the profiteers.

H. R. 444, Public, No. 109, by Mr. HAUGEN, Sixty-sixth Congress, dealing with the supply and price of sugar. Had the President availed himself of the opportunity to buy the Cuban sugar crop with the money and organization made available and at his command at the price offered, he would have saved the consumer from paying the exorbitant prices exacted. We would have had not only an ample supply of sugar but sugar at one-half the price the consumers were compelled to pay.

It has reported and passed numerous bills extending loans to aid farmers and for purchase of seed in drought and storm stricken sections.

It has reported and passed numerous bills authorizing the acquisition of experiment stations.

H. R. 12272, Public, No. 234, Sixty-sixth Congress, by Mr. HAUGEN, the agricultural appropriation bill for 1921, reported by the committee, eliminated and reduced many useless appropriations, while on the other hand it increased many items of importance under which valuable work is being done by the department. As a whole, it carried a reduction of $2,185,327 under the bill of 1920.

The committee reported out the cold storage bill (H. R. 9521), Sixty-sixth Congress, by Mr. HAUGEN, which was passed by the House, and which limited the time foods could be held in cold storage to one year, also regulating the sanitary conditions of cold-storage warehouses, and requiring report on all foods held in cold storage.

Also H. R. 10311, Sixty-sixth Congress, by Mr. HAUGEN. To prevent the use of slack-filled packages, which has passed the House three times. A bill to protect the consumers against the use of containers misleading the consumers by exacting from them prices based on appearance rather than the true quantity, also to protect the manufacturers and dealers against unfair competition from the trade dealing in slack-filled packages.

Also H. R. 14667, Sixty-sixth Congress, reported out. To regulate grain exchanges, to require grain exchanges to admit to membership on reasonable terms cooperative societies and declare them to be public markets subject to public regulation.

Also H. R. 8086, Public, No. 513, Sixty-seventh Congress. To prohibit the shipment of filled milk in interstate and foreign commerce, stop the practice of mixing condensed skimmed milk and coconut oil or other fats or oils in imitation or semblance of milk, cream, or skimmed milk, thereby protecting the producers and consumers from the purchase of filled milk very often upon gross misrepresentation as to its food qualities.

Also H. R. 7401, by Mr. STEVENSON, Sixty-seventh Congress. Wheat grades, prescribing standards and grades for spring wheat, so that great losses by the farmers due to the practice of buying on grade at elevators and terminal markets where the grading was usually below the real milling value, and to determine the condition and quality of the commodity.

Also H. R. 11396, Public, No. 293, by Mr. HAUGEN, Sixty-seventh Congress. To regulate foreign commerce in the importation into the United States of honeybees to prevent the importation of diseased bees from foreign countries, thereby protecting an industry in this country amounting to millions of dollars per year.

Also H. R. 11843, Public, No. 331, by Mr. Tincher, Sixty-seventh Congress. Grain futures act, for prevention and removal of obstructions and burdens upon interstate commerce in grain by regulating transactions on grain-future exchanges, thereby minimizing speculation, manipulation, and control of prices of farm products by transactions on the exchanges.

H. R. 12053, Public, No. 519, by Mr. HAUGEN, Sixty-seventh Congress. A bill to define butter, and to provide standards therefor. Sets up a single standard of butter for the enforcement of the food and drugs act. The definition and standard set is as follows: "Butter" shall be understood to mean the food product usually known as butter and which is made exclusively from milk or cream, or both, with or without common salt, and with or without additional coloring matter, and containing not less than 80 per cent by weight of milk fat.

H. R. 14302, Public, No. 539, by Mr. FULMER, Sixty-seventh Congress. Establishes and provides for the use of official cotton standards, to prevent deception, and provides for proper application of the standards set, improves conditions and methods of classification in the buying and selling of cotton, so that commercial risks are minimized.

H. R. 13352, by Mr. Little, Sixty-seventh Congress, reported by committee. Authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to purchase, store, and sell wheat and secure and maintain to the producer a reasonable price for wheat, and to the consumer a reasonable price for bread, and to stabilize wheat values, which would result in the farmer getting at least the cost of production and the consumer secure his bread at a reasonable price.

H. R. 6320, Public, No. 51, by Mr. HAUGEN, Sixty-seventh Congress, the packers and stockyards act. To regulate interstate and foreign commerce in livestock, livestock products, poultry, poultry products, and eggs, and for other purposes; to place under Government regulation and supervision of the Secretary of Agriculture, by giving exclusive jurisdiction over the stockyards as well as the packers, to encourage, to protect, to build up worthy and legitimate enterprise and activities in connection with the great packing industry, and thus safeguard the interests of the public and all elements of the packing industry from producer to consumer; to insure proper rates for the care of cattle at the stockyards and for feed furnished and of minor injustices caused shippers and producers. The Secretary is empowered to subpœna, conduct hearings, cause the production of books, papers, and documentary evidence, require attendance of witnesses to prevent packers and stockyards and all persons dealing on the stockyards from engaging in unfair, unjustly discriminatory practices or devices; to regulate and prescribe practices in stockyards to prevent abuses, award damages in redress; to regulate and prescribe rates, fees, and charges for services, including fees of commission men, yardage, feeding, watering, weighing, and handling livestock; to prescribe manner and form for keeping books and accounts; and provides penalties ranging from $500 to $10,000, or imprisonment of not less than six months nor more than five years, or both, and provides for the registration of all persons handling or carrying on business of a market agency or dealer at stockyards, and provides fines for failure so to do; provides penalties for violation of regulations relative to fees, rates, or other charges, and provides for court review of the Secretary's findings. Undoubtedly a most far-reaching measure, and extends further than any previous law into the regulation of private business, with the exception of the war emergency measures and possibly the interstate commerce act.

H. R. 5791, Public, No. 89, by Mr. HAUGEN, Sixty-eighth Congress. A bill to free certain Southern States from the cattle tick.

H. R. 5946, Public, No. 87, by Mr. HAUGEN, Sixty-eighth Congress. A bill for the protection of wild game. The bill is to protect the wild-game refuges and extend the protection afforded wild bird life on Government reservations to wild game, such as buffalo, elk, and other big-game animals.

H. R. 7111, by Mr. KETCHAM, reported out of committee and passed the House. A bill to provide American agriculture by making more extensively available and expanding the service rendered by the Department of Agriculture in gathering and disseminating information regarding agricultural production, supply, and demand in foreign countries, and promoting sale of farm products abroad; in other words, to give to the farmer all the information possible, not only with regard to agricultural production and demand at home, but foreign production and demand, which so largely affects the price received for his products.

H. R. 7113, Public, No. 156, by Mr. HAUGEN, Sixty-eighth Congress. A bill to establish a dairy bureau in the Department of Agriculture for research, investigation, and dissemination of information relating to the dairy industry, and regulatory advice regarding the sale of dairy products.

H. R. 4088, Public, No. 268, Sixty-eighth Congress. A bill to establish the upper Mississippi wild life and fish refuge, comprising 300 miles of bottom lands, along the upper Mississippi, as a breeding place for migratory birds, wild birds, game animals, fur-bearing animals, and for the conservation of wild flowers and aquatic plants. The bill is a conservation measure of great interest in the preservation of wild life of all kinds and preserves the greatest natural fish-spawning regions in the United States.

H. J. Res. 127, Public Resolution 127, by Mr. HAUGEN, Sixty-eighth Congress. Transfers to the Department of Agriculture control of reindeer in Alaska, which have become the chief source of food supply.

H. R. 8981, by Mr. BRAND, Sixty-eighth Congress. Reported out of committee a bill to establish standard weights for loaves of bread, and to prevent fraud in respect thereto, to prevent contamination thereof, to protect the consumers of bread from short-weight loaves.

S. 4224, Public, No. 565, by Mr. Lineberger. For the protection of forest lands, for reforestation of denuded lands, for the extension of national forests in order to promote the continued production of timber on lands suitable therefor.

H. R. 7893, Public, No. 450, by Mr. HAUGEN, Sixty-ninth Congress. Establishes a division of cooperative marketing in the Department of Agriculture, which division, through research, educational, and service work, renders assistance to cooperative associations through the dissemination of crop and market information.

H. R. 7818, Public, No. 180, by Mr. HAUGEN, Sixty-ninth Congress. A bill amending the packers and stockyards act, so that any State, where the weighing of livestock at a stockyard is conducted by a duly authorized agency of the State, such department or agency may register as a market agency with the Secretary of Agriculture, and thereby become amenable to the requirements of the packers and stockyards act of 1921, which makes it possible for the department to control the operations of loading services at the stockyards in precisely the same way as control of operations of other market agencies in stockyards.

H. R. 271, by Mr. WOODRUFF, Sixty-ninth Congress, passed Senate and House. Making appropriations for carrying out the Weeks Act, for the protection of watersheds of navigable streams, and increases the act to cover cut-over and denuded lands in the program of reforestation under the Weeks Act.

H. R. 3890, Public, No. 799, by Mr. LUCE, Sixty-ninth Congress. Establishes a national arboretum, which is of special benefit to the agricultural interests, horticulture, and forestry, as the arboretum is to maintain a permanent living collection of trees and plants for the purpose of scientific research and education.

S. J. Res. 78, Public Resolution No. 14, by Mr. HAUGEN, Sixty-ninth Congress. Amends the plant quarantine act to allow the States to quarantine against shipment therein or through the States of plants or plant products and other articles found to be diseased or infected.

H. R. 11768, Public, No. 625, Sixty-ninth Congress. To regulate the importation of milk and cream into the United States for the purpose of promoting the dairy industry in the United States and protect the public health. The bill is to protect the health of the consumer and to prevent poor milk from outside, lowering the health standards which our farmers have been forced to meet over a long period of struggle on the part of the health authorities.

H. R. 10510, Public, No. 712, by Mr. HARE, Sixty-ninth Congress. A bill to prevent the destruction or dumping without good and sufficient cause of farm products by commission merchants and others, to require them to properly and correctly account for all farm products. The bill prevents commission merchants and others from destroying, abandoning, or dumping fruits, vegetables, or other perishable farm products, and to prevent commission merchants and others receiving such products on consignment from making fraudulent report to the shipper concerning the handling, condition, quality, quantity, sale, or disposition of the products.

H. R. 15649, Public, No. 594, by Mr. PURNELL, Sixty-ninth Congress. A bill to provide for the eradication or control of the European corn borer. The bill made appropriations available for the eradication of the corn borer, considered a serious pest and menace to the Corn Belt of the United States.

H. R. 9396, Public, No. 802, Sixty-ninth Congress. A bill to insure farmers' cooperative associations, comprised of producers, the right to own seats on boards of trade and exchanges, and thereby enjoy the benefits of economical and beneficial marketing. The bill extends to all boards of trade upon which agricultural products are sold, the same regulatory requirements respecting farmers' cooperative associations that is applied by the grain futures act.

H. R. 16470, by Mr. O'CONNOR, Public, No. 657, Sixty-ninth Congress. Amends United States cotton futures act. A bill to place the three cotton futures markets in the United States on the same basis in settlement of their contracts.

H. R. 405, by Mr. GARBER, Public, No. 278, Seventieth Congress. Providing for horticultural experiment and demonstration work in the southern Great Plains area, and contemplates a type of work to meet the need where families coming into the high plains to live from more eastern regions waste time, effort, and money in an effort to grow fruit and shade trees, and the establishment of effective shelter belts, so that fruits and vegetables may be raised to meet the current needs and to advantage.

H. R. 484, by Mr. HAUGEN, Public, No. 327, Seventieth Congress. To amend section 10 of the plant quarantine act, which gives authority to stop in movement quarantined articles which are pest carriers. Such movement in violation of plant quarantines is usually in ignorance of the restrictions, but involves the greatest danger of long-distance spread of pests. The amendment gives power to stop, inspect or search, and to seize, destroy, or otherwise dispose of articles moving interstate in violation of plant quarantines or entering the country in violation of the act or quarantines thereunder. The act provided for punishment, but punishment is of little value without this amendment, as it is of importance to dispose of or destroy infected commodities to prevent the spread.

H. R. 9495, by Mr. KETCHAM, Seventieth Congress. To provide for the further development of agricultural extension work between the agricultural colleges in the several States receiving the benefits of prior acts. The bill provides for the further development of cooperative extension work in agricultural and home economics with men, women, boys, and girls, inaugurated under the Smith-Lever Act, passed May 8, 1914. The bill provides funds for enlarging the extension service, will build up the efficiency of farming, and lower the cost of production. It will encourage cooperation, the growing of high-quality products, and the marketing of the same in an efficient manner. It aids considerably in providing further education of farm boys and girls.

H. R. 53, by Mr. GILBERT, Seventieth Congress, passed House March 7, 1928. To provide for the collection and publication of statistics of tobacco by the Department of Agriculture. The purpose of the bill is to make available to farmers, cooperative associations, and the tobacco trade generally more definite information as to the character and quantity of unmanufactured tobacco held by dealers and manufacturers. Tobacco is ordinarily carried over for a period of from two to four years in order to age properly and the lack of accurate statistics of stocks thus accumulated has an unfavorable influence on the market. Without definite information as to these stocks it is difficult, if not impossible, for tobacco farmers to regulate their planting.

H. R. 487, by Mr. HAUGEN, Seventieth Congress, passed House March 14, 1928. To amend an act entitled "An act for preventing the manufacture, sale, or transportation of adulterated or misbranded or poisonous or deleterious foods, drugs, medicines, and liquors, and for regulating traffic therein." See H. R. 10311.
